The publisher recommends to the thousands of our friends that he will send the paper from date to January next, five months, on receipt of fifty cents, or twenty cents of postage stamps. This is done in order to secure many subscribers, and feeling assured that with a little effort on the part of our patrons, thousands of persons can be induced to take the paper on this trial offer, many of whom will become permanent subscribers. Will they every one of them help us in this matter? There is no other investment that will so pay the actual outlay as this. Send other lists hear from you as early as possible.

THE ADVOCATE FREE.

To any person sending us four yearly subscribers who is not in arrears will be sent free for the year. Sample copies will be mailed to parties when solicited by our patrons, by inserting their address. Address, Advocate, New Orleans, or any of the publishers.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS, of the staff of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, left Wednesday evening, for the West and East on business connected with the ADVOCATE. We bespeak for him the courtesy all Methodists so liberally extended and cheerfully and which we have not forgotten.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—Fruit Jars. Mason pints, $ 5 quarts, $1 2½, two quart, $1 50 per dozen; American tin, pints 85 cts., quarts $1 10. Equal to any in the market. Send for price list. 19

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of C. C. Wetherbee's establishment. The result is well known to this paper for it receives an opportunity seldom found at so cheap a rate—first class, having reduced its rates for board to $2 per day.

THE attention of schools and the Clerical profession is directed to the card of the proprietors of the New Yorker in Regular Church Announcement column. It is a valuable first to the profession, and the name of its publisher, D. D. Lodge & Co., of Philadelphia, are but well known to require extended editorial notice. Any of their publications, we have no doubt, will take pleasure in showing it to interested parties when desired. They can be ordered from Lathrop & Wilkins, New Orleans, or direct from the publishers.

KENANEE WINTERGREEN.—For purifying the teeth, etc., use this popular wintergreen. See the card on the 4th page. It is considered to be the best article in use, and those preparing a reliable and, at the same time economical article should try one from the Kenanee Manufacturing Company, 1 Broadway, New York. They invariably take the premium wherever exhibited. Agents wanted.

PRINTED MATERIALS.—Should any of our readers want anything in the printing line, there is but little use for them to deal with than Benjamin F. Woods & Co., 41 Federal street, Boston. This firm has been in existence for many years, and we have dealt with them and found them honorable and straightforward gentlemen. There is no one to learn in Boston of their ability. Last, but not least, they do printing materials and presses. Send and get their catalogue.

OLD AND VALUABLE REMEDY.—Our readers are referred to the advertisement, on this page, of the well known firm of Messrs. Ayer & Co., of Lowell, Mass., of the Cherry Pectoral. Messrs. Ayer & Co. are one of the most enterprising firms in the country, and their Cherry Pectoral, for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchitis, croup, whooping cough, etc., is considered by many physicians in the country the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Their Cherry Pectoral is also highly recommended in the Church Guardian, a safe and reliable substitute for wine, etc. As a tonic for fever and ague, this great medicine has also a wide reputation. Those who have used it for their losses to testify to its efficacy, and it is said to be the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. COLUMBIA BICYCLE.—The practicability of the modern bicycle is now proved beyond a doubt, large numbers of them are now in use in the United States. In Boston alone there are hundreds to be seen daily in the streets, and the demand is increasing very rapidly. The Messrs. Pope & Co. have been manufacturing the "Columbia" for a year, and it has proved a thoroughly reliable machine, equal to any English or cycle, and superior to most of them in point of finish. In addition to the yet experience of the factory, a specialty has been made of the "Columbia" light roadster, which is of great practical utility as well as rational means of amusement. A ride can be pleasure, journey of one hundred miles in a day as easily as one can walk thirty-five miles, with less fatigue. Our readers in the South should correspond with the Pope Manufacturing Company, Boston, Mass., for particulars.

ELLIS' SPAVIN CURE.—Those who are fortunate enough to own a good horse should be particular that the disease and suffer from any of those ailments, such as spavin, splint, curb, ringbone enlargements, etc., and to provide against this a bottle of Ellis' spavin cure should always be kept on hand, as it is considered by those who have used it on their horses to be the greatest remedy that will speak the words and appear before the public. In fact, nearly all the veterinary surgeons in and around Boston use it in their practice and would touch any other. The writer of this can testify to its efficacy, and while in the office numbers were coming and going all the time, getting information from him respecting this valuable preparation. The matter has been running in the paper for twenty years, and during all that time he never failed to perform a cure. It is for sale by druggists, and can be had from all druggists. The Messrs. Billings, Clapp & Co. are gentlemen of the highest standing in Boston, and their medicines are entitled to the confidence of those who are troubled with these complaints.

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.—The representative of the ADVOCATE, on his recent visit to Boston, paid a call to this old and popular institution, which is located at the Music Hall. Mr. White, the genial representative of Mr. Tourjee, the director of the conservatory, took particular pains in explaining to him everything as to the instruction of the pupils, etc. It is more than a quarter of a century since the conservatory was inaugurated. Beginning in a comparatively small way, as a school of music, it gradually developed into a musical institute, and in the year 1867 expanded into a full grown and well appointed conservatory, on the same basis and offering the same advantages as those which have existed in Europe for three hundred years. Over twenty thousand pupils have received their musical education from the famous director, and many of them are prominent members of the musical profession. No other city in the country offers as many inducements to the musical student. The opportunities for general culture are so well known as to hardly need enumeration. Our readers throughout the South, who are thinking of giving their daughters a musical education, are reminded that this is the finest and most complete of its kind in the world. The Board of Instruction are selected with the greatest care, so that nothing is left undone to insure the pupil a first class musical instruction. Read the advertisement, and write for particulars.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, Indigestion, depression of spirits and general debility in their various forms, also as a preventive against Fever, and Ague, and other Intermittent Fevers, the "Peruvian Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists is the best tonic, and as a tonic for gentlemen suffering from fever or other sickness it has no equal.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

AFTER you have tried nearly everything to get cured of Chronic Chills and Fever or Fever and Ague in vain, we would advise you to try Dr. F. Wilson's Anti Periodic or Fever and Ague Cure. It is not relevant to take pill, it contains no quinine and never fails to cure. Directions are printed on the inside wrapper of each box. Use and it is indorsed by the most eminent physicians. For sale by all druggists.

Farm, Garden and Household.

CHURNING. The general principles governing this simple act of farm life, is generally speaking, lost sight of under-hood, some thinking and even arguing that the cream must be aggravated over an length of time, which butter is the result, thinking that science has failed to do with it and that it is the even, so wrapt in mystery that it is past finding out. This, when butter fails to "come" in the time specified time, warm water, saleratus, cold water, hard butter, salt and a great variety of things are added, then it so happens that home-made separation follows. The butter-maker often thinks that if she has hit upon a plan by which the coming of butter can be perceptibly hastened it did any time and a very variegated lot of butter often results.

Let us look at the matter in the light of science, and we shall see that there is nothing so very mysterious about the matter after all. The milk globules are nothing more or less than the oil or butter confined in a membranous covering, and if we bring a microscope to bear upon them we will see them floating around so gaily in the milk.

The object there is but one to be accomplished in churning, is to relieve them of the coverings and without breaking them, cause them to coalesce and form an impact mass, and the more perfect this is done the better is the quality, and the greater the quantity of the butter produced. It is plainly, then, a matter of the greatest importance that a churn be used that will not disturb the granules of fat and that they remain in a solid condition. Although we do not wish to speak derogatorily or in praise of any churn whatever, still if a prime article of butter, and a large amount, is desired motion and friction should never be combined, but motion and pressure instead, and the temperature of the entire mass, should at the same time, be sufficiently high. Right here is a little point in fact that will always be found correct. The higher the temperature of the cream, the quicker butter will come, but good butter and quick churning, seldom if ever go together.

Manufacturers who put sil-ver salted butter are not content with producing a solid mass of butter-al thereby, but they keep the texture of "grain" in view, for they well know that the great secret of high prices rests in having, under the existing atmospheric temperature of seventy degrees, F., and strive to have the whole mass acted upon alike by the repeated action of no or less pressure.

When motion and friction are used, only such portions of the cream as need upon it comes in contact with the instrument. Friction wears off the particles and does its work unevenly. The large globules meet with the most friction and hence their pellicles are worn off first, these gather into lumps before the small ones become churned. If the churning is protracted until the smaller ones come the larger ones become over-churned and assume a greasy appearance from excessive friction.

Again, hot or churn it at too high temperature will have much the same appearance from much working will also bring about the same results, and on the other hand, pressure operates upon large and small globules nearly alike, and those of different sizes come nearer together and amalgamate more perfectly, producing more butter and of a better quality.

Finally, great care must be taken not to make too long a jump, and get way over into the other extreme as when churned at a low temperature, it will be long in coming, and the product too hard. In all these cases the texture and the grain of the butter is spoiled, in fact the case it approaches the condition of pure fat, in the latter case, it being churned too much the butter resembles grease. Many one can tell the difference they are wise. So then, we do not wish the manufacturers of oleomargarine to meet us in market in succession with our own, and we must not only send a prime article to market but make nothing else. Journal of Agriculture.

SHEARING LAMBS. A correspondent of the Country Gentleman writes: "I have been breeding for several years past a grade sheep a cross between the Southdown and Cotswold for the Cincinnati market. Having the lambs to come early in the spring, their wool grows to be large or four inches long before shearing time, and having noticed, by leaving this on that it grew to be very long during the summer months, and they would lie in the shade and pant on account of the excess of wool, while their dams were in grazing, I came to the conclusion to try an experiment, by shearing some, and leaving some unshorn, to see if there would be any difference when spring came. In the spring of 1876 I sheared two, and left the rest from which I received a little over one pound per head, and sold it at twenty-six cents a pound. Well, the result was simply wonderful. Those two that I sheared came up in the fall and looked like my yearlings. They were fat, and while their wool was not quite so long as the rest, it was much thicker, and seemed to grow much faster during the winter than those I did not shear. They stood the winter much better, and by shearing time in 1877, they sheared more wool being very near as long as the others and much thicker, and were much larger and better every way. I was simply surprised. The experiment induced me to try again in 1877, by shearing one half of my flock of lambs, as the result was about the same, and the next spring (1878) I sheared all but two, they being thoroughbred Cotswold rams, and thinking that by leaving the wool on I could sell them together to the fall-ing breeders, but found this to be a mistake, for in the fall I showed these two at the fair, and also some of those that I had sheared, with some that had just been brought from California purpose to show they had been sheared either, and the result was that those that had not been sheared were given the first premium."

BALKY HORSES. A great many horses are made balky by overloading when young, and working too long; pulling a few light loads at first, so as to train the horse to draw and nothing more and when put to heavier work always bear in mind, for two years, at least, that it is a young horse. It is not always the best way to break a young horse along side of an old one; generally the young horse is quicker than the old one and will frequently try to start the whole load along and is discouraged because the old horse gets lazy and will not draw. Horses ought not to be matched as much as to size and color as to temperament. A spirited and slow horse ought never to be worked together. Some they are both are very likely to be spoiled. A great many horses are spoiled by being loaded as heavily when the roads are bad as they do good; the result of the roads is right always to be considered. Never let a horse stand in a soft place with his hind feet when loading if it can be avoided. The hind quarters are a certain element and by which more start the load than the forequarters; the ground is the mechanical if it is soft the feet sink in the horse gives way; this discourages the horse and is afraid; and loses confidence. Use kindness with balky horses. The horse must be encouraged, never discouraged. I have used a whip when driving in carriage or loaded wagon; the result is sufficient. Do not talk to your horse to never gives another to apply. If you do you are likely to have your horse balk when the occasion for it arises. The horse is a study, and the rule is for treating one will not apply to another without modification. It is also necessary that the horse should understand his driver as well as the driver should understand him, but remember you cannot change the disposition of a horse; kind treatment is the best antidote which this fault you may give an opportunity for improvement.

FEEDING TAILLESS'S GOOD. Healthy trees, says an exchange, are quite the exception. Poor, ruined, stunted, half-dead, dying trees are the rule. To a great part of the trees are somewhat better, but even in many such the trees are the weakest features, and not a few the whole are connected with the wrecks of worthless trees rather than furnished with fruit bearing trees in full health and beauty. This is generally admitted, and, indeed, can not be denied; but then, as the old trees produce a few fruits, often of excellent quality, they are allowed to live on from year to year, too often getting from bad to worse. Now, were there no remedy but actual uprooting and replanting there might, indeed, be some fair and feasible excuse for this state of things. There is a simple remedy at hand, within reach of every possessor of the smallest garden. The majority of the trees above described are the victims of starvation. They find nothing to feed upon in the soil, and consequently they become so excessively weak that disease follows on the heels of weakness, and thus they get worse, until death comes and snatches them away. But were they only strengthened in time these same poor trees might become models of health and fertility, and nothing is easier than to strengthen fruit trees, and this is just the very season to do it. All that is need is to go to the farm yard and collect a cart or barrow load or two—according to the number of trees grown—of half decomposed manure, and spread it over the surface of the roots, about two or three inches thick, and leave it there for the Winter and the Summer also, if possible. Every shower will wash a fruitful of food out of the manure, and send it down to feed and strengthen the banished roots; and the latter, finding there is something good on the surface, will hasten up to feed upon it more directly. Not only will existing roots thus be strengthened, but their number will be greatly multiplied. Those, again, finding good supplies of food, will produce other and better roots, which will speedily form a new and better top, and a renovated tree will follow as a natural result of surface feeding or mulching. The surface is, in fact, the only safe place to feed fruit trees with manure. The old cultivators tried mixing the dung with the soil and failed; and modern growers, in their excessive reaction against them borders, have rushed to the opposite extreme of carting their trees altogether, with what results are but too apparent in so many gardens.

A farmer has used the following bone compost for twenty years with the best results: Take one ton of dried bone the finer the better, one fourth of an ox-cart load of good friable soil free from sand and stones, and no matter how wet place a layer of soil and a layer of bone dust of equal thickness upon each other (soil at the bottom) on a tight under cover, having a bushel or two of soil to cover the heap. In forty-eight hours it will be so hot as to hold your hand in. Let it remain to cool, which will begin in a week or ten days. Then shovel over the heap, thoroughly mixing bone and soil. In a day or two it will heat again. Let it remain until it cools, then throw it over in the same manner as before. Throw over every ten days until all moist fire in the heap is exhausted and dogs not ferment.

EARLY MELONS.—Gardeners generally find it difficult to get early melons as they would like. It is the reason that they will not bear transplanting. I have tried a way by which they can be started early and transplanted when wanted. Save all the pasteboard collar boxes, and fill them with the best soil. Any kind of boxes will do; they can be made of wood with bottoms tacked on. After warming the soil, plant the seeds about five to the box. They can now be sunk in the hot bed, or if you do not have one, they can be kept in the house by the stove. When the young plants are large enough they can be transplanted. After making the ground mellow, make a hole the size of the box; then slip out the bottom, and the earth, with the plants, will slip through without being disturbed. This plan will do for other plants beside melons, as cucumbers, etc., the tender egg plant, and some varieties of flowers. By starting plants early in this way, several weeks can be gained.

CENTRE OF THE UNIVERSE.—The search for a centre, about which the universe of countless millions of stars composing the galactic system may revolve, has tempted many investigators, but it cannot be said as yet to have proved altogether successful. Madler calculations from the proper motions of stars in different parts of the heavens sought to locate it among the Pleiades; but some later astronomers have pointed to the Sword of Perseus; Mr. Maxwell Hall has just declined, and informed the Astronomical Society of England, that the universe turns about the South Elbow of Andromeda. The proof advanced is always incomplete, resting on assumptions not generally admitted; and when we remember that the gravitative force exerted by the fixed stars on one another is so small that in keeping the nearest of them from falling to the sun, supposing no counterbalancing attractions, an angular velocity of but one second of arc in eighty years is needed; that the proper motions to be explained are often far larger than this; that the distance of the attracting centre must be many times that of the nearest fixed star; and that the heavens give no sign of any preponderant body or group of bodies to which we may ascribe the enormous attractive power necessary to control these motions—the rashness of many astronomers as to the universal centre seems excusable.—Henry Fairchar.

HEIGHT OF STORMS.—Professor Loomis, in his investigations of the phenomena of storms, has ascertained that atmospheric disturbances during storms do not generally extend more than about a mile above the surface as they pass over New England. From observations made in the same week as at Portland, simultaneously with observations at the summit of Mount Washington, it is found that during the passage of storms the general system of our prevailing winds does not vary materially in instances extended to a height of six thousand feet. The more violent the storm, however, the greater is the height attained by the disturbance. Another point of interest is that the disturbance on the approach of a storm is felt at the surface sooner than at considerable elevations. Professor Loomis thinks, when during the progress of an area of low pressure the system of ascending winds reaches the summit of Mount Washington, the change of wind to the eastward usually begins at the surface stations eleven hours sooner than it does on the summit of Mount Washington." It thus appears that only in the lower portions of the atmosphere do the great storm-movements occur, and they are confined to near the earth's surface.

EXTINCT RACES OF ANIMALS.—The animal remains found in the Rocky Mountains show the gigantic size of the monsters of prehistoric ages. The backbone of one animal is three and a half feet wide, and implies a neck full seven feet in length. The proportions would be sixty feet long. The shape of his head, together with a bill without teeth and expanded nostrils, all seem to indicate a habitat in the waters. Full seventy-five bones and fragments of this animal have been found. Another animal, embedded in a dark matter of rock which was removed with difficulty after much blasting, was fifty feet long. Such were some of the monsters that once roved the waters and trod the Rocky Mountains. They were reptiles, and many of their kinds and species were the same as the lizards of to-day, but regarding the latter it must be remembered that the former were of a gigantic size. Another animal, of which the remains were found in the Rocky Mountains, was the rhinoceros. Its skull is three feet long, with a jaw of proportionate size. Remains of the camel, horse, and elephant have also been found. What causes one class of reptiles must have died, may be imagined. We have seen the skeleton of a crocodile as the unburied reptile, with eight bones measuring nine feet, and probably twenty-five feet high.

Mr. Gentile, a maker of wax images in New York, has constructed what is claimed to be the largest globe in the world, showing the ranges of mountains, water percolations of the surface, and the earth's relief now in existence. Its diameter is nine feet and about nine inches, the scale being one to a thousand. The globe is made of wood. The relief is formed by wax. Mr. Gentile has been two years in perfecting his globe, and Guot, Arrowsmith, Keith, and other geographers have duly bestowed attention thereon.

The following has been published as a new method for staining wood so that the color may be pleasing and permanent under exposure to light and air: A strong solution of permanganate of potash is applied to the surface to about five minutes. The wood is then carefully washed and dried, and afterward polished in the usual way.

Dr. T. L. Phipson says that the purer a water is the better it will dissolve lead, and that even a good spring-water has been spoiled by storing in lead cisterns, being supplied by lead pipes, or passed through a lead pump. Soaps or other protective coatings should not be neglected at the joints with red lead as is usually done.

An important find of bronze coins, varying in several hundred gold and silver pieces, has been made in the neighborhood of Zurich. They date from the first part of the second century, the reign of Trajan. Whose effigies they bear being Adrian, Antoninus Pius, Verus, and Commodus.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic, and other poisonous minerals form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, the moment they leave the malarial soil their powerful drug poisons the system, producing quinism, deafness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, nor anything else that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, also, is its certainty to cure, in that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, Ayer's Ague Cure, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

CAN'T PREACH GOOD;

No man can do a good job of work, preach a good sermon, try a law suit well, doctor a patient or write a good article when he feels miserable and dull, with sluggish brain and unsteady nerves, and none should make the attempt in such a condition when it can be so easily and cheaply removed by a little Hop Bitters. See "Truths" and "Proverbs," other column.—Adv.

Two darkies were vaunting their courage. "I isn't 'feared o' nothin'." I isn't," said one. "Dan, Sam, I reckon you isn't 'feared to loan me a dollar." "No, Julius, I isn't 'feared to loan you a dollar but I does hate to part wid an ole fren' forebber."—Knoxville Tribune.

A beautiful illustration of the charity which "begins at home and goes abroad" is afforded by the will of the late Mr. William Sloane, of New York. Mr. Sloane was a successful merchant, who did not hesitate to attribute a considerable share of his success to the efficient help of his employees. In acknowledgment of their service, he has bequeathed to them $33,500, in sums varying from $1,000 to $3,000, according to the number of years they have respectively been with the firm. Mr. Sloane's attachment to his church did not allow him to forget its interests. How much his unostentatious benevolence has contributed to them in the past no one probably will ever learn. By his will, however, he distributes $140,000, chiefly among the Presbyterian Boards—the Foreign and Domestic Missions each receiving $30,000—and leaves to his pastor, the Rev. Dr. John Hall, the sum of $20,000.

TUTT'S PILLS

A distinguished physician of New York says: "It is astonishing how universally Dr. Tutt's Pills are used. In my daily rounds, I hear of them not only among the poor, but their virtues are heralded from the mansions of the wealthy and refined. Knowing the inventor from his long connection with the medical profession, I have great confidence in their curative; and of late have often prescribed them with the happiest results in cases where I desired to make a decided impression on the liver."

CHINESE CONVERTS.—Are Christians won from heathenism earnest, faithful, spiritual Christians, such as are found in the churches at home? At the London Conference on Missions the Rev. W. Fleming Stevenson answered this question, so far as China is concerned, from observations made by himself. He first showed how little Chinamen can gain by becoming Christians. At best, if they become helpers, they can only receive a very small salary, hardly sufficient to keep them alive; while, on the other hand, they lose the companionship of their friends and become outcasts, and have difficulties in their business which they never had before. In a worldly point of view they are losers, rather than gainers, in becoming Christians. But, says Mr. Stevenson, they take all this joyfully, and freely hazard their lives for the gospel. "They can cut off our heads," remarked some Chinese Christians to Mr. Stevenson; "but they cannot behead Christ." There are many noble women among the converts. One who went to a missionary hospital became a convert while an inmate. When she left, she found her husband's home closed to her. For some years she was shut out; but she did not despair nor give up her religion. Finally she induced her husband to accept the gospel, then her son, and others of her relatives, until eleven in all were converted. In conclusion, Mr. Stevenson says: "I have found nowhere in Christian lands men and women of a higher type than I met in China—of a finer spiritual experience, of a higher spiritual tone, or a nobler spiritual life. Where missions show such fruit, they are beyond the impeachment of producing shallow and transitory impressions; and I came away with the conviction that there are in the native churches in China not only the elements of stability, but of that steadfast and irresistible resolution that will carry over the whole empire to the new faith."

A rurallist seated himself at a restaurant table yesterday and began upon the Bill of fare. After keeping these waiters nearly an hour employed in bringing dishes to him he called one of them to him, heaved a sigh and whispered as he spread the bill of fare before him, and pointed with his finger: "Mister, I've et to thar, and it"—moving his finger down to the bottom of the page—"but it aint agin the rule I'd like to skip from that to that."—Indianapolis News.

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in New Orleans who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the Hair germ never dies while the exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5; $1 to accompany the order and balance to be paid when machine is delivered.

TESTIMONIALS FROM WELL-KNOWN PERSONS.

From Mrs. General Sherman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 21, 1870.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very much pleased with the Piano you made for me. It is really a fine instrument in every respect and is admired by all who have seen and heard it, for its fine tone, delicacy of touch, and beauty of finish. Many good judges and distinguished persons have called since it has been in our parlor, and all pronounce it a fine instrument. We cursel ves are charmed with it. I shall most certainly recommend it to my friends who may wish to purchase.

I am, very truly and respectfully yours,
ELLEN H. E. SHERMAN,
215 I Street.

St. James, December 27, 1873.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very happy to be able to rank your Pianos as one of the very first I have had and saw. I think the touch and brilliancy of tone required to perform in the great pieces of modern and classical masters are equal to any Piano made in this country. Hoping that your Pianos will also stand our climate as well as any other manufactured at the North, I shall with much pleasure recommend them wherever I have an opportunity. Very respectfully yours,

ANTHONY WINNER,
Professor of Music, St. Mary Jefferson College, St. James, La. (Convent, P. O.)

From St. Vincent's Priory, Beatty, P. O., Westmoreland County, Pa.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—The two Pianos have safely arrived, and on their first day of being here have reached a position of honor much above that for which they were originally intended. For, notwithstanding their humble walnut) dress, they have been put into the music alcoves of rich rosewood cases had yielded them their place. This, instead of serving the pupils at their practice, they will be used by the professors at music lessons and occasional performances.

From this it is evident that the instrument you sent on did not only meet, but by far surpass, my expectations. I find their tone rich and melodious, their action precise in degree, not, as I know of, surpassed. Very respectfully yours,

IGNATIUS TRUEB, D. S. H.,
Director of Music.

RULES OF ANGELS.

BY BRET HARTE.

Below the pearl, whose long-forgotten quality
Still is the wide expanse,
Taking the outer twilight of the Present
With color of romance.

I hear you call, and see the circle sending
Circle on circle and wave and sand.
As down the coast the mission voices blending
Girdle the heathen land.

Within the circle of your incantation
No right of mill-row falls,
No line encroaches, nor land nor low ambition
Taxes the sentry walls.

Even in the swell of your land-waves receding,
Leaving the farther past,
The shouting flow of Spanish glory,
The sunset dream and last

Before me the solemn Alhambra vision towers,
The walls impending,
The wary sentry, der to pale earth clerking,
The jeweled bayonet of snow.

Once more I see Portia's cross a-shining
And past the heathland, northward slowly drifting,
The freighted galleon.

Once more I see the cowled and robed Masses
Round the fallen dead
Of sinking lodge that mixed with twilight masses,
The upholstered bed;

Your writers kneel and falter in the dark hours
Brisk letter, and memorial;
And, o'er and over, like the Host descending,
The sun sinks from the hills.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

SUNDAY, Miss., Sept. 1.—The Septembrist body of the Circuit Court of Kemper county adjourned to-day, Judge Hinton Presiding. There are cases of [illegible] before them, when [illegible] Sabers, Henry Lackey, Hamilton Hogan and Sterling Lackey, all white men, charged with the murder of W. W. Chisham, Miss Chenault's Chisholm, P. Gilmore, on the night of April 7th, will be commenced.

The prosecution will be conducted by District Attorney Thomas J. Lloyd, assisted by Stewart L. Woodford, of New York, ex-Attorney General Morales, of Louisiana, and ex-Governor Ben Wade, of Jackson, Miss. Over two hundred persons, mostly women and children, will be called. Quite a number of citizens of Kemper county are interested in the trial, which is looked for with great interest by the people of the county.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 4. The Carondelet Away Club, of Mobile, Ala., have authorized the Howards to draw on them for $500.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 5. The will of the late Thomas Wilson, retired merchant, a capitalist of this city, who died Monday, was filed for probate in the Orphans' Court to-day. Among other bequests, he makes the following: Five thousand dollars each to the Home of Friendless, Orphans' Asylum, Boys' Home and Friends Society, half a million to found and endow "Thomas Wilson Sanitarium for Children and the Poor," and two hundred thousand in addition to the society already existing for the aid of the poor.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 7. The Colored Refugees Board held a meeting last night, at which reports were made going to show that there has been a little falling off in the negro immigration Northward, and that the numbers may be expected to increase after the crops are gathered. Members of the board state that the better class of colored people are coming, and that the demand for hands here is more or less active, and so general as it has been. Many of the later immigrants are from "settlements remote from the river.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 5. The following telegram was received this morning:

NEW YORK, Sept. 5. To W. J. Smith, Acting President of the Howard Association, Memphis: I send you by telegraph $5000 to aid the Howard Association. I am certain generous people throughout the country will contribute liberally to aid your stricken city. At any rate keep on at your noble work till I tell you to stop and I will foot the bill. What are your daily expenses? Answer.

JAY GOULD.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 6.—Seventeen cases in all—9 white and 8 colored—were reported to the Board of Health to-day. Among the number were Henry Kempf, H. L. Rembert, Thomas J. McGuire, and John H. Hood. Four additional deaths have occurred: Margaret Hines, Belle Miller and two colored. Total number of new cases reported for the week 152, whites 78, colored 74; total number to date 1075; total deaths from yellow fever for the week 13, whites 33, colored 10; total deaths to date 272.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 8.—Twenty-five cases in all—11 even white and ten colored—were reported to the Board of Health to-day, among the number Col. Jas. S. Prestidge, Miss Penn Prestidge, Rev. Father Chrysostom Blanke and C. H. Shaw, Jr. Two additional deaths have been reported—Emma Zimmerman and one colored.

At a meeting of the Committee of Safety held this evening, resolutions in opposition to the No. 6 of the State Board of Health, referring to guning and burning the cotton will in the infected district, were passed by a vote of 5 to 1. Weather clear and pleasant.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—The National Board of Health to-day received information from Morgan City, Louisiana, that there has been one death there from yellow fever.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—Three new patients from the steamer City of New York, from Vera Cruz, were admitted to the quarantine hospital to-day, making the total number of yellow fever patients now there 11.

PORTLAND, Sept. 8.—Eighty-two votes give Garcelon 6,607, Garcelon 6,653, Smith Fusion against Dockham 6,253, Smith Republican 6,284, Garcelon 6,284, Smith 6,285. The Republican majority this year is 2,220, against a majority last year of 2,205. The Republican increase over vote is about 20 per cent, which indicates 67,000 in the State, while the opposition gain is 15 per cent, indicating 70,000.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—The taking of evidence in the trial of Henry L. Gray, for the murder of Cornelia Collision, on April 29, 1877, began at 9 o'clock this morning. Seventy witnesses, thirty-two for the State and thirty-eight for the defense, were sworn, Talmadge, and excluded from the court room.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 8.—The complete count in the city gives the following result: Wm. Kirkpatrick, Mayor, Sheriff, Auditor, Treasurer, Tax Collector, Public Administrator, Surveyor, District Attorney, City and County Attorney, Police Judge, nine Supervisors, five members of the Board of Education, and the Railroad Commissioners, as heretofore elected.

The Republicans elect Assessor, Recorder, Coroner, County Clerk, Superintendent of Schools, Superintendent of Streets, eleven Supervisors, seven members of the Board of Education and amending the State Constitution. Davis, Solomon, Tay, Judges elected. Mayor Kalloch and part of Supervisors elected. Others are elected by majorities so small that an official count may result in some changes.

FOREIGN.

ROME, ITALY, Aug. 20.—Sclopis first has created immediately to the Papal college the red cloth.

HAVANA, Sept. 4.—Advices from Hayti are to August 20. The island continues in a disturbed and feverish state. The Liberals expelled two Haytian war steamers August 17. The Provisional Government of Portau-Prince sentenced to death fourteen officers at Gonaives, and after a bloody struggle the town took fire. Two thirds of the town were destroyed, the remainder was pillaged. After leaving Gonaives, Boyer Bazelais, with his adherents, embarked for Jeremie, which has pronounced in his favor, and where he intends to make a stand. Jean Montgomery, aided by the Haytian steamer Port-au-Prince, has proclaimed the town of Cape Haytien. The Haytians have thus been deprived of their two strongholds in Northern waters and Cape Haytien. The country is in a fearful condition and the days will show how the struggle will end.

HAVANA, Sept. 4.—Seventy-eight deaths from yellow fever reported to-day, a decrease of seventeen from the previous week.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Sir Garnet Wolseley left Gravesend in the Cunard steamship Gallia, for Halifax, accompanied by his wife and three children. His grandmother, two of his sons and Hamilton Aide, his private secretary, also sailed in the Gallia. Sir Garnet will proceed to Ottawa, where he will be received by the Governor General, Lord Dufferin, and will be the guest of Lieutenant Governor Archibald, of Nova Scotia, during his visit to Halifax. Sir Garnet will return to England in October.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Intelligence communicated by the Indian officers to the effect that the attack on the British Embassy at Cabul was commenced by three Afghan regiments, which were joined later by nine others.

The Viceroy of India telegraphs, on the 3d inst., that Gen. Roberts will reach Peiwar from Simla in five days from that date, and will take command of the rapidly advancing force. Gen. Stewart has been ordered to hold Candahar and threaten Ghuznee if necessary.

The Ameer writes that the troops at the first outbreak, after stoning the officers, assured for the British Embassy and sacked it. Several volleys were fired from the Embassy in return.

A second letter from the Ameer, dated Sept. 7, says: "Thousands assembled to destroy the British Embassy. Much the was lost on both sides. Twelve hundred have been besieged all day yesterday up to now. I have no certain news of the envoy, whether he was killed in the quarters or captured."

LONDON, Sept. 8.—The standard's correspondent at Bombay asserts that symptoms of discontent have been noticed at Cabul for some time. The bearing of the population toward members of the Embassy has been certain. The fore defending the Embassy, numbered seventy-nine. They fought with the greatest bravery. It is said the Ameer's son was fatally injured, and a large number of officers were killed. After the Embassy were fired, the survivors rallied and defended themselves desperately, but all were killed, including Major Cunaghani. Intense excitement prevails throughout India. It is believed at Paris and Vienna that the outbreak is due to Russian intrigue.

A Revolution at Oneida.

THE COMMUNISTS SAID TO HAVE ABOLISHED THEIR SYSTEM OF COMPLEX MARRIAGE.

ONEIDA, N. Y., Aug. 28.—A remarkable manifesto was issued yesterday by the Oneida Community. A few days ago Mr. J. H. Noyes, the President of this Community, submitted a proposition for the abandonment of complex marriages. He proposed that this practice, which has brought so much odium upon the Community, should now be abandoned, "not as renouncing a belief in the principles and final success of that institution, but in deference to the public sentiment which is rising against it." He further proposed that in abandoning this system the Community should place itself not on the platform of the Shakers on the one hand, nor of the world on the other, but on St. Paul's platform, which allows marriage, but prefers celibacy, and that after this change the Community would continue to hold its property in common, live together like a common household and eat at a common table, have a common children's department, and continue their daily evening meetings and all their present plans for moral and spiritual amusement and improvement. This proposition was considered by the Community in full assembly on the 26th and was accepted, and from the present date the Community will consist of two classes of members, celibates and the married, who will act upon the principles of monogamy.—New York Graphic.

FIELD NOTES.

NEW SITE, ALA., Aug. 28.—We have just closed our third protracted meeting. Two to five local preachers assisted in the meeting efficiently. Such men are invaluable on a circuit. The Lord met with us in great power. Sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed and greatly edified. Notwithstanding the weather was fair, and the fodder pulling, we had good congregations all day.

R. N. LEPRETTER, P. C.

GREENWOOD, FLA., Aug. 29.—Since my last communication I have held a series of meetings at three points in the Greenwood circuit, viz: Greenwood, Camp Bolton and Mt. Zion, which resulted in nineteen accessions to the church and a goodly number of conversions, and a general revival of the church. Have five more meetings to hold yet. Finances tolerably good. Crops not very flattering; that is corn and cotton.

H. P. GLENN.

EUFAULA, ALA., Sept. 2.—We are now in the second week of a protracted meeting, and are praying and working for better days. No conversions to report to-day, but the pulse of trade is quickening. Several organizations and re-commodious houses have been recently completed. We are having plenty of rain, but good health abounds. All the pastors, except myself, absent during the summer. One has returned. The rank summer list is ours.

J. W. JENKINS.

EUFAULA, ALA., Sept. 3.—Within four weeks I have been in Russell, Barbour, Henry, Dale and Pike counties. Crops short everywhere. Cotton, especially, has suffered from rain, rust and boll worms. The preachers on this district are all at work. Several good meetings are now in progress. I think we will report five hundred conversions on the district this year. We had a good District Conference; the largest I ever saw; over one hundred members present, and a refreshing season spiritually. We have two camp meetings yet to hold, and hope for good results.

E. B. CRAWFORD.

WEST POINT, MISS., Aug. 26.—The people of West Point are enjoying seasons of refreshing from God's presence. We have held four protracted meetings with good results. Fifty have been added to the Church since Conference. Others are expected to join soon. Crops are tolerably good.

M. C. CARLISLE, P. C.

VICKSBURG, MISS., Aug. 30.—We have just closed a meeting at Bethel Church (better known as Red Bone), Warren circuit, Vicksburg district, of six days' continuance, with the following results: Fifteen accessions, and a many conversions, with the membership much revived, and the whole community impressed with the power and influence of the gospel. I am glad to state the whole charge is in a flourishing condition, and finances gradually improving.

L. W. WILLIAMS.

CAMDEN, MISS., Aug. 30.—My work consists of two churches: Camden and Scotts Chapel. The people are pleasant and intelligent, and know how to appreciate their pastor. Corn crop injured by dry weather. Cotton promising. At Scotts Chapel we have had a most joyous revival. The whole church seemed to enjoy the sweet influences of the Holy Spirit, and partake of the spirit of our Master. A number resolved to seek a higher Christian life. Six were added to the church.

W. D. HOSKINS.

MORTON'S FORK, MISS., Aug. 31.—Meeting just closed at Beech Grove. Twenty-two accessions and thirty conversions. Church wonderfully blessed. Seven promised to erect new family altars. Community stirred.

W. W. HOPPER.

PLANTERSVILLE, LA., Aug. 29.—We closed a meeting at Schumannhall, on the eighteenth of July, resulting in eighteen accessions, quite a number of conversions, and the church greatly revived and built up. Rev. J. M. Madison assisted me. My effort meetings are nearly over. So far they are a success. The Lord has surely come to Zion in this section. Crops above an average. Health continues unusually good. Our meeting at Bartholomew commences to-morrow.

Notes from Nashville.

The last day of August and the first day of September are memorable days in our calendar. At the ringing of the Vanderbilt bell, in the afternoon of Sunday, a large congregation assembled in the chapel of Vanderbilt University to join in the opening service of the fifth session of Vanderbilt University. As the choir was not reorganized, some of the singers in Nashville discoursed a couple of exquisite pieces, which were highly appreciated by those whose ears have been trained in that direction—the voice of Mrs. Craig reverberated, as that of her brother-in-law, Mr. Dorman, thundered through that beautiful gothic edifice. But when Old Hundred and Coronation were sung then,

I sing the mighty power of God,
The boundless skies proclaim,
A whole assembly worship Thee;
And saints shout the name—

And what is there so entrancing as the voices of a large congregation blended in holy song?

The preacher on the occasion was the Rev. Edward Wadsworth, D. D., presiding elder of the Mobile district. The doctor is at home in universities and colleges, having spent many years of his life in professorial and presidential chairs of several institutions of learning. He delivered a masterly discourse—Christian Citizenship—applying it in a pointed and impressive manner to the special occasion. As the doctor opened his theme one fact, indeed, that it is something great to have one's conversation (citizenship) in heaven!

When God makes up His last accounts
Of natives in His holy mount,
'Twill be an honor to appear
As one new-born and nourished there.

Dr. Wadsworth was stationed in Nashville over a quarter of a century ago, and it was delightful to see how the older people gathered around their old pastor to revive the memories of the past. He preached for them again, on Sunday night, in McKendree. My house was greatly honored in having the doctor as a guest.

BREAKING GROUND FOR NEW WESLEY HALL.

Through the munificence of Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, son of the late Commodore, provision has been made for the erection of a costly and commodious edifice for our Biblical Department. The ground was broken on Monday afternoon, September 8. At the ringing of the university bell, notwithstanding the pluvious condition of the heavens and earth a goodly company assembled on the ground.

The God that made both sky, air, earth and heaven.

"Arlington" never sounded so sweet to me as when sung for a thousand tongues to sing" rolled over the campus in its cheery notes. Dr. Wadsworth offered a most impressive prayer, which made us feel that that was holy ground. Chancellor Garland, in a few well-considered sentences, stated the object and origin of the enterprise. Student Sims being called out stated the advantages the boys had derived from this department of the university, and how deeply they felt indebted to the Vanderbilts for their munificence. The Rev. D. Young made a felicitous speech, referring to the history of the university and to the good a ready demon supplying well-trained ministers in Conferences extending from the Pacific to the Atlantic.

Bishop McTyeire now took the stage in hand, and solemnly pronounced [illegible] The Bishop accompanied the divine sentiment with the symbolical act of breaking ground with the spade. The first cast of earth upon the dean of the Biblical Department to do likewise, which he did, accompanying the act with the [illegible] name of our God we will set up our banners." He was followed in like manner by professors, trustees, the editor of the Western Methodist being one, Dr. Young and others, students and visiting ministers. A few well-timed remarks by the Bishop, the doxology and benediction, closed this solemn and unique service.

The corner stone is to be laid this same month, so that during the winter and the new Wesley Hall it is hoped, will be ready for dedication at the opening of the next session. Immediately after the close of this ceremony Dr. Wadsworth took leave of us, to return to his district. Seldom has a visit of the kind been more satisfactory to those visited or the visitor. As Dr. Wadsworth is on the train send you the following item, Mr. Editor, for the truths of which I can vouch; it is no unwritten tradition.

"WONDERFUL COINCIDENCE.

"The following narrative is full of interest in every point.

"About the year 1850, a beautiful church, named Watson's Chapel, was dedicated, in Greene county, Alabama. The congregation was very full, consisting largely of intelligent and wealthy people. A fine looking gentleman occupied a chair in the altar on the south side of the church, whose manner was decorous. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. E. Wadsworth, of the Alabama Conference, of the Southern Methodist Church. It was founded on John iv. 24. While the preacher was stringing forth the doctrine of God's omnipresence the gentleman above mentioned sent forth a piercing and terrible yell, and fell to the floor in a fit. The congregation was highly excited, and their consternation was increased when our God we will set up our banners." He was followed in like manner by professors, trustees, the editor of the Western Methodist being one, Dr. Young and others, students and visiting ministers. A few well-timed remarks by the Bishop, the doxology and benediction, closed this solemn and unique service.

The congregation was highly excited, and their consternation was increased when the gentleman arose and left the church. The congregation was after this in a fast recession. Soon we were informed by the more terrified [illegible] that the gentleman had returned to the church, and was in the act of preaching. We returned to the house, the door was closed, which was locked, and the congregation was seated. The gentleman was in the pulpit, and was preaching with great power. He was a stranger to all present. He was dressed in a suit of black, and wore a white cravat. He was a tall, slender man, with a dark complexion, and had a long, black beard. He was a very eloquent preacher, and his sermon was very impressive. He was a very good man, and his sermon was very impressive. He was a very good man, and his sermon was very impressive.

"Note the coincidences. The same preacher was preaching on the same text, and while urging the same doctrine two gentlemen in the same position relative to the pulpit utter alarming shrieks and fall down in fits!"

The writer of that understands what he says and when of the affairs "it is the testimony." Who can explain the "wonderful coincidence?" Dr. Wadsworth has a very solemn and pointed address in the pulpit. When the idea of God's omnipresence is brought distinctly, articulately and pointedly to a man's conscience it is no marvel that he is overpowered by the tremendous thought! That is what gives such an amazing power to Psalm xxxix. Take down your Psalter, and read it aloud very deliberately. Then take Dr. Watson's version of it in which stanza 5, 10, 11 are especially, solemn and epigrammatic refrains.

Oh may these thoughts possess my breast
Where'er I rove, where'er I rest,
Nor set my wicker pass to age
Obscene to sin, or God is there!

NASHVILLE Sept. 2, 1879.

The Geysers of California.

We started from the beautiful town of Santa Rosa, in Sonoma county, and, after a fifty-two mile horse-wagon trip over the mountains, arrived at the Geyser Hotel. The drive led us through one of the richest and richest valleys of California. Grain fields were in a radiant, wave on every hand, and some fine dwellings set in the front, and some in the midst of the fields surrounded by cultivated trees. There is such an enjoyable gloominess which [illegible] wonderful it is so delightful necessary to improve our minds by [illegible] of everything trees, but in California, except [illegible] in the forests, which are generally [illegible] trees must be planted and carefully nurtured, at least until they are well rooted in the earth. One of the greatest beauties perhaps the fairest San [illegible] is the [illegible] the skill and care of [illegible] for the beautiful trees which line the streets and elegant residences. Tree planting [illegible] abounds throughout the State, and [illegible] things grows to a good size. Trees a foot in diameter. We passed through [illegible] shaded and thriving [illegible] the large, covered [illegible] some of which suggests [illegible] our own Southern Methodist [illegible] and [illegible] a desirable advantage, known as the [illegible] during the [illegible] during the dry season. Now every house [illegible] in numbers [illegible] young [illegible] and curiously stooped for the [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] of vaskers, being the only sign of life. A little beyond the town we [illegible]. Then we [illegible] up the mountain like [illegible] and, after hours of climbing, reached the summit of one overlooking miles of magnificent scenery. All around us were the [illegible] The earth looks to me like and it [illegible] limitless vision of towering mountains and the [illegible] valleys. The Russian river, [illegible] from Russian mountains and settlements of the [illegible], flowed at the base, and the [illegible] were alive with [illegible]. Then for miles we ascended the mountain, catching rare glimpses of deep canons, far [illegible] suspended a [illegible] of the [illegible] in the air, the least misstep of a horse or [illegible] in the [illegible]. The wagons were [illegible] to plunge us over the steep precipitous [illegible]. The [illegible] for willingness [illegible] of the [illegible] of the self-[illegible] by the signs of the [illegible], whose [illegible] with Louisiana [illegible] was never [illegible] preparations for dangerous [illegible] roads. We saw [illegible] without number, [illegible] bear [illegible] and [illegible] over [illegible] [illegible] jolly gymnasts. Our nerves were [illegible] exercised when we heard of an accident which resulted [illegible] and death. A young lady, [illegible] of her [illegible] accidents, the throat was [illegible] lacerated, living memory. But that [illegible] of the [illegible] over the risk of [illegible] be. After our arrival the first [illegible] of our wheelmen was [illegible] to [illegible] of steam away in the [illegible] of [illegible] mile from the [illegible]. We were [illegible] to see the cause of so strange and [illegible] phenomenon. The party being [illegible] by the [illegible] journey, it was decided to defer our trip of discovery until early morning. A [illegible] to the right induced us to walk down a [illegible] to [illegible] what proved to be a hot sulphur [illegible]. There were the [illegible] and bathing tubs large enough to swim in. At the [illegible] we were [illegible] by [illegible] from the [illegible] to the body, [illegible] bathing. Steam, as well as water, is at hand. No one present could enlighten us as to the origin of the Geysers. It appeared to the writer to be volcanic, and seemed to substantiate the theory that the world is [illegible] which we live was once a huge ball of [illegible], which, cooling on the surface, produced earth, while the interior [illegible] receded into the center of the earth. This process of cooling seems to be continuous, as scientists claim that the surface is losing its heat, and one day the physical universe will become a climax of darkness and desolated worlds. A more plausible theory was suggested by a gentleman, and this seems to be the favorite one—that it is of local origin, [illegible] by the union and combination of certain chemical elements. We find neither geologist or chemist present, hence must remain in partial ignorance of much that is now obscure.

A canon is the intervening vale or gorge between two mountain peaks, either of separate or of the same mountain. Sometimes they are thousands of feet deep, and the sides too steep for transit up or down. Geyser canon is the best to display, where Nature is surely performing some very singular and mysterious feats. Our party, early in the morning, entered this canon by a narrow trail, walking in single file. There was a stream of water flowing down this canon into a lower mountain stream. It was hot water, with a rising mist, strongly fragrant of sulphur. Our guide, as we neared, said, "Devil's eye-water cure. Ladies and gentlemen," added he to a hot spring of water, which has the reputation of curing all sore eyes. It is not so strange that the name of the devil and other Satanian dignitaries should be associated with the Geysers, but that the devil should be honored with a place among the sublime beauties of this mount the [illegible] Paradise. There is the "Devil's Slide," for instance, a most novel [illegible] on the "Bible," and the "Devil's Cañon." These are the names given some of the most gorgeous scenery which [illegible] the otherwise unvarnished [illegible] and trip from New Orleans to San Francisco.

Springs are [illegible] by the [illegible] water. Their "medicinal" [illegible] the sick or [illegible] of beauty [illegible] soda [illegible] and sulphurous [illegible]. It was [illegible] among the [illegible]. [illegible] we passed, [illegible] a village where we [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] which [illegible] [illegible] as the waters [illegible] and [illegible]. The effect was something [illegible] [illegible] with a [illegible] coloring. The [illegible] forms which come forth [illegible] a steaming gas [illegible] up in the [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] as the waters [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

SONG OF THE SAW.

BY J. W. HESTER.

The song of the circular saw,
A music peculiar and free,
Its melody teaches a law,
That is most instructive to me.
As she eats and devours her feed,
And singing and ringing aloud,
She runs with such wonderful speed,
Of her strength she seems to be proud.

But ask her from whence she derives
The power that forces her so;
She points to the pulley that drives,
Without it she nothing could do:
Then go to the pulley and ask,
And listen what it has to say
Performing this wonderful task,
As to drive her day after day.

The pulley replies: I have fell
A pressure most wonderful tight,
I am wrapt in this ponderous belt,
Which hugs me from morning till night.
To the belt we then make appeal,
To learn all the truth in the case,
While bound on this huge iron wheel,
The matter no further could trace.

To the wheel we then make request,
Expecting an answer so frank,
But, knowing no more than the rest,
It rects us along to the crank.
The crank, but a short crooked arm,
Attached to a ponderous beam,
Was turning the wheel like a charm,
But all was dependent on steam.

Then turning a last to the steam,
For the secret of all to inquire,
But find me all fancy as a dream,
Unaided by water and fire.
The moral we learn from the mill
Is that which concerns us the most,
That all have an office to fill,
And each should be found at his post.

CITRONELLE, Aug. 20, 1879.

Healing Springs Camp Meeting, Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: The preachers of the Alabama Conference were never more earnestly engaged in the work to which God has called them than during the present season; and it is a wonder that they do not encourage the church at large by furnishing to our "organ" an account of the nature and success of their labors. (We think they do to a considerable extent. See Field Notes and From the Work.—ED. ADVOCATE.) So far as my information extends, unusual harvests of souls are being reaped by the laborers in this part of the Master's vineyard, and if the facts were communicated to the church they would prove a source of encouragement, the value of which cannot be easily estimated.

Our camp meetings are now following each other in quick succession, and, as means of grace, are proving of great profit to the church. It has been my privilege to attend one of these meetings recently at Healing Springs, in the bounds of the Bladon Springs circuit, and I have never before seen more manifest indications of the presence and power of God in awakening sinners and arousing the church than I there witnessed.

This meeting closed on Tuesday, the twenty-sixth instant, and during the five days of its continuance not less than sixty or seventy persons professed to have secured the pardon of their sins, and to have been "made new creatures in Christ Jesus." It was, indeed, throughout a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and God's people rejoiced with joy unspeakable.

The preaching was in demonstration of the Spirit and in power, and the doctrine of Christ crucified proved the power and wisdom of God unto salvation with every one that believed. The aged and the young were influenced to seek the salvation of their souls, and at one time, in the altar, the penitential tears of a woman of eighty-six years were mingled with those of a little girl of not more than six or eight summers, and, with those, of from forty to fifty others of ages ranging between these two extremes.

Bros. Heard and Hines, of the Mississippi Conference, and Wadsworth, Andrews, Wiley and Hamilton, of the Alabama Conference, were present, and did most effective service, preaching with great zeal and success.

This was, I think, the first camp meeting at which Dr. Wadsworth has had entire responsibilities in management as presiding elder, and he certainly showed himself equal to the occasion. His scholarly and faithful preaching, his amiability of disposition, his holy conversation and walk, and his zeal for the salvation of souls, not only contributed to the success of this meeting, but eminently qualify him for the work in which he is engaged. And the district is exhibiting healthy development as the result of his administration.

There are not many tent holders at this place, but those who were present this year have hearts as large as "all out of doors," and extended a generous welcome to all visitors who came to join in the worship of this feast of tabernacles.

The preacher in charge of the Bladon Springs circuit contributed to the comfort and pleasure of all by his careful attention and his agreeable manners. He discovers his Irish extraction no less by his generous heart than by the peculiar accent of his speech. Witnessing his persevering efforts to make others happy, I would find myself repeating Campbell's words: "Erin mavourneen, Erin go bragh." He seems to be giving such satisfaction to his people that the extent of the pastoral term will not be too long for him to remain among them.

After the camp meeting it was my pleasure to visit Cullum Springs, than which there is not a more healthy and delightful summer resort to be found anywhere. The water is fine, and there are not less than five distinct varieties of it; while the cuisine, under the personal supervision of Mrs. O'Hara, is all that the most fastidious epicure can possibly wish for.

My ride home on the "Eureka" was simply charming. Capt. Woodie Stone has the faculty of making ministers feel that he is really glad to have them travel on his boat, and he always extends to them a gratuitous ride, in spite of "combination arrangements." May his boat be loaded with cotton bales, almost to the point of sinking, every trip of the next season.

State Line Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: At the suggestion of a friend, I write you something relative to the State Line or Mounger Creek camp meeting:

The writer and family, in company with Mr. J. Champeaois and family, from Shubuta, and our beloved pastor, Bro. Hines, arrived at the camp ground early Thursday morning. We took refuge from the rain, on our arrival, under a magnificent shed, well covered with shingles, seated ourselves on nicely-planed benches with backs to them, while under our feet was a thick, dry carpeting of sawdust. From the shed we had a good view of the encampment, and to our no less delighted than astonished gaze it presented the appearance of a small town minus the inhabitants. Such nice, new, plank cottages for tents, well floored and well roofed, windows and doors with shutters, halls and verandahs, everything so cosy and comfortable. Then the natural features of the camp ground are charmingly beautiful. The ground on which the shed is erected seems as if designed by nature for the purpose to which it is appropriated, forming a gradual ascent from the pulpit to the rear benches, seating the audience in something of amphitheater style. The tents, most of them, are situated on a slight eminence fronting the shed and railroad, commanding a fine view of the latter, Mounger Creek is a most beautiful stream, its pellucid waters rippling and gurgling over their sandy channel, while at the point from which we saw it a splendid magnolia is bending low over the stream, its vernal foliage almost kissing the limpid waters, the glittering crowned monarch of the woods doing homage to the purity of the waters. We much enjoyed the coolness, clearness and pureness of the spring water, the medicinal properties of which I am unacquainted with, but have no doubt of their health-restoring nature. We went to the camp meeting strangers to the majority of the State Line people, having very few acquaintances among them, but, from their reputation abroad, were prepared to meet the refined, cultured, social people that we found them.

Bro. Adkisson preached the first sermon at eleven o'clock on Friday—a most excellent and appropriate discourse. On Friday night Rev. E. H. Mounger, from Meridian, arrived, and preached three very fine sermons during the meeting. On Sunday night Rev. J. P. Heard, from Enterprise, reached the camp ground. Bro. Heard preached on Monday and Tuesday nights. Bro. Hines usually at four P. M. The Rev. Mr. Cole was present on Tuesday, the last day of the meeting.

The preaching throughout was excellent, exhibiting a high order of talent. The morning experience meetings were deeply interesting. There were eighteen accessions to the church, and about that many conversions. The attendance of preachers and people was not as large as was expected, owing, it is thought, principally to the rumor of yellow fever. Only five preachers in all, but "what was lacking in quantity was made up in quality." Between six and seven hundred persons were on the camp ground on Sunday. One thing we are sure of, and that is, the Lord was there. I cannot close this article without an allusion to the singing of the colored people, who were present at our night service; their rich musical voices were a great help in that charming part of worship. And after the congregation had dispersed, and we had repaired to the silence of our tent, we could still hear the glorious melody of their songs as they floated out on the quiet air of night. The natural, social and spiritual enjoyments of Mounger Creek camp meeting form a blissful era in our past, around which memory will always love to linger.

Centenary Female College, Summerfield, Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: This time-honored institution is on rising ground in prospect as well as location. For forty years its doors have been open to multitudes of girls, who have been educated within its walls. Perhaps no man could have sustained it better, more energetically and successfully, for the past eight years, than its present president, Rev. A. D. McVoy, A. M. He has been thoroughly tried, has won and retained the confidence of all who know him and have patronized the institution. President McVoy has exercised good judgment in the selection of his faculty. His Art teacher is unsurpassed for success, skill, ability and character. This department has met the highest demand.

A highly cultivated lady of large experience from Virginia, distinguished as a vocalist and instrumental teacher, has been secured for the Music Department, who will introduce what is known as the celebrated "Howard Method" of singing—the latest improvement by which any one can be taught to sing.

The Literary Department will be under the control of an experienced presiding teacher, who knows how to control as well as to teach.

If you want to see penmanship taught (and I reckon that you do,) step into this school and watch the busy president at his blackboard, and as he moves rapidly among his pupils, and you will understand the secret of his success as you inspect the elegant style of his seniors.

Then the discipline is so good, kind, judicious, careful and strict. No pupil could be more faithfully watched over. There is always a religious sentiment pervading the school, and the pupils are brought under the strongest influences for good. If they are not already connected with the church, they are almost certain to become so while here.

There is no local cause why a girl should suffer in health here. Pure air, good water, the best food liberally provided, comfortable accommodations and various exercises, decrease very largely the liability to sickness. Summerfield is noted for its healthfulness, as experienced by those who live here, and as witnessed in the number of families that remove here in the summer season to secure health.

The highest standard of an education is sought after—a thorough, solid and useful education that will prepare for success in life. No institution has sent out better and more successful teachers, some of whom occupy high positions in our best institutions. The buildings are of brick, with slate roof, large, imposing, well adapted, beautifully situated, surrounded with large oaks that shade the extensive grounds and grassy slopes.

Fortunate are the boys and girls who come here, where there are no temptations or excitements to draw them off from study. In this quiet village everything conduces to the advancement of the schools. In addition to the female college, there is here one of the best schools for boys and young men to be found in the land, under the management of Messrs. Mitchell and Caruthers. Prof. T. D. Mitchell, who has taught in the Southern University, is a son of Rev. A. H. Mitchell, D. D., the distinguished and venerable preacher, and able presiding elder of the Prattville district. Prof. Caruthers is an experienced and able teacher. Under these two thorough and well-tried teachers the male school must succeed. These are Methodist institutions of which the church ought to be proud. The next session begins October 1.

UNION CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This circuit has six appointments. Four of them have Sunday preaching by the pastor, two are filled on week days. Of course they are not doing well for themselves or the pastor. The four Sunday appointments are well able to support two preachers in the Conference. Within the bounds of the circuit here are at least eight Baptist churches. The Methodists have one resident local preacher, and they expect them to be up and doing. They cultivate too much land for the hands, and are suffering sadly on account thereof. More laborers, and they better fed, would yield a fine profit. The church is loosing its hold in this rich country for lack of ministerial work and support.

I hope the Bishop, assisted by the presiding elder and the Lord, will send two young, strong and able preachers to this inviting field the coming year. If we are successful, we intend to have the houses of worship renovated and fixed up in neat trim by the end of this year. If the plans already adopted are carried out, we shall have at least four church buildings that will do to worship God in. We are having a revival upon this subject, and the Lord is opening the eyes of some upon the subject of ministerial support. The people are learning, slowly, the meaning of Proverbs ii, 24, 25; also First Corinthians ix, 9. I say, there is great improvement. They are going to do better, and save the people from ruin. We have held a six days' meeting at Hopewell Church; had a hard struggle, but, notwithstanding the drawbacks and efforts of the devil, we had a good time. The church was greatly stirred. Two bright conversions and one applicant. Rev. Angus Dowling was with us, and preached with power and unction. This meeting included the first Sunday in July. On Saturday, before the third Sunday in August, we began a meeting at Magnolia, and closed on Thursday. It was a gracious meeting. The presence of the Lord was manifest. The whole church was blessed, and nearly every head of a family resolved to erect the family altar for life. Rev. J. W. Hightower rendered great assistance. The brethren of Mount Hilliard had a grand meeting, which began on the fourth Sunday in August. I could not be present. The Rev. J. W. Hightower and the Rev. Abel Tatum, of Troy, preached and labored with them a week. Good meeting. Several conversions, five additions, and the church blessed.

Our third Quarterly Conference was held at Magnolia, including the first Sunday in August. The presiding elder, Rev. Dr. O. R. Blue, was at his post, and did good work. We are intending to raise all the collections required by the Conference. I am the steward of that business, and will in due time pay my respect to that duty, and the money must come. Let the whole circuit begin to awake and look around, and think and work, and pray and pay, and God will bless, and next year there will be, at least, two good works and some healthy young preachers.

AUGUST 26, 1879. J. W. SOLOMON.

HOLMESVILLE, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: Amite circuit is unduly in Amite county, Miss., with one appointment in Lincoln, and one in Franklin county. The work is scattered, with nearly 200 families represented in the church, most of whom expect an occasional visit from the pastor. There are now nearly 450 members on the roll. During the year about 70 new names have been added to the roll, and 35 children have been baptized. A portion of the work is in a very healthy condition. Five Sunday-schools in the work, all of which use our own literature. The Sunday-schools at Adams' Camp Ground is one of the finest in south Mississippi, numbering over 100, besides the teachers. It is a treat to any one who is fond of vocal music to hear them sing "Gathering Home," "One Drop of His Blood," "By and By," and other pieces in the "New Life." Bro. William A. King, the worthy superintendent, and Bro. J. E. Caruth, his assistant, are both noble-hearted Christian gentlemen, full of zeal for God and His cause.

One of the secrets of the success of the school at Adams' is the parents, instead of sending, as the manner of some is, take their children to Sunday-school.

We have three local elders on this work, viz.: Bros. Jagers, Tarver and Wood. All good men. They help the pastor. Crops here were injured; first by the dry, then by the wet weather.

Finances not quite up to what they ought to be in such a charge, yet many of the brethren are doing nobly in this regard. I have distributed by sales, and otherwise, six or seven hundred copies of Bibles and Testaments. Sold nearly $100 worth of our own books. Not as many ADVOCATES taken as ought to be.

KUFAULA DISTRICT CONFERENCE, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: The District Conference for the Eufaula district convened at Abbeville, Ala., July 21, 1879. The meeting was opened with appropriate religious services by Rev. R. B. Crawford, P. E., and permanently organized by the election of A. H. Alston as secretary. More than one hundred delegates were present.

The meeting continued for five days, and was productive of much good. Several members were added to the church, and a deep feeling of piety was apparent throughout the community.

Every minister on the work was present except Bro. Barker, who was detained at his home by sickness. He sent his written report, which showed his work to be in a good condition.

From the reports of the ministers we concluded that the aggressive power of the church was not being felt as much as we could desire, but we were gratified to know that the morals of the church members are good, the discipline of the church being rarely violated.

Bros. S. H. Dent, J. H. Bass, B. F. Cassady and W. H. Stuckey were elected delegates to attend the Annual Conference; A. H. Alston and J. T. Floyd alternates.

To the citizens of Abbeville we all return our sincere thanks for the kindness and hospitality bestowed upon us. No Conference was ever entertained more hospitably than was ours.

A. H. ALSTON.

GEORGIANA, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: Weep with us in our sad bereavement. Last week, while engaged in a very interesting meeting at Georgiana, I was summoned home to witness the death of our dear Ellen, the wife of my stepson, R. A. Payne. This is his second wife, and he is just twenty-seven years old. When I arrived she was singing the last verse of the "Land of Beulah," and then she attempted to sing the "Sweet By and By." Death struck her about ten o'clock A. M., and from then until about eight P. M. she shouted, exhorted, sang and praised God. In all my life I have never witnessed such a triumph.

On the second Sunday I held a meeting at New Prospect, which resulted in nine conversions and one accession, and a general blessing on the church. I have just closed a meeting at South Butler, the oldest church on my work. Our congregation was very large—a mixed multitude of Hardshells, Universalists, Mormons and sinners. At the first meeting the altar was filled with mourners; at the next there was a triumphant shout went up from the church, which gave the victory throughout the meeting. We closed with seven conversions and six accessions.

YELLOW RIVER MISSION, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: During the present year there have been sixteen accessions to the churches under my charge. There are six regular appointments, with a membership of about three hundred and seventy-five. Spiritual condition not very good.

I think this mission could be raised to a self-sustaining circuit by making a larger appropriation, and sending an experienced minister to stir them to a livelier sense of their religious duties. Crops are very good.

Obituaries.

WILLIAM BUSH MELLEN, son of Prof. S. S. and Emma H. Mellen, was born at Pierce Springs, Miss., September 18, 1860, and died in Mount Sterling, Ala., August 9, 1879.

In the Fall of 1878 he became a member of Mount Sterling Sunday-school, and the interest he felt for its cause was manifested by a regular attendance upon its duties to the time of his death. On June 8, 1879, under the ministry of Bro. W. H. Wiley, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and on the fifteenth of the same month he was received into full membership. Only two months was he permitted to dwell in God's Church militant, before he was translated into his eternal home. Willie was nearly fifteen years old. In mental ability and moral integrity, we knew not his superior. His kind and courteous disposition, his polite bearing and goodness of heart endeared him to all.

Resolved, Almighty God, whose "ways are past finding out," has removed from our midst our beloved brother, William B. Mellen.

Resolved, That we, the members of Mount Sterling Sabbath school, while bowing submissively to the will of God, have sustained a sad loss in the death of our companion and brother.

Resolved, That we rejoice to know that our young brother was conscious of the approach of death, and gave evidence of his love and trust in our blessed Savior, and in a strong hope that he had a home in heaven, and did not fear death.

Resolved, That we commend his life as an example to others, and trust that the influence of his life, consummated in a Christian's death, will be blessed by our Heavenly Father, who has removed him with a view to his physical powers, were in a developing intellectual, and when his mental faculties were giving promise of great and good achievements.

Resolved, That we tender our warmest sympathies to the parents and brothers of the deceased, and we pray that the almighty power which said "Let there be light," will do their comforting in this hour of bereavement.

E. O. SMITH, for Committee.

JUDGE JOHN C. BURRUS, aged SIX ty-five years, native of Tennessee county, Ala., and for forty-four years a resident of Indian county, Miss., died on the twenty-second day of August, 1879, after a long and painful illness. Beloved in all the relations of life he was honored and esteemed by all who knew him. Always warmly attached to the Methodist Church he took pride in making his home the preacher's home, and no doubt some of those who enjoyed his generous hospitality here were willing to welcome him upon the "other shore." In the days of his prosperity he contributed liberally to the cause of God and one of his greatest trials in the hour of adversity was his inability to contribute as his heart prompted him to do. Yet, he did what he could, and never allowed the idea that he could ever become too poor to contribute to the cause so near his heart to enter his mind. His Christian career was a checkered one but in the end he was "perfected through suffering" and expressed himself as being perfectly satisfied that the severe chastening of the Lord was not grievous but necessary to his salvation. Conscious to the last moment, without a doubt or fear, he passed away to that "other life," feeling assured that "He who giveth his beloved sleep" would allot him his portion with the "Saints in light." It was beautiful to a Christian observer to behold the cheerful resignation of her who shared his joys and sorrows for forty years or more. The exhibition of such great faith will bring forth fruit hereafter. "God keeps" the dead in Christ "we know not how or where, but we know that he keeps them safe and well," and that we shall "find them all again" in the "house not made with hands eternal in the heavens."

MRS. RUSHA BRANTLEY, aged seventy-seven years, eight months and twenty-eight days, died August 27, 1879. Her maiden name was Ross. She was born in Lewisburgh, N. C., November 29, 1801, moved in Old St. Stephens, Washington county, Ala., in 1822, from thence to Sumpter county, Ala., in 1832, thence back to Washington county, Ala., in 1870, where her mortal remains now rest beside her husband, Burrell P. Brantley, who preceded her to the grave in 1870. Of her it may be truthfully said "She sleeps in Jesus." She connected herself with the Baptist Church in North Carolina in early life and remained in that communion to the day of her death. Her Christian sympathy and charity were not pent up within the narrow limits of a single denomination. She loved all Christians, gave a cordial welcome to ministers of other denominations when they visited her, and visited them heartily. "God speed" in Our Lord's "work of faith and labor of love." Her religion was constant, and rendered her uniformly cheerful. Though she lived to an advanced age and had been much afflicted in life, she did not become peevish and fretful. Her last illness was attended with much suffering, yet for three weeks of confinement to her bed she complained not. The night before she died she suffered much pain, still she murmured not, but spoke kindly to those who waited around her dying bed, calling them "dear children." Her son says: She was a good woman, a good self-sacrificing mother, and it was very hard for him to give her up. Among her last intelligible words were frequently uttered: "Come, dear Lord." A good woman is gone, leaving the world in debt for her having lived so long here. Surely "the memory of the just is blessed."

REV. EDWARD ROBINSON.—Resolutions by the Third Quarterly Conference of Stockton circuit, Pensacola district, Alabama Conference:

Whereas, It has pleased God in His infinite wisdom to remove from His earthly service our much beloved Bro. the Rev. Edward Robinson, which said event took place in Stockton, Baldwin county, Ala., July 22, 1879, therefore

Resolved, That the church and the community in which our departed Brother was so long an ornament, is filled with sorrow at his sad and unexpected departure from our midst.

Resolved, That while we bow submissively to the will of the Great Head of the church, we feel a great deep, past feeling out, yet as dependent creatures, we bow with entire submission to the will of heaven in the death of our father in Israel.

Resolved, That we tender our sincere and heartfelt sympathies to the widow, and to all the members of the family of our departed friend, hoping and praying that they may be graciously sustained in their bereavement, and that the mournful event may be sanctified to her, and to them. May they all share largely in the compensations of that grace which sustained and comforted their departed relative through the earthly pilgrimage.

A. J. COLVAN.

MRS. ROSA CORINILLA CENEY, wife of Dr. S. F. Ceney, and daughter of George S. Morris and Mary L. Cory, was born at Woodville, Wilkinson county, Miss., on April 21, 1840, and died at the residence of her husband in Franklin parish, La., on Monday night, August 18, 1879.

The deceased had long distinguished herself as a Christian woman, but owing to reserve on one's part was unable to do so until the day of her death. During her three weeks of protracted suffering she exhibited a kind forbearance, and frequently expressed herself as "prepared to die." At her request we sang, "Home of the Soul." The Great Physician, and at her own request, "Sweet By and By." She partook of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper with evident spiritual benefit, several of her friends and relatives partaking with her. Quietly peaceful, she fell asleep in Jesus, "gone to walk upon the shores of eternity." May the Lord bless this affliction to the purifying of the grieving husband, and the salvation of her only child.

JESS W. CHAMBERS, P. C.

MARION MORRIS FARRAR, born January 1877, died July [illegible], 1878, and ELEANOR K. FARRAR, born March 26, 1875, died August 10, 1879, were the children of S. D. Farrar and Ella I. Merrill. The darkness closes his tender grasp and earth's treasures dissolved.

J. W. C.

BRO. ROWAN STEPHEN WELLINGTON WENTWORTH, died in Meadville, Miss., August 8, 1879, aged thirty-five years, three months and twenty-six days. He was born near Dry Bayou, in Franklin county, 1843. In this town he entered the Christian militant state by death the Church Militant and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when fifteen years old, under the ministry of Rev. A. McNeil. He lived a truly pious life and never backslid, as I can safely say, since I knew him. And the consummation of his Christian life, when every Christian child had gone out, his still shone. When the organ had ceased in the church he stood alone as a monument to Elijah's setting, when all worship had been abandoned and a faithful few met with bold prayer meetings to help two souls confess Everybody knew him and every sinner had confidence in his religion. When a man said at the dead grave "we shall never see the like again." He was long afflicted, but never murmured. His whole desire was to live for the glory of God. He died in peace. Meadville has lost a star of great light.

W. W. TOMLINSON, Pastor.

WILLIAM MILLER, died near Reuchle, La., DeSoto parish, April 6, 1879, in his sixth year of age. His Mother professed religion in the year 1850. The writer had known Mr. Miller as pastor for over two years. He was not a man of demonstrative character, but a man of conviction. What was right seemed to be the first and last for him to do always. His death came accidentally. Just one month previous to his death, in conversation with him, he stated to me he felt his work was done and was arranging his business for both worlds. He wanted to do loving no man anything, but to owe debts he did. The church and neighborhood has lost a good, true and honest man. But our loss is his gain. Bro. Miller leaves a wife and several children, most of them small. Oh, may they never forget the Lord's precious promise to them: "I will be a father to the fatherless, and a husband to the widow."

J. M. JOHNSTON.

LITTLE BILLA, daughter of Fly S. and M. Rowell, aged four years, one month and twenty days, died in Demopolis, Ala., July 17, 1879, with cerebral spinal fever, after a short and painful illness. She was an extraordinary child—the pet and idol of the family. She was a good and amiable as she was pretty and intelligent. Death leaves a striking mark. The full promise of its little life shall be fully realized above. There is no ugliness, no misleading faith there to murder beauty, nothing to check the perfect development of the native talent which she is with her sainted mother who left her two years ago. She has gone to her Savior, who says: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

ONE SHEAF.

A PASTOR'S SONG.

BY M. E. WINSLOW.

One lit'e sheaf; but one,
Lord of the harvest, bring I unto Thee.
Around me wave broad fields of nodding grain,
Summer's and Spring's glad sunshine and soft rain;
And Autumn's witchery
Have filled my neighbor's lofts with ripened ears;
And yet small increase of my stores appears,
Only one sheaf; fair, pure
As a young lily bending to the sun.
Others rejoice to guide the loaded wain,
The vintage rings to harvest aborns again;
But I have only one;
One cluster from the true and living vine,
One jewel in my Master's crown to shine.
Master, my heart is sad;
A wearied husbandman before Thee kneels,
Through the night watches, through the live long day,
My hands essayed to work, my heart to pray,
Yet now across me steals
The chilling presage of a coming blight,
Which of the harvest sunshine pales the light.
One little sheaf; When I
Will fair have counted thousands. Yet, O Lord,
I lay it lovingly upon Thy shrine,
Giving in meekness only what is Thine.
And lo! Thy Word
Bids me in this small spark rejoice to see
A brilliant worthy King of kings, for Thee.
One human sheaf! One soul
Ransomed from sin, from darkness and from tears
Will crowned my little treasure priceless when
His Son to seek it came and dwelt with men.
And all the starry spheres
Rang with glad chorus of the angel host,
Over the finding of His loved and lost.
One never dying soul
To live forever in the world of light,
To add new luster to His angel's Name,
To wreath another chaplet for His fame,
With ever new delight
To swell the everlasting song of praise
Which only souls redeemed break full to raise.
Then, Lord, I need not faint,
Though small my heritage; Thy pure eyes can see
The love which gladly lays it at Thy feet.
And work for Jesus in itself is sweet,
If it is owned by Thee.
Let disappointment crowding o'er us press,
Such fellowship as Thine alone will bless.
And so this wintry morn,
My little sheaf in thankful hands I bring,
From the sinful hands around Thy throne,
With joy which angels never have known,
Thy praise with them I sing.
Gladly receive this blessing from Thy store,
And look in active patience up for more.
Let me but work in faith,
Not weary, though the summer days seem long,
Watching with care each tender bud and leaf,
For surely as I bring this little sheaf,
A joyful harvest song
Shall glad my spirit with its Heavenly burdens,
And round the Lord of harvest waft His praise.

Genesis and Creation.

MR. EDITOR: Dr. Abbey's article, in your issue of June 19, on "Moses' Account of the Creation," merits adverse criticism. Dr. Abbey says: "Moses does not give any account of the creation" (italics his.) Now, if Noah Webster's dictum is of any weight in the determination of philological questions, the very reverse of this is true. One definition of "account," given by Webster and a very important one, as his subjoined list of synonyms shows, is, "a statement of facts." Now, Dr. Abbey himself admits that "Moses states one fact about creation," viz.: that "God created." Hence, if Moses had never written anything except the first verse of Genesis, it would have been true that he gave us "an account of creation"—a written statement of the fact of creation.

Again Dr. Abbey says: "Creation is not historic. History relates to occurrences in and among created things, and not to the creation of them." "All history is subsequent to creation." "Now, here again we must choose between Dr. Abbey and Webster as an authority in lexicography. Webster's definition of history is "a written statement of what is known; an account of what exists or has existed." "An account of what is known to have occurred." In Genesis 1, 1, Moses says: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Did the fact here stated occur? If so, then the statement of this fact by Moses is history according to Webster. But if Dr. Abbey is correct in saying that "history does not relate to the creation of things," then the first verse of Genesis, which does relate to the creation of things, is not history. If the first verse of Genesis is not history, will Dr. Abbey please tell me what it is? Is it fiction, poetry, or what? If it is history Dr. Abbey's statement cannot be true that "history does not relate to the creation of things." Of course Dr. Abbey will not resort to the subterfuge that he intended the above statement to apply exclusively to profane history, since the whole tenor of his article shows that he uses the term in its generic sense, which, of course, includes sacred history.

Again Dr. Abbey says: "Creation ignores any and all such considerations as time, periodicity and succession of events." Moses says not a word about any time, place, mode or circumstance of the creation. He says nothing except that God created." These statements are true of the creation spoken of in the first verse of Genesis; but Dr. Abbey denies any subsequent creation. He says: "The six days alluded to in the first chapter of Genesis have no reference whatever to creation. They are not creation days, days of creation, but historic days, days giving an account of created or existing things." "In this period (six days,) however long or short it was, the history tells us great geological, astronomical or other changes took place in the arrangement and disposition of created things." Now I aver that the entire gist of the above extracts is mere dogmatism, sheer assumption, unsupported by a single scintillar of evidence, either biblical or scientific; yea, furthermore, that the statements there made are anti-scriptural and anti-scientific.

Let us first view the matter from a biblical standpoint. In the first verse of the first chapter of Genesis we are told that "God created the heaven and the earth." In the twenty-seventh verse, same chapter, we are told that "God created man in His own image." The creation of the heaven and the earth (i. e., the prima materia, the primary chemical elements of which the earth is composed) is represented as taking place before or in the beginning of the first day. The creation of man is represented as taking place during the sixth day. These two creations were separated by an interval of time, which Moses calls five days. It matters not how long or how short a period is designated by the word day—whether a hundredth part of a second or a decillion of centuries—still time intervened between the two creations. Of course Dr. Abbey's reply to this, as more than intimated in his article, will be that the word "created" has a different meaning in these two passages; that in the first verse "create" means as defined by Webster, "to bring into being; to form out of nothing;" while in the twenty-seventh verse it means to develop, evolve, arrange, or something of the sort. The so-called creation of man was not a real creation, but merely one of those "great geological, astronomical or other changes that took place during the six days in the arrangement and disposition of created things"—what Darwin calls a "development."

Of course no one denies that the human body was formed of material already existing—carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, phosphorous, lime, etc.—which was created "in the beginning," and have had probably been in existence for countless centuries; but man was not "a living soul" until "the breath of life" was "breathed" into his body. The body was mere inert matter; the breath of life, the spirit, was the man. Out of what was man's soul "developed," "evolved," "arranged," or "disposed?" Now, if Dr. Abbey is right in the supposition that man, that is his soul, was really created "in the beginning," and only developed or arranged on the sixth day, then all the commentators, theologians and divines of this and all preceding ages are greatly in error. Hence it becomes his duty to enlighten his benighted brethren, to give them some proofs that his theory is true. He has given none. His article contains dogmatic asseverations in abundance, but proofs are entirely wanting.

Has he so familiarized himself with the ancient Hebrew tongue as to assure him that Dr. Clarke is in error when he asserts that the word "bara" (created) "expresses the commencement of the existence of a thing; its egression from non-entity into entity?" The theological world will readily receive Dr. Abbey's exegesis of this Scripture if he will prove it to be true. But he surely cannot expect his theory to be received without proof. All innovators must deal largely in the prosaic thing—proof. The heliocentric theory of the universe was received only when demonstrations of its truth were given. And so of the circulation of the blood and a thousand other things. Always the onus probandi rests upon him who would overturn the faith of the world. Hence I say again: give us proof." When we ask for bread don't give us a stone.

Moreover, it seems to me exceedingly strange that such a theory should be paraded as an antidote to Darwinism. Truly, the world moves. At last we have homeopathy in theology. Darwinism develops man out of the primordial elements of matter through several successive links—tadpoles, frogs, monkeys, etc. Abbeyism develops man out of the same primordial elements without mentioning the links or stating whether there are any. Bating this defect, Abbeyism is identical with Darwinism. And yet mirabile dictu Abbeyism is advertised as a cure for Darwinism. Similia similibus curantur truly. Hereafter, when we wish to demolish Universalism, we have only to inscribe on our banner "All men will finally be saved," and the work is done. The enemy will surrender without firing a gun.

I would have it understood that I do not characterize this theory, as Darwinism in order to bring odium upon it. I merely call attention to the similarity between them. Moreover, Dr. Abbey himself first paraded the similitude though, perhaps, unconsciously. Darwinism is not essentially atheistic. I would as soon advocate Darwinism as any other ism if satisfied of its truth. I have only one objection to Darwinism and its twin brother Abbeyism, viz.: their untruth.

EDDRACK RANDOM SR.

FAITH. The oldest religious poetry that we have by "the prophet David," Moses and others—is all inspired with this one glorious theme: "The world may seem against us, wicked men may seem to triumph, God's people may cry for a time, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' but a reversal of this disorder is sure one day to come. There is One who sits serene above all this turmoil of waves and storms. And goodness, order, reason, we cannot prove it, but we know it, we feel it, we dogmatically assert it shall ultimately prevail." The oppressor may seem to flourish. The Syrian empire of the Roman may seem to be carrying all before them. But there is looming behind the veil another and a higher order. It only awaits God's time to be revealed, for history is subject to God's laws, and is no matter of caprice or chance. Man, too, will find that the little eddy of his own misused free will was being borne along the majestic, slow-paced tide that lashes in the sea. And they who have believed, who have gone out from an idolatrous world not knowing whither they went, who have trusted to the higher order and not the lower, who have lived by the ideal, not the real, will find at last that they are not deceived; that Christ, not Antichrist, rules the universe; that reason and not unreason, order, and not chaos, God, and not the devil, are supreme, and must in the end be triumphant.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Rev. H. D. D. Stratton, of Greensboro, Ala., writing of the colored Baptists in that town and vicinity, says:

"They have a pretty fair understanding of the methods of church government, and keep up their discipline very well, on the whole. There is one feature in their plan of worship that I think of extremely questionable utility—viz., the unreasonable hours they have for church attendance and the protracted character of their exercises. I believe their bell has been rung for service every night here for the last twelve months, except on Saturday; and it is quite frequently midnight and even later before they break up."

TURKEY.—There are in Turkey proper five theological schools, located at Marsovan, Harpoot, Marash, Mardin and Samokov. So large a number is made necessary by the difficulties of travel, and by difference of language. The language of instruction at Harpoot is Armenian; at Mardin, Arabic; at Marash, Turkish; at Samokov, Bulgarian; while at Marsovan four languages are hereafter to be used, viz., Greek, Armenian, Turkish and English. No student can graduate from our seminary without acquiring the ability to preach acceptably in two languages.

—A letter prepared by Secretary Evarts, protesting against the conduct of the government of Great Britain, Germany, Norway, Sweden and Denmark in continuing to allow their subjects to leave for the United States as Mormon emigrants, was read at the Cabinet meeting last week, and copies have been sent to our diplomatic representatives in those countries. The letter, it is understood, is an energetic presentation of the views of the administration on the Mormon question, and the determination on its part to make the institution of polygamy as odious as possible under existing laws.

—Missionary Societies of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge support a mission in Central Africa, which was established on a suggestion made by Dr. Livingston in 1859. It has established stations in the interior and has enjoyed a steady growth. At the late annual meeting of the society, the Bishop of London said that the question was now raised whether the time had not come for boldly resuming its forward march. Two missionaries present gave an account of the planting of the missionary station on the River Rovuma and of the missionary work in the Usambara country.

—The statistics of the Germany and Switzerland Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, are as follows: Number of preachers on trial, 70; members in full connection, 9,250; probationers, 2,102; local preachers, 50; Sunday-schools, 360; scholars, 17,353; value of church property, 1,786,848 marks; contributions for all purposes, 213,553 marks. The Evangelist has a circulation of 10,580; Kinderfreund of 10,630; Wechterstaemen quarterly of 348.

—Seven years ago there was not a Protestant Church organization in Japan; now it is stated there are 43, with a membership of 1,500. There are, in addition, 100 preaching-places; 30 boarding and day schools; 54 Sunday schools, with 2,000 scholars; and three theological schools, with 175 students; while the number of missionaries is 81; the number of native assistant preachers 95 and the number of ordained native pastors 10.

—More than two hundred opium smokers have been cured of their deadly habit within six months, at Dr. Osgood's Hospital, in connection with the Foochow Mission of the American Board. There is now a great demand by opium smokers for admission to the hospital, from eight to twelve days generally suffering to effect a cure. This greatly tends to give the missionaries a good name for her evidence among all classes of the people.

ITALY.—In the audience granted by the king to a company of Protestant missionaries, in reply to a question by the king, Signor Lanza congratulated and professor in a papal college, how one of our missionaries said that when liberty came in 1870 he profited by it to follow the dictates of his conscience; to which the king replied, "Bene, bene." Another, Signor Fasulo, said that twelve years ago he had been enlightened, and ever since he had felt happy.

—The final decision of the German government on the religious questions at issue with the Vatican has been communicated to the latter. It is that all of the exiled clergy who ask permission will be allowed to return to Germany; the May laws will be tacitly suspended, provided the clergy obey the common law; and all fresh nominations are to be submitted to the government. The Pope is satisfied with these terms.

The American Baptist Missionary Union increased its list of communicants enormously last year. It reports a total of 50,477, against 46,880—a clear gain of 3,597. The most of this increase is accounted for by the large accessions to the Telugu mission in India. Last year this mission had 5,611 members; now it has 10,851. Of the total of communicants, 38,159 are in Asia and 12,009 are in Europe.

—The Bishop of Oxford, in calling upon the clergy of his diocese to offer prayers for the weather, writes: "Preachers may do well to point out that our increased ability to prognosticate the weather has not given us the slightest power to control it, and in this time of general depression to ask whether the season of marvelous prosperity which preceded it was thankfully received or profitably spent."

—In Zaragoza, Spain, a Romish priest challenged a Bible colporteur for a fight. The Mayor had forbidden the sale of Bibles in the city. When remonstrated with, he replied: "I'm a Catholic; you are a Protestant. Every man fights for his own house. You are determined to sell your Bibles; I am determined you shall not."

—Polynesia is being quite rapidly evangelized. The Wesleyan Missionary Society has now on the different islands 37,000 church members, the London Missionary Society has 20,000, connected with the Hawaiian Evangelical Association are 8,739, and the Presbyterian Missions have 783. Altogether there are about 68,000, which number is supposed to represent not far from 340,000 of population.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church has now 6,448 communicants, an increase of 3,110 for the last year, the largest gain in any previous year except probably the first. There are 8,000 children in the Sunday-schools, and 100 ministers. Fifteen new congregations were added last year, and six new church buildings were opened.

—On Friday, July 25, four bishops were consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, London. The Archbishop of Canterbury laid hands successively on Dr. How, Dr. Barclay, Dr. Speechly and Dr. Ridley, who rose as Bishops of Bedford, Jerusalem, Cochin and New Caledonia—representing the four quarters of the globe.

—Protestant missionaries in Turkey say that young Turks who are sent to America to be educated, in order that they may return and labor for Christianity among their countrymen, aim to obtain a medical rather than a religious education, so as to practice medicine profitably when they get home.

—The United Presbyterian Synod, in special session at Edinburgh, has approved the findings of the committee appointed to deal with Rev. David Macrae, and formally put him out of the ministry of the church. Mr. Macrae was declared guilty of heresy on the question of eternal punishment.

—The Primitive Methodists of England recently in Conference at Leeds, reported 182,877 members, a decrease of 171; and 1,135 ministers, a decrease of two. There was during the year an increase of 62 chapels, and 86 Sunday schools, with over 6,000 scholars.

—A Chinese Congregational Church was organized by a council held at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, June 8. The Rev. Dr. Damon was elected Moderator, and baptized the six persons who united with the new church by profession of their faith.

—An extensive revival is in progress in Germany, and promises to be fruitful of good results to the churches. The movement extends along the entire Rhine Valley, and at Duesseldorf alone two hundred conversions are reported.

—The English Presbyterian Synod has taken up the subject of providing work for its licentiates, and is now arranging, through its central offices in London, for the regular and orderly hearing of her licentiates in vacant charges.

—The Independent Methodist Churches of England reported, at their annual meeting at Ashton-under-Lyne, an increase of 385 members. They compose a very small body, but are very active in evangelistic work.

—Dr. Robert Moffat, than whom no one is better informed on whatever concerns that part of the world, says that "mission work all over South Africa has been thrown back fifty years by the present war with the Zulus."

—The English Church Union has held its nineteenth anniversary. An increase of members was reported. Resolutions were adopted expressing sympathy with those who have been prosecuted for ritualistic practices.

—The Southern Methodist bishops are allowed a salary of $3,000 each, which includes house rent and traveling expenses. They are just this much worse off than the Northern bishops as regards remuneration.

—The Old Testament Company of the American Bible Revision Committee has revised Kings and Chronicles a second time. The New Testament Company has finished the final revision of the gospels.

English papers comment on the deficiency in the supply of candidates for the ministry of the Established Church, and in Ireland it has become a serious question how the churches are to be supplied.

—The First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Mass., whose pulpit is now vacant, is two hundred and forty-two years old, and has had only eight pastors during its entire existence.

—The missionaries of the American Board in Japan have established a new mission in Okayama, a city of 35,000 inhabitants. Seventy-five natives attended the first service.

—Father Curci, the eminent theologian, is at work on his great commentary on the scriptures, in which he will incorporate the aggregate teachings of German biblical writers.

—A Protestant Church of no one denomination will soon be built in Marquette county, Michigan, and an iron mining company has contributed $1,000 to aid in the work.

Père Hyacinthe Loyson delivered the first of his four discourses in Paris to a small and inferior assemblage, says a London paper. He has illness with Prince Napoleon.

—The membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Canada is about 8,000. Preparations are making for observing the fiftieth anniversary.

—There are 1,000 Sunday-schools belonging to the French Sunday-School Society.

—Bishop Herzog, Old Catholic Bishop in Switzerland, has consented to administer confirmation in Père Hyacinthe's congregation in Paris.

—The receipts of the American Bible Society for June were $150,635 89. The number of volumes issued was 98,273.

—A new Shaker Society has been formed among the Poles—opposed to wine, meat and marriage. Tea-drinking is permitted.

—It is stated that the Pope has offered to John Henry Newman a cardinal's hat, which has been declined.

WILL-O'-THE-WISP.

O wandering Will-o'-the-Wisp,
Will you never find the way?
I watch the wavering spark
Of your lantern down in the dark,
And I think I hear you say:
"Lost! lost! lost!
For a thousand years and a day!"

O, tell me, Will-o'-the-Wisp,
Are you a spirit at play—
An aimless child? Did you fall
Over the jasper wall
Of Paradise, that you say,
"Lost! lost! lost!
For a thousand years and a day?"

Dear little Will-o'-the-Wisp,
Come up from the fens, I pray;
For heaven is not so far
As the very nearest star,
And the song we sing always
Is "Saved! saved! saved!
Forever and a day."

—Willie Awake.

The Frolicsome Fly.

Among the many thousands of insects that come to visit us every summer, there are few which seem more glad to see us, and who like better to stay with us, than the frolicsome fly. How lightly and airily he whisks in at the open window, or door-way, with a hum and a buzz of his wings that seems to say "Hello! Here we are! glad to see you once more." And then as he goes humming all round the room to see what changes have occurred since he was last here, and, as he buzzes against all the windows, taking a peep into the garden and across the street, you can almost hear him talking to himself. If you could hear him, you would probably find that he was making good resolutions for his summer life. He says to himself: "Now I'm going to stay with these people all summer, for they have fallen into shocking bad habits since the flies were here last summer, and I will make it my duty, with the help of the other good flies in this house and neighborhood, to give these people a good course of training in self control, in early rising, and in many other good and valuable traits of character, which it is desirable that every person, old and young, should possess. My first duty will be to fly into the different sleeping-rooms very early in the morning, and, after buzzing in the ears of the lazy sleepers to make them have bad dreams, I will gently wander up and down their faces, and give them a life that will be pretty sure to awaken them, and I will fly and buzz about them all day, and give them plenty of chances of controlling their tempers and learning not to mind little annoyances!"

I, certainly, think the fly would say that he bit you, but he would be wrong, just as every one else is who says that flies bite. For they don't bite, because they cannot bite. They have n't any jaws to bite with. But the tongue is very large, and the end of it, which is round, or oval, or heart-shaped, has little ridges running across it, so that it looks just like a little file; and it is a file, and a very good one, too. So the fly does not bite, but he rubs this file of his so rapidly, and it is so hard, that you might as well be bitten, as far as the effect of waking you up is concerned.

Then the fly continues:

"But, after all, it's pretty discouraging trying to do anything for these people, they are so ungrateful and cruel. They always abuse me, call me a great nuisance, and I verily believe that they would not hesitate to kill me, if they had a good chance. If they do not appreciate the training I am giving them now, I should think they might remember the work I did for them before I became a fly, and be thankful for that. Perhaps, though, they think that I was always a fly, and nothing else, so I must not judge them too harshly."

Well, that is, of course, had a mother fly, and she had a lot of very small, shiny, brownish-white eggs, and with each one of these little eggs fastened there came out a funny, little, yellowish-white maggot, not very active, but very, very hungry. The appetite that these little fellows have is something very wonderful, and this it is that helps them to be of such good use to man. For while they are maggots they live around the barns, and eat up all decaying material that is filling the air with poisonous gases which might bring sickness to a great many of us. One little maggot could not eat very much, of course; but there are so many of them, that what they all eat amounts to a great many bushels wagon-loads every year. This is the good work that the fly spoke of when he said that he had chances to do good for us, before he became a fly; and you see he was right. After the little maggot has eaten all he can eat, has grown all he can, he is about a third of an inch long. He then becomes shorter and fatter, ages calling, remains quiet, and in a few days changes into a small, dark reddish-brown chrysalis, about a quarter of an inch long. The only live form from eight to fourteen days as a chrysalis; and then, some bright morning, the skin cracks all along the back, and out comes Mr. Fly. He is a little stiff and lazy at first; he comes out drowsily, stretching his legs and slowly waving his wings, after his long sleep of nearly two weeks. But the warm sunlight soon takes the cramps out of all his joints, and, spreading his wings, he takes his first flight.

He keeps frolicking on until he reaches the woods, where he finds two flies so much like himself that he thinks they must be his brothers; so he alights near them and introduces himself. They are not his brothers but they belong to another family and are sort of cousins of his.

They have nothing like a tube or rasp, as he has, but in place of it they have a proboscis, and on the upper side of it, in a little groove, there are four slender, very sharp, needle-like organs. They can thrust these sharp little needles into an animal and then suck out the blood. This is the way, too, in which a mosquito, who is also a fly, "bites," as we usually say; yet, of course he does n't really bite, but he "pierces" you with his little needles, of which he has six.

The Sabbath-Breaker.

In a quiet village, on the shores of a beautiful lake, lived a man of some wealth. He disregarded the Sabbath entirely, and pursued his business or pleasure as best suited his convenience. He commenced building a boat, principally for pleasure excursions on the lake. While he was proceeding with the enterprise, which, it was whispered abroad, would afford opportunity for Sunday sailing, he was called on by a minister, who inquired about the boat, and expostulated with him, as the enterprise would increase the wildness and immorality of their village. "I am afraid," said the minister, "your boat will prove a Sabbath-breaker." The man looked him in the face, and, with much assurance, said: "Yes, it will; and that's just what I'll name my boat. I've been thinking some time what to call her, and you have just hit it. I thank you for the suggestion. The boat shall be called 'The Sabbath-Breaker.'" As he said this he hails the minister good-day, with a chuckle at his evident surprise and mortification. The building went on, and especially on Sabbath. She was soon ready to be launched, and was launched on Sabbath, and named "The Sabbath-Breaker," amid the cheers of some twenty or thirty half-intoxicated men. An old sailor or two shook their heads at the way she struck the water; but the folly and sin of such an owner hid his eyes to the truth. She was rigged and fitted for an excursion. She must go out on Sabbath. A general invitation was given, and number crowded on board. O, the steamer was calling the name in large letters, "The Sabbath-Breaker." She put out. Several, seized by an indefinite dread as they read the name over them, sprang on shore; others would have done so, but she was off. She sailed well enough for awhile. The timid felt reassured, and music and mirth began. But scarcely four hours had elapsed when the boat was struck by a flaw of wind, which came very suddenly upon her. Confusing reigned on board. Scarcely an effort was made. She keeled almost instantly over, and sank to the bottom. Now, what an outcry! But soon all was over. Forty souls, mostly youths, had found a watery grave, and just above the surface of the lake floated the flag, bearing the inscription, "The Sabbath-Breaker," proclaiming to all the passers-by that there is a God in heaven who will not be despised with impunity. A Toy City.

A notable example of patient, long-continued ingenious, but utterly useless labor, is described by a correspondent of the Amherst (Mass.) Transcript, as on exhibition in Boston. It is the work of a German-American cabinet-maker, Joseph Bergmann, who has been engaged upon it for seventeen years. It represents a city, built in the Swiss style, with mansard roofs, bay-windows and a series of balconies with verandas, etc. The structure stands on a base, representing a hillside; a ledge of rocks with underground railways, etc. There are sixty-five automatic workmen at work in the mills and about the village, as natural as life. The motive power of the mills is furnished by two overshot water wheels, the lower one taking the waste water and running at right angles with the upper one. The remainder of the machinery, as well as the automatic workmen, is run by weights. The city or village, surrounded by trees and shrubbery, drives and walks, a playing fountain, a running stream, a miniature lake and all that goes to make up the picturesque in nature. The basement of the principal building is occupied by a linseed oil stamp mill in full operation, with three workmen. On either side is a tunnel through which trains of cars pass. At the rear of the building is a blacksmith's shop; the bellows are blowing, the fire on the forge blows, and two blacksmiths are busily engaged in alternately heating a bar of iron and pounding it on the anvil, the strokes of their hammers being distinctly audible. A third is shoeing a horse, the proprietor is at work, and the wife of the latter is just entering, bearing her husband's dinner. The third story is occupied by a grist mill, the sash-mill being below, both in full operation. One man is dressing the stones for the hopper, while a second supplies the hopper with grain from a neighboring room; the bolt completes the mill. Some from his stumber, resigns it to a natural manner, and passes in and out of the door in going it after him each time. An elevator ascends on the outside from the basement with a load of grain, dumps it, and descends again to be refilled. Just below the elevator the millwright goes up and down on a ladder. Under an oak tree's kindly shade, near the banks of a murmuring stream, sit two lovers, who, by their motions and gestures, would appear to be carrying on an animated conversation. To the right center of the building is a saw-mill. The logs, propelled on the carriage, the upright saw passes through. It slowly, it is then gigged back, the next at the ends sets the log for a new cut, and a fellow workman opens the little gate, restarting the machinery. A third man is engaged sharpening a handspike with an ax. The fifth and top floor of the edifice is supposed to be the residence of the proprietor. The windows are sashed, the doors paneled, and the floor made of matched boards not over an eighth of an inch wide. Paintings with gilt frames, and lace curtains adorn the apartments, which is complete in all the details belonging to a drawing-room. A similar exhibition in Brooklyn recently gave no evidence of the skillful labor attributed to Bergmann's work, as described above. Whether it was the same or not we do not know.—Scientific American.

OFFICE.—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

A Pure Journalism.

This is one of the greatest needs of the day. Our people must have newspapers that give them the news, political, commercial and financial. They must be abreast with the times in its spirit of enterprise and progress, and furnish all that the intelligent mind craves in regard to the affairs of the world. There are many publications, weekly and monthly, devoted to religion, agriculture, science and literature, free from objections on the score of morals. But there are few secular dailies in which religion is not travestied and made the butt of ridicule, and the occasion of coarse and stupid jests. Where can we find one that does not promote the desecration of the Sabbath, the spirit of gambling, and the most dissipating recreations, through its advertisements and editorial commendations of lotteries, theaters, Sunday excursions and drinking saloons? The advertisements prominently displayed in these journals, and flaunted in the face of the public, are many of them such as no head of a family would care to have, his children read. They are such as should bring a blush to the cheek of womanhood, and are calculated to taint and poison the minds of youth. Some secular journals are much better than others, and pure in their editorial tone, but we know of very few that in their news and advertisements do not foster vice and immorality.

Christian parents are careful to exclude obscene and bad books from their households, and yet some of our most popular and respectable secular newspapers reek with the scandals, social crimes and obscene drollery of the slums of county and city. The educating influence of much of the press, as now conducted, is worse than that of the typical French novel. There is scarcely an issue of many of the leading secular papers that does not, in their advertising and news, whatever may be their tone otherwise, contain matter that is utterly corrupt and corrupting. Their presence in our homes is a menace and a peril to the purity of our children, and their influence is to antagonize the best religious teachings and counsels of pious parents. Few of these papers directly advocate licentiousness, intemperance, gambling or immorality, but the indirect and powerful influence is in this direction. We may keep our children out of bad company and away from resorts of dissipation, but they find in the papers the very scenes and contaminating suggestions from which so much care is taken to seclude them. Mr. Comstock may succeed in repressing what is called "obscene literature," but until there is a reform in our respectable journalism the streams of pollution will flow on, and the slime will be deposited in every home.

Is there no help for this state of things? The journalists plead necessity. Somebody will publish scandal and the revolting details of crime, and somebody will advertise the business and enterprises of the devil. There is a demand for this kind of news, and for this style of literature, and journalists, in order to live and prosper, cater to a prurient and depraved taste. They, however, not only yield to a vicious demand, but, in doing so, they create, perpetuate and increase it. There ought to be enough of good people and of religious people in almost any section of our country to support pure secular journals. In our large cities it might be tried with some hope of success. Is it not practicable to have concert of action on the part of those who desire a pure press? There are advertisers and subscribers enough of this sort to make their wishes felt. Their patronage ought to be of as much value as that of the lottery company and the whisky dealers.

We admit that a daily paper is a necessity in business circles, and that a great weekly will be had and read, but, in order to this, must Christian people continue to support a press that is undermining the morals of society? A religious daily is probably out of the question, and our religious weeklies, with their present patronage, cannot altogether meet the demand. The possible thing would be an independent secular paper, with such support from the religious part of the country as to enable it to live without advertising sin, or publishing matters of corrupting and demoralizing tendency. Religious people are not sufficiently alive to the real tendencies of the secular press as now conducted. They are not sufficiently discriminating in regard to the moral and religious tone of the papers they patronize. If we cannot have what we would, our selection should be based upon that which is best for the purity of our homes.

There is a criminal indifference on the part of religious people in regard to the papers they read and patronize. They support journals that advocate the very evils and vices which their pulpits denounce, and the discipline of the churches condemns. They light sin in the home and the Sunday-school, and in their personal associations, and patronize and pay to strengthen it in the papers they read. The Sunday paper, with its columns of lottery advertisements, Sunday excursions, indelicate medical cards, and notices of theatrical exhibitions, is laid on the table beside the Bible and the Sunday-School Lessons. The secular press would, no doubt, be purer than it is if religious people were more careful and more consistent in their efforts to choose the best, and to support those who are endeavoring to elevate the tone of journalism. The conscience of the religious world needs to be aroused to this matter.

Surely something can be done to abate the great evil, and to repress this flood of untoward influences. At least Christian men can be more discriminating in their patronage of the secular journals, and they can do a hundred fold more than they are doing to foster and support religious papers. Besides repression, they must resort to the counteracting influences of a literature that they know to be wholesome. While the devil so largely drives the secular press, the religious press, under a better inspiration, must be kept at work.

Giving to Missions.

Some persons affect to doubt the permanence of the missionary spirit in the church. They point to the long period when Christianity was comparatively inactive, or had lost its evangelical character in its manifold political alliance. They tell us the present development of a sublime moral aggressiveness will soon decline, and give place to the old corruptions, whose germs appear to linger in the church. It will, indeed, be time enough to refute such an objection when it begins to become true. But, in the meantime, we may refresh our faith with the overwhelming evidence that the cause of Christian missions is fast asserting its deep and vital hold on the religious conscience of the world. That Divine Providence has opened the world to our efforts, that civilization is ready with its myriad organs to assist us, that the spirit of the heathen world is eminently favorable to the propagation of the gospel; all of this is undeniably true. A question of supreme importance is: How does the church regard her opportunity? What estimate does the Christian intelligence of Europe and America place on the disposition of the East toward Christianity? What is the depth and measure of our faith in the work? Is our faith a mere sentiment, or is it a practical, common-sense conception of duty, which feels the obligation and strives to discharge it? If we look at the answer to these vital questions, from the standpoint of liberality to this cause, we must be more than encouraged, we must be amazed and profoundly grateful. In half a century the contributions to this work have steadily grown from practically nothing to the large sum of $6,000,000 annually. But the most cheering fact of all is, that recently individual bequests to this work have assumed a magnitude and value the most sanguine dreamer never expected. Look for a moment at

A Southern Methodist, M. E. Ch., S.	$1,000
A Georgia Methodist, M. E. Ch., S.	2,000
A Kentucky Methodist (M. E. Ch., S.)	60,000
Moses D. Eggs of New Orleans	50,000
To the London Missionary Society, A Jubilee Fund Africa	25,000
Bequests to the Missionary Societies of the Church
Missionary Society	20,000
Mr. Strang, Presbyterian	30,000
Mr. ——, Boston, Congregational	60,000
Mr. ——, Free Church of Scotland	100,000
Mr. ——, Church of England	150,000
Mr. ——, Independent	175,000
Mr. ——, Presbyterian	200,000
Mr. ——, New England Congregational	250,000
The Duke of Newcastle, Australia	1,000,000

All of this splendid sum of nearly $3,000,000 is in excess of the regular income of the boards, and much of it, perhaps the most of it, is given for the expressed purpose of enlarging the work. We wish to make several observations on this table:

1. It vindicates the integrity of the management of the work. Here and there the board may have made mistakes. Unfruitful spots may have been selected; unqualified men may have been sent; bad economy may have embarrassed the work. But, on the whole, the work has been conscientiously and wisely managed, or we would not read of such immense sums being left to it. Such a cool, clear-headed, calculating business man as Mr. Otis would not give a million dollars unless he knew how it was going to be directed, and had confidence in the practical results of its appropriation. How this princely giver rebukes the ignorant selfishness which tries to escape the obligation to give by the silly charge that it takes four dollars out of five to send it to the heathen!

2. Some of these gifts, notably the largest one, were from men who had personal observation of the field. Dr. Miller lived for a number of years in India. He saw the practical working of the missionary cause. An intelligent observer, he could judge pretty well whether Christianity was making such progress as justified belief in its final and permanent occupation of the country. His generous gift of $100,000 is the most satisfactory evidence he could give of his belief that missions pay. What magnificent faith had the generous Bishop who left more than a million to carry forward the work in Australia! And yet here in America we find persons who honestly question whether the whole thing of converting the heathen is not after all a visionary scheme. We knew a good brother, intelligent and liberal to the church, who did grumble at throwing away a quarter on missions.

3. It enhances our estimate of the moral significance of these gifts to know that they were the spontaneous acts of Christian faith and love. In no single case, so far as we can learn, was there brought to bear any undue influence to obtain these offerings. They are the fruits of the Spirit of God; the free impulse of a high and holy devotion to the all-absorbing privilege of glorifying Christ. Many of these donors withhold their names from the public, lest the glory due to God should be divided with them. It is a noble tribute to the vitality of our holy religion that in this age of sordid materialism we witness an unprecedented benevolence.

Great as are the means thus placed in the hands of the church, the opportunity exceeds them. A hundred centers are waiting to be occupied. A hundred times the amount available could be judiciously appropriated. It will be a calamity if these generous gifts diminish the regular collections. The effect ought to be to double them. They furnish us with a powerful argument for an enlarged liberality. What will we do this year? America never reaped such harvests as now gladden her garners. Our exports were never larger. We never made so much wheat, cotton, sugar, and the various products of our widely-diversified territory, for market. Returning prosperity smiles everywhere. Peace is enthroned in our land. The divine blessing is on our churches, and our converts are numbered by thousands. Our missions, too, have commenced a new era of progress, and are crying for help. Mexico is now at our very doors, and the necessity of planting Protestantism there arises to almost a national duty. The boundless West, with its rapidly arriving millions, calls for the gospel. We have the means. Oh, may the Spirit of God baptize our church with true gospel benevolence in giving to missions.

Education.

BY REV. J. LEWIS, A.M., D. D.

FIFTH PAPER.

In our last paper we presented some arguments to show that Christian education is more promotive of intellectual growth, discipline and culture than the rival system. It was shown that this is true as to those students who become Christians. But how is it in regard to those who are not converted? We are convinced by actual observation that the same truth holds concerning this class. And the reasons are not difficult to be discovered. They have a good example in the discharge of college duty. This is not without its force upon them. Again, as before remarked, the influence which may fail to secure their conversion does, in most instances, save them from vicious and disorderly habits. These are the greatest hinderances to success in the prosecution of study. The tone of morals is unquestionably higher at the schools of the church than at those of the State. Even Herod, through the personal influence of John the Baptist, "did many things and heard him gladly." There prevails at these institutions of the church a sobriety of spirit which is friendly to literary pursuits. There is another fact which is worthy of notice in this connection. Since the Confederate war nearly all our State institutions, and some of those under the control of the churches, have been visited by a sort of military epidemic. Much time that might profitably be given to science and the classics is wasted in military exercises. The spirit begotten of this attempt to combine the martial and the literary is not favorable to scholarly attainment. Indeed, one of the greatest captains of this century once remarked: "A man of enlightened Christian sensibilities is totally unfit for the profession of a soldier." Be that as it may, the grade of scholarship has invariably suffered at those institutions of learning which have substituted the military for the academic regimen. But even where this is not the case the average scholarship and worth of the alumni of church schools are higher than those of State schools. Fewer of them are ruined by dissipation. A larger proportion of them become ministers of the gospel and successful educators of the young. And nearly all of them become useful and honorable members of society. To those who wish to investigate this question further we recommend the careful study of the chapter on "The Educational Function of the Church," in a work on "Progress," by the lamented Dr. William J. Sasnett. For the present enough has been said to establish the proposition with which we set out: That education by the church promises more than education by the State, both for the morals and for the mind of the student.

Dr. Hunt, one of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in a recent address at Chautauqua, on the Book Concern, speaks as follows of the financial results:

Let it be understood that the prime object of the establishment and maintenance of the Book Concern was not, and is not, to make money, but to furnish religious reading for our people. And yet it is necessary to make money to secure the capital essential to the business. A vast sum is locked up in buildings, machinery and stock.

Yet while money is not the primary object, we doubt if a printing-house in the world can furnish a better financial record. There has been a constant drain upon the Book Concern for the general purpose of the church. The theory has been, if no other provision is made for expenses, the Book Concern must foot the bill.

But with these drafts, we submit the following figures: After the fire in 1836, the capital for the commencement of business again, including the $89,991 98 donated by the church, was $281,650 71. The net capital June 30, 1878, was $1,009,412 43. Increase in net capital, which appears in the form of profits, $729,761 69. But these figures do not show all the facts. The records show that the Book Concern at New York has paid for objects outside of its own business since 1836, by order of the General Conference, the sum of $2,120,893 35. This amount is made up of the sum paid the Church South, the sum paid for the Bishops' salaries and traveling expenses, dividends to the Annual Conferences, deficiencies in expenses of delegates to the General Conferences, local papers established by the General Conferences, and other bills ordered paid by that body. This whole sum has been paid out of profits of the business, which would otherwise have been added to the capital. We have, however, this summary to present for forty-two years; that is, since 1836: Net gain in capital, $729,761 69; paid outside of the business, by order of General Conference, $2,120,893 35. Total profits, $2,850,655 04.

Other houses may add their profits to their capital for the purpose of increasing their facilities, or divide them among the proprietors; but the Book Concern has paid out its profits for church interests from year to year. You will see from these figures that the Methodist Book Concern, under the management of editors selected by the General Conference, shows a clear profit of $2,850,655 04, being an average yearly profit of $67,872 73. If the world has a parallel in the history of religious or benevolent publishing establishments, we have never seen the record.

We have spoken of the New York Book Concern alone. If we had taken the Western house into our calculations, the proportions would not have been materially changed. Abating the losses from the Chicago fire, we doubt if any Western city can furnish a better financial record. Neither house has ever asked an extension of time from its creditors, and no bank ever protested one of its notes.

A Faithful Minister.

The only minister of our church who remained in Memphis during the present epidemic was Rev. J. D. Stewart, a local preacher, who died there of yellow fever August 26. We read his letters to the Western Methodist with deep interest, and greatly admired the Christian heroism displayed by him in remaining to minister to a plague-stricken people. He died in the discharge of duty, and he could not have died in a better cause, nor to better purpose. The Western Methodist, noticing his death says:

Every week heretofore we have given a letter from Memphis. Our readers will mourn with us the death of the writer of those letters. August 15, we received a dispatch from Mr. Henry White, informing us that on account of sickness our correspondent could not furnish his usual letter. Sunday morning his name appeared in the list of persons sick with yellow fever. For special reasons, we indulged a strong hope of his recovery, and yet not without fear. Tuesday afternoon we were going to dispatch and inquire as to his condition, but just then the sad news came that our friend and brother had passed away. In the meridian of life, he died at his post, doing his work as pastor of Georgia Street Church—leaving a wife recently married and three daughters, whose mother was numbered last year among the victims of yellow fever. May God help the widow and the orphans!

Jonathan D. Stewart we have known from boyhood in his father's house in Winchester, Tenn., at Cumberland University, and then at Florence Wesleyan University, of which he was a graduate. He was a scientific and classical scholar, a successful educator, and a gifted preacher. For a number of years, in the schoolroom and in the pulpit at and near Memphis, he has done good service. In his special life work as a professional teacher, he followed the example of his eminent and older brother Lieut. Gen. A. P. Stewart, now Chancellor of the University of Mississippi; and, like that brother, he was ever ready to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. Indeed, for some time, of late, he has been uncommonly zealous as a preacher, expressing the most earnest desire to devote himself entirely to the work of the ministry. At last, quietly and bravely as ever did the Lieutenant General stake his life upon the battle field, did this heroic pastor devote himself to death in behalf of his people in the midst of pestilence. Whether, in view of all facts, the sacrifice should have been made, is a question which he answered for himself—the result, whatever else it shows, shows his name recorded among the martyrs, his body in the tomb, and his spirit with saints above.

Death of Rev. H. Copeland.

Rev. H. Copeland, a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference, and for a number of years residing in British Honduras, died at his residence, Orange Grove, British Honduras, July 24. Bro. Copeland was a man of deep piety and of good repute among his brethren. He went to British Honduras soon after the war, in company, we believe, with Rev. Levi Pearce and others. His son, James B. Copeland, who was with him at the time of his death, writing July 28, says:

I write to announce to you the death of my father, Rev. H. Copeland. He died very peacefully on the night of the twenty-fourth of July, 1879, at half-past eleven o'clock. He has been confined to his bed for about two months, but bore his sufferings patiently, never uttering a word of complaint.

To the question: "Are you ready to die?" he answered: "O, yes, I will soon be with Jesus." In the evening before he died we told him we had just received some new Advocates. "O," he says, "but I can't read them." We also told him that one told of the death of Bro. Montgomery. To that he answered: "I feared it, poor fellow!"

Bro. Montgomery was the only minister in Mississippi who corresponded with him after he came to this country, and he truly loved him. They have doubtless met in heaven, never to part again. God help us all to meet them there. He loved the ADVOCATE.

Oh, Mr. Editor, pray for us. It is a sad thing to lose a loving father in a country where there are many Christian friends, but here they are few, and the bereavement is sad indeed.

The Three Hundred Thousand Second.

The Book Committee of the Southern Methodist Publishing House at a meeting September 1, announced that the sum of three hundred thousand dollars has been secured in subscriptions for the four per cent. bonds. The action of the Book Committee will be given next week. The following, from the Book Agent, is all that we have space for at present:

TO THE SUBSCRIBERS TO FOUR PER CENT. BONDS.

You have seen that the three hundred thousand dollars asked for to relieve the Southern Methodist Publishing House has been secured. The Book Agent is instructed to make collections as "rapidly as possible." He takes this method of asking all those who have subscribed to forward the money at the earliest possible date. On its receipt certificates will be returned and held by the subscribers till the bonds are prepared, registered and ready to be delivered. The importance of a speedy settlement with the creditors will be appreciated by every one interested in the fortunes of the House.

Note particularly.—Moneys sent should be in drafts or checks on Nashville or New York banks, payable to the order of J. B. McFerrin, Book Agent. Where these cannot be procured send by express or postal order.

Many brethren, I presume, will calculate on paying at the time and place of the meeting of their respective Annual Conferences. If the money cannot be safely remitted before the Conference meets, please be ready at that time. The agent, or Dr. Young, or some one else authorized to receive and receipt, will be present with the certificates as provided for by the action of the Committee. In the absence of the Book Agent, L. D. Palmer, Business Manager, will sign the certificates for moneys sent to Nashville. Now, brethren, let me act promptly, and the work will soon be done.

J. B. McFERRIN, Book Agent.

All our church papers are requested to give the foregoing two or three insertions.

The Temperance Alliance of Louisiana, at a meeting in New Orleans, Friday night, September 5, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Alliance cause to be circulated to the citizens of this State, through the most speedy agency, a letter calling their attention to the vital necessity of selecting candidates for the Legislature who will oppose the sale of intoxicating liquor on Sunday.

We should think a majority of the voters in the State would be opposed to Sunday liquor traffic. The temperance men must be on the alert, or the politicians will get ahead of them. There must be made a square issue between the whisky power, and the advocates of sobriety and the Sabbath. The candidates must be made to define their position on these questions. Those who dodge or hesitate, if nominated, should be scratched from the ticket, and better men substituted.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—There has been no perceptible increase of yellow fever since our last report. For the week ending Sunday, September 7, there were four deaths from this disease. No new cases have appeared for several days. All that have occurred have been in a limited area in the Fourth District. Comparatively few of our city physicians have had any cases in their practice. The ten orphan children of Gen. Hood, remaining in the house where their parents and sister died, have thus far escaped attack. The general health was never better at this season of the year. The public schools open on Monday next, the fifteenth instant. Absentees are returning, and business, where not trammeled by quarantines, is opening as usual in the early fall.

The poets are coming to the rescue of the exodus movement. One Sylvanus Lane has an ebullition in a recent number of the Pittsburg Christian Advocate. It is entitled: "The Exodus, or the Bondsman's Cry, and Humanity's Answer." It is too choice a piece of genius inspired to be marred by an extract. We give it at full length for the instruction and entertainment of our readers. It is to be sung to the tune, "Hold the Fort," and can be used in the Sunday-schools and prayer meetings, along with the song with which many are unfortunately so familiar.

Hail, ye Christians, free and happy,
Hear the Bondsman's cry.
God has free, but Pharaoh holds us
Slaves deep and starved we die.

Chorus.
We remember, we remember,
Nothing help to you,
Trusting God we triumph the faithful
Who were always true.

Ho, ye soldiers, brave and loyal,
Hear your servants plead.
War broke chains, but peace forgets us;
Guard the rights ye freed.

Chorus.—We remember, etc.

Ho, ye millions, rich and peaceful,
Hear the exiles' prayer.
Day by day your products bless you,
Have ye aught to spare?

Chorus.—We remember, etc.

For the Mexican Mission.

REV. DR. PARKER—Dear Sir: Enclosed I send you a draft for $48, which amount I am instructed to remit to you from the Waterproof Sunday-School Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, with the request that you forward the same to Rev. Mr. Patterson for the benefit of the Mexican Mission, to be expended as it may seem best in his judgment.

Respectfully,

MILTON BOSLEY, Secretary.

WATERPROOF, LA., Sept. 1, 1879.

The above account was put into a bill of exchange and remitted at once.—ED. AD.

The effects of the storm, Monday, September 1, were more disastrous than we supposed. The most serious loss here was the destruction of 18 coal boats, valued at $200,000. The damage to the crops in Southern Louisiana is very great. By a note from Bro. Sawyer, in another column, it will be seen that the roof of our church in Baton Rouge was much injured, and that new and beautiful fresco badly defaced. The destruction of property, especially of sugar houses, on the Teche, Lafourche, and on the Mississippi river above New Orleans, was unparalleled in the history of Louisiana. The loss, including injury to the growing crops, is estimated at millions of dollars.

Rev. J. A. H. Jones, president of Port Gibson Collegiate Academy, Port Gibson, Miss., writing September 2, says:

Am girding myself for the labors of another session. God has encouraged me in permitting me to see all dry borders, except one, join our church and profess religion.

We have greatly strengthened the faculty of the Port Gibson Collegiate Academy. Increased our facilities for successful teaching. Reduced the charges for tuition, board, etc., to $180 for the ten months.

Next session begins September 24, and ends June 30, 1880.

Prof. W. H. N. Megruder gave us a call on Tuesday of this week. He was on his return from Nashville where he had been to enter his son at Vanderbilt. The boys from the Collegiate Institute, Baton Rouge, always stand high in the colleges and universities. The Professor informs us that the Collegiate Institute opens September 24. The health of Baton Rouge and of the entire river region is excellent.

It is gratifying to witness the hearty interest taken in the children of Gen. Hood. Margarete, whose bakery is so well known in New Orleans, sent them a $500 United States four per cent. bond, and contributions are coming in from all parts of the United States. Through this noble benevolence the children are likely to be well provided for.

We are glad to see that old landmark of New Orleans journalism, the Picayune, out in a new dress. The city would hardly be itself without the daily appearance of this enterprising sheet. We do not know how old the Picayune is, but it is more than a generation ago that we began to read it.

Conkling's man for Governor of New York, A. B. Cornell, was nominated by the Republican Convention at Saratoga on the first ballot. Notwithstanding the recent and previous scandals, the New York Senator is still all-powerful in his party.

Rev. Robert Randle, presiding elder of Shreveport district, Louisiana Conference, writes us: "Many are being regenerated and added to the church."

Books and Periodicals.

THE WAY OF SALVATION. By Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville, Tenn., Southern Methodist Publishing House. 1879.

This is a 16mo, 176 pages, and for excellence of paper, typography, and beauty of binding, is ahead of anything we have seen from our Nashville Publishing House. The work is dedicated to Bishop Kavanaugh, and was written, as the author states, "To meet an urgent demand for a plain, concise statement of the way of salvation." There are three chapters which treat the following topics in their order: What Is Salvation? What Has God Done for Our Salvation? What Must I Do to be Saved? About one half of the volume is taken up with an appendix, containing notes on the Witness of the Spirit, Justification by Faith, and on the Church and Sacraments. Throughout the work are liberal quotations from the best hymns. We like to see the old hymns honored in this way. They are full of gospel meat. Dr. Summers is sound in doctrine, and has given us a valuable book for the edification of Christians and seekers after God. We should like to see copies of this excellent little volume in our Sunday-school libraries, and in the homes of our people. It can be ordered from the Publishing House at Nashville, or from Lathrop & Wilkins, New Orleans. Price, bound in muslin, 60 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents.

THE GREAT SPEECHES AND ORATIONS OF DANIEL WEBSTER, with a Discussion of Daniel Webster as a Master of English Style. By Edwin P. Whipple. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. 1879.

This is a handsome octavo of 707 double column pages, embracing a copious index, and adorned with two fine portraits of the great expounder. The published works of Mr. Webster, edited by Edward Everett, make a series of six large volumes. The publishers of this volume have selected what are very fittingly called Webster's great speeches, and issued them in a form to bring them within the reach of thousands who cannot afford to possess the complete works edited by Everett. Besides the most celebrated of the speeches, this volume contains in an appendix: Impressment; The Right of Search; Letters to Gen. Cass on the Treaty of Washington; The Hulsemann Letter. It has been said of Mr. Webster that he never made a speech or address that was not a real contribution to English literature. The very best of the great deliverances are now supplied to the public in a comparatively cheap form. The essay by Mr. Whipple, whilst very clever in some respects, is in others open to objection. There are paragraphs in it which read more like a Republican campaign document than like an impartial and candid essay on the style of Webster. For sale by Lathrop & Wilkins, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

A COMPLETE SCIENTIFIC GRAMMAR of the English Language. With an Appendix containing a Treatise on Composition, Specimens of English and American Literature, a Defense of Phonetic Spelling, for the use of Colleges, Schools and private Learners. By W. Colegrove, A. M., president of West Virginia College. New York: The Author's Publishing Company. 1879.

We have not the time to give this work a thorough examination, and, if we had, we doubt our qualifications to decide upon its merits. Whether it meets the generally felt need of a better grammar we must leave to the judgment of experienced educators and ripe scholars. It seems to us to be quite exhaustive in its treatment, and most alarmingly thorough. 12mo, 362 pages, embracing a complete analytical Index. For sale by Lathrop & Wilkins, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, $1 25.

—Wine and Blood is the very singular title of a little volume by Rev. Robert W. Bigham, published by the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. The author is an honored member of the North Georgia Conference. It is a temperance story, and Dr. Summers, our Book Editor, says: "The piquancy of its style, and the thrilling incidents of the story, will secure its perusal, and the lessons it inculcates will serve as a powerful dissuasive from the use of the intoxicating cup." We have not read it, and must rely upon the Book Editor's endorsement for the present. It is beautifully printed and bound, 16mo, 208 pages. Price, 50 cents. For sale in this city by Lathrop & Wilkins.

—Sacred Melodies is the title of a little volume compiled by Rev. William Baker, and published at Chattanooga, Tenn. The collection is specially rich in the old melodies and choruses familiar a generation ago, but now generally out of print. It comprises many excellent poems and hymns, and it will doubtless be a useful and popular book. It is particularly adapted to revivals and social religious meetings. Price, 35 cents per copy, or 35 cents by the half dozen or more.

—The Popular Science Monthly for September has the following table of contents: 1. Spiritualism as a Scientific Question. By Prof. Wilhelm Wundt. 2. Geographical Evolution. No. 2. By Archibald Geikie, F. R. S. 3. Serpent Charm. By Felix L. Oswald, M. D. 4. Novelty in Patents. By Oliver E. Lyman. 5. Development of the House-Fly. By M. H. Rolston. Illustrated. 6. Food and Feeding. No. 3. By Sir Henry Thompson. 7. A Remarkable Coincidence. Letter from Dr. George M. Beard's The Classical Controversy, Its Present Aspect. By Prof. Alexander Bain. 9. The Vanilla Plant. By J. Poisson. (Illustrated.) 10. Chloral and Other Narcotics. No. 2. By Dr. B. W. Richardson, F. R. S. 11. Spontaneous and Imitative Crime. By E. Vale Blake. 12. Materialism And Its Lessons. By Dr. Henry Maudsley. 13. The Birth, Life and Death of a Storm. By Robert H. Scott, M. A., F. R. S. 14. Biographical Notice of George F. Barker. (Portrait.) 15. Correspondence. 16. Editor's Table. 17. Literary Notices. 18. Popular Miscellany. 19. Notes.

—The Theological and Homiletic Monthly for September, R. N. Sledd, D. D., editor and publisher, Richmond, Va., contains a number of valuable articles, and is altogether a very attractive and able number. Contents: 1. Careless Familiarity With Holy Things. A. S. Andrews, D. D. 2. Schism. Chas. F. Deems, D. D. 3. The Church of Rome in 1879. Methodist Quarterly Review. 4. Preaching. Atlantic Monthly. 5. A Plan for Preserving Illustrations. Rev. J. T. Whitley. 6. Bascom's Episcopal Ordination. Rev. W. H. Anderson. 7. Pastoral Visiting. Hints. 8. The Relation of Exegetics to Homiletics. Rev. John J. Tigert. 9. A Thanksgiving Discourse. L. S. Burkhead, D. D. 10. The Last Days of Christ. Dr. Hackett, in Bibliotheca Sacra. 11. Editorial Miscellany.

—The North American Review for September has: 1. The Genius of Nathaniel Hawthorne. Anthony Trollope. 2. The Standard of Value. Prof. Simon Newcomb. 3. The Work and Mission of My Life, part 2. Richard Wagner. 4. The Diary of a Public Man, part 2. 5. Confessions of An Agnostic. An Agnostic. 6. Intrigues at Old Paris Canal Congress. A. G. Menocal. 7. Three Important Publications. Finlay's History of Greece, Pattison's Renaissance of Art in France, Cox's Aryan Mythology. Mayo W. Hazeltine.

—Moore's Rural Life for August is copiously illustrated, and abounds in practical information for country people. It is one of the handsomest of our agricultural exchanges. Published monthly by the Rural Life Company, New York. Price, $1 50 per annum.

—The Art Amateur for September is a marvel in the beauty of its typography and engravings. It is also replete with the literature of art. A valuable publication. Montague Marks, editor and publisher, New York. Price, $4 a year.

—The Sunday-School World for September, including Child's World and Lesson Papers, has been received. These publications are very handsomely gotten up and issued by the American Sunday-School Union, Philadelphia.

—The American Agriculturist for September is an excellent number of this unrivaled agricultural periodical. Published by the Orange Judd Company, New York. $1 50 per annum.

—F. W. Helmick, Cincinnati, sends us a piece of music entitled: "Plant Sweet Flowers On My Grave."

THE ADVOCATE

FOR FIFTY CENTS TO JANUARY, 1880.

The publisher announces to the thousands of our friends that he will send the paper from date to January next—four months—on receipt of fifty cents in stamps or postage stamps. This is done to facilitate securing new subscribers, and, feeling assured that without slight effort on the part of our patrons, thousands of persons could be induced to take a paper at this trial offer, many of whom, he hopes, long would become permanent subscribers. Will they exert themselves to swell the list? There is no other inducement that will supply the same amount of literature reading matter, for each week, as this liberal offer. Let us hear from you as early as possible.

THE CHRISTIAN TREE.

To any person sending us four yearly subscribers with the paper we will present tree for one year. Sample order will be mailed to parties who receive it to facilitate agents in securing subscribers. Address all communications pertaining to this with above to the publisher.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS, of the staff of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, left Wednesday evening, for the West and Texas, on business connected with the ADVOCATE. We bespeak, for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have no fear will be continued.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.—Fruit jars Mason pints, Ferris, 1½ pints, 1 quart, 2 quart, per dozen. American Glass Co. pints, $1 15. Equal in looks and usefulness as French China. 19

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is a part of the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristics of that well-known establishment. Those visiting the city would do well to make this popular hotel their stopping place, having secured it by reason of its convenient location for business, and its easy access to the depots.

KEWANEE WENTMILL.—For particulars respecting this popular wind mill, see the advt. on third page. It is considered to be the best power used, as all those requiring a reliable wind at the same time appreciate it. We have also for sale from the Kewanee Manufacturing Company, Kewanee, Ill., the Kewanee Sulky Plow. They are finely made and very desirable. Agents wanted.

GROCERIES, in small or large quantities can be procured at bottom prices, and they will be delivered free of charge within certain limits. Orders by mail or telegraph will receive prompt attention. Remember the place, 19 Carondelet street, between Canal and Common, and marked with four balls. By examination of Messrs. J. B. Eshleman & Co.'s new premises, 9 Camp street, corner of Gravier, they will be found to be the most commodious for the well-known business conducted there for so many years. Some things they can do better than others, but in the main they have improved in filling such orders from the country, and their success has been great, and, so far as known, perfectly reliable. To the jury. They cannot undertake everything they keep in their advertisement, but never call and ask for a thing they have not got. Try them. Let us hear from you as early as possible.

HOMŒOPATHIC MEDICINES.—Our readers are referred to the advertisement of Messrs. Pulcke & Tafel. Their medicines and books are known well all over the United States, having offices in all the principal cities of the country. They have also many of the professors of the school—most fully the professors of the school which have been established the longest here, and which we have no fear will be extended here, and which we have no fear will be continued.

Farm, Garden and Household.

THE DEPTH TO PLANT SEEDS. Rules are often laid down by writers as guides for farmers when planting the seeds of their various crops, as though any rule could be depended upon under all circumstances, when the farmer every one must use judgment in this as in every other operation on the farm. We have before us an account of an experiment made by some one in sowing wheat at several depths from one fourth of an inch to four inches deep, also in leaving it upon the surface. That sown from one fourth to three fourths of an inch came up soonest and grew best. While that left on the surface, and that covered three and a half inches deep, was two weeks in getting start. The latter would, therefore, be covered enough if less than one inch deep, or more than three inches deep, for the best germination and the most vigorous growth. We would be a good deal in favor of covering the seed in the best condition for coming up, which is usually accomplished first throughout the entire season. But there are times of severe drought, when the seed will not germinate for several days after it is sown, and then the following rain starts it all at once. Under such circumstances deep covering is best, as the seed will not start until the rain comes. Then, if the soil is mellow, it will come up quickly and grow off rapidly. Where the soil is inclined to bake, or is heavy, it is best to cover shallow, as the plant will have a better chance to push through the soil. Deep covering is also best for light, sandy soils, as they are inclined to dry out quickly. Medium covering is best for all soils, and in all seasons, except when the drought is severe. Then deep covering is best. Deep covering is also best for seeds that require a long time to germinate, as the moisture will be retained longer. Where seeds are sown broadcast, and covered with a harrow, a medium depth is secured. But where seeds are planted in drills, the depth can be regulated with more certainty. Where seeds are sown in hills, the depth can be regulated with more certainty than broadcast, but not as much so as in drills. Where seeds are planted

THE SAND BLAST.—Among the wonderful and useful inventions of the times is the common sand blast. Suppose you desire to letter a piece of marble you cover the stone with a sheet of wax no thicker than a wafer, then cut in the wax the inscription desired. Now pass it under the blast and the wax will not be injured at all, but the sand will cut the letters deep into the stone. Or if you desire raised letters, a flower, or other emblem, cut the letters, flowers, etc., in wax and stick them upon the stone; then pass the stone under the blast, and the sand will cut it away. Remove the wax and you have the raised letters. Or take a piece of French plate glass, say two feet by six, and cover it with fine lace; pass it under the blast, and not a thread will be injured, but the sand will cut deep into the glass wherever it is not covered by the lace. Now remove the lace and you have every delicate and beautiful figure raised upon the glass. In this way beautiful figures of all kinds are cut in glass, and at a small expense. The workmen can hold their hands under the blast without harm, even when it is rapidly cutting away the hardest glass, iron or stone, but they must look out for their fingers as for they will be whittled off right hastily. Wrap a piece of soft cotton around the nails, and they are safe. The sand whirls away and destroys any hard substance, even glass, but does not affect substances that are soft and yielding, like wax, cotton of the lace, or even the human hand.

Says the New York Tribune: The refinement of scientific warfare is illustrated in the engineering exercises of the French Army. As the process is described by the Avenir Militaire, field-firing cannot be carried on in the method prescribed by the regulations without the employment of six different implements. An angle must be used to measure the slope and velocity of the wind, in order that the necessary corrections may be made. The pressure of the atmosphere is ascertained by a barometer; the temperature by a thermometer, which also indicates the degree of humidity of the air. A telemeter is employed to measure the distance of the object aimed at, and a declinometer to ascertain the variation of the magnetic needle. A chronometer is necessary to determine the velocity of the projectile, and compass must be made. Ague Cure

Is purely vegetable but powerful and is warranted speedily and effectually to cure Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In this and other diseases, its prompt and positive action, its freedom from nauseous taste, its safety and certainty, and the fact that it may be taken at any time without preparation or subsequent inconvenience, render it the most valuable remedy known.

Liver Complaints, Ayer's Ague Cure, by its action on the liver, displays the most wonderful results. It overcomes the poisons in the system, and the system is left in a healthy condition.

What it has done for others it will do for you.

CURED OF DRINKING.

"A young friend of mine was cured of an insatiable thirst for liquor, that had so prostrated his system that he was unable to do any business. He was entirely cured by the use of Hop Bitters. It allayed all that burning thirst, took away the appetite for liquor, made his nerves steady, and he has remained a sober and steady man for more than two years, and has no desire to return to his cups; and I know of a number of others that have been cured of drinking by it." From a leading R. R. Official, Chicago, Ill.—Advt.

When Dubufe's celebrated paintings of Adam and Eve were on exhibition, Mr. McNab was taken to see them and was asked for his opinion. "I think no great things of the painter," said the great gardener. "Why, man, Eve's temptin' Adam wi' a pippin of a variety that was da known until about twenty years ago."

GRAHAM BREAD FOR DYSPEPTICS.—One quart wheat meal (sometimes called Graham flour), two teaspoonfuls Kellogg's Baking Powder, two eggs, one gill molasses, milk or water to make a thin dough.

A Scotch preacher once said: "You never saw a woman sewing without a needle! She would come but poor speed if she only sewed with the thread; so I think, when we're wi' sinners, we maun aye put in the needle o' the law first; for the fact is they're sleepin' sound, and they need to be wakened up wi' something sharp. But, when we've got the needle o' the law fairly in, we may draw as lang a thread as we like o' gospel consolation after't."

The Ohio Sunday law exempts from the observance of Sunday Jews, Seventh-Day Baptists, ferrymen, emigrants, and toll-gate keepers.

TUTT'S PILLS

A distinguished physician of New York says: "I have for some time suffered with Dyspepsia, Piles, and Sick Headache. I fear of increased suffering during the present hot season, and resolved, knowing the invalid qualities of Tutt's Pills, to give them a fair trial. I have taken but two boxes, and am happy to say I have received more benefit from them than from all the patent medicines I have ever used. I cheerfully recommend them to all sufferers, and intend to make them a standard remedy in my practice."

TESTIMONIALS FROM WELL KNOWN PERSONS.

From Hon. Speaker Sherman

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 21, 1876.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOWEN:

Gentlemen—I am very much pleased with the Piano you made for me. It reads all the tender mood in ever respect and is a treasure by all who have seen and heard it. Its flow tone, delicacy of touch and beauty of finish, Many good pianos exist and all might be good per one have filled since it has been in our parlor, and all pronounce it the instrument. We consider it a great gem. I shall certainly recommend it to my friends who may wish to purchase.

I am, very truly and respectfully yours
ELLEN B. F. SHERMAN,
205 I Street.

St. James, December 27, 1874.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOWEN:

Gentlemen—I am very happy to be able to rank your Pianos as one of the very best I ever had and saw. I think the touch and brilliancy of tone required to perform the great pieces of music and the vocal concerts, are equal to any Piano made in this country. Hoping that your Pianos will also stand our climate as well as any other manufactured at the North I shall with much pleasure recommend them wherever I have an opportunity. Very respectfully yours,

ANTHONY WIMMER
Professor of Music, St. Mary Jefferson College, St. James, La., (Convent, P. O.)

From St. Vincent's Asylum, Beatty, P. O., Westmoreland County, Pa.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOWEN:

Gentlemen—The two Pianos have safely arrived, and on their first day of being here have reached a position of honor much above that for which they were originally intended. For, now standing in their humble swallow dress, they have been led into the Music Hall, where each of their sweet voices had yielded them their place. Thus, blessed observing that angels at their practice, they will be pressed by the professors at mine last sons and professional performances.

From this it has been that the instrument you sent me did not only meet, but in fact surpass my expectations. I find their tone rich and melodious, their action precise in a degree, not, as I know of, surpassed. Very respectfully yours,

IGNATIUS TAPPE, D. S. H.,
Director of Music.

The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and the testimony of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 10. The seventh annual Exposition opened here to-day. Thousands of people from all parts of Ohio and neighboring States were present, and the streets in the vicinity of the Exposition building were thronged with visitors. The weather is very bright and salubrious. The Exposition will be formally opened with appropriate ceremonies to-morrow.

Governor Hayes, of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, and their staffs, were present. We are pleased to learn that Governor Hayes is in excellent health and spirits.

Governor Hayes and staff were received with a salute of thirteen guns. Governor Hayes, in his address of welcome, said that the Exposition was designed to encourage the development of the resources of the country, and to promote the prosperity of the people. He then introduced Governor Foster, of Ohio, who delivered the address of welcome on behalf of the State. Governor Foster, in his address, said that the Exposition was designed to encourage the development of the resources of the country, and to promote the prosperity of the people. THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1879.

"I WILL PREACH JESUS."

"Who'll preach Jesus?" said an prophet,
Gasping with his latest breath,
His blessed Gospel, who'll declare it
Bravely, truly unto death?

"Who'll preach Jesus?" Souls are dying
Dying without God or friend;
O, like living dogs is dying,
Bear life's message He will send.

"Who'll preach Jesus?" Hearts are bleeding,
Bleeding with earth's wounds and care;
Tell them He is interceding,
And their tears and griefs doth share.

"Who'll preach Jesus?" Strength is failing,
Failing 'neath the tempter's load;
Sing, O sing of rest remaining,
Rest beyond this blood marked road.

"Who'll preach Jesus?" God is calling,
Calling loud for laborers bold.
From whose hands the good seed falling,
Will produce an hundred fold.

"Who'll preach Jesus?" Fields are whitening,
Whitening for the reaper's blade;
Glean the sheaves with hands untiring,
Sheaves which toil and prayers have made.

"Who'll preach Jesus?" Time is passing,
Passing swift as lightning's speed;
Death and judgment everlasting,
Soon will claim both sower and seed.

"Who'll preach Jesus?" See His coming,
Coming now to take me home;
O, with last breath faintly whispering,
May I speak my dear Lord's name.

And, O Father, when in glory,
Happy 'mid the shining throng,
Send me back "to tell the story,"
And bring home the harvest song.

Last words of Rev. Dr. Richard Fuller, after a ministry of fifty years.

A Suggestive Little Book.

MR. EDITOR: I have been permitted, recently, to examine a little memorandum book belonging to the wife of an itinerant minister, which she calls her "Donation Book." This little book, I think, has a suggestive history, which is substantially as follows: A few years ago, in an adjoining Conference, Bro. S. was appointed to ——— circuit, which was considered an average circuit in financial ability, but never had paid the full amount of its assessment, except when the preacher was a single man. Bro. S. had a wife and six children, and could not live on the salary paid his predecessor, and there was no probability that the circuit would pay any more. What to do was a perplexing question. He could buy his supplies on a credit, but would not be able to pay for them at the end of the year, and he was not willing to contract debts without a probability of paying them. While the stewards and preacher were consulting, and trying to devise some plan by which the preacher might be supported without getting in debt, an old man, who had filled the office of steward in other days, made the following suggestion: Let the Church Conference appoint a proper person at each appointment on the circuit to solicit donations, to consist of anything that would be useful to the preacher, or any of his family; the donations not to be considered as any part of the preacher's salary; that was to be provided for by the stewards in the usual way. The suggestion was favorably considered, the plan adopted, and immediately put into execution.

Donations of almost every description soon began to find their way to the parsonage, and this suggested the idea of keeping the Donation Book, in which the preacher's wife recorded the name of every donor in connection with the donation, its date and value. The next year Bro. S. was returned to the same circuit, and the donation plan was worked more extensively, and with increased success, and at the close of the year the preacher was astonished to find that his wife had saved money enough to pay a debt of $200 contracted two years before, leaving a balance on hand of $50 for emergencies. It is important that we state in this connection that each one of those years the salary paid equaled any previous year, and in no case did any one count his donation in payment of his assessment. When this donation plan was first proposed some predicted a failure. They thought it might succeed in stations, but not on circuits. But they soon had cause to change their opinion. As soon as it was known that such a plan was in operation, the members of the church generally entered into it with enthusiasm. They seemed to vie with each other in sending nice and valuable donations to the parsonage. In looking over this little book I found the donations to comprise a great variety of supplies for the table, not only the most substantial, but some delicacies and luxuries. Supplies for the wardrobe embraced articles of clothing for every member of the family. In a word, the good people seemed to anticipate every want, and I am not surprised to learn that the preacher's family lived well those two years, and had money to pay debts, and a little to lay by for emergencies. The old adage, that "a penny saved is as good as a penny made," applies in this case. Now, Mr. Editor, you have the brief history connected with this little Donation Book, and I am of the opinion that it suggests the only plan that will bring relief to some of our married preachers, and save them from debt and from location. Some of them are now practicing the most rigid economy. Yes, they are even stinting themselves and families to keep out of debt. But they are becoming discouraged. In many instances the assessments, if paid in full, will fall far short of a decent support. In such cases there is no alternative. Indebtedness which cannot be paid is inevitable. They will not let their families suffer. Now a word to the stewards, and to the membership generally: Dear Brethren: Your preacher is in a strait. More than half the year has past, and perhaps he has not received more than one-fourth of his salary, which is so meager that if he shall receive it in full he will not get a support by perhaps $200. You know this, and he knows it, and yet you propose nothing for his relief. Must he buy on a credit, and thus make a debt which he will not be able to pay?

You say a preacher should not go in debt, and you are right in saying so. He ought not, but how can he avoid it? He does not want to go in debt. He knows it is morally wrong, as well as a violation of our General Rules, to take up goods without a probability of paying for them. Now, what must he do? Well, you say it is a hard case, and you know of no remedy. There is no use in raising the assessment, for it is already above what will be paid. Then the preacher must go in debt, starve or locate. One of these is inevitable. But we believe there is a remedy, and that it is found in the donation plan suggested and demonstrated in the history of the little Donation Book above mentioned. Now, let our people adopt the plan and give it a fair trial. It is late to begin; but better late than never. Do not let your preacher go in debt any further. Send in your donations. They may be small, but send them in. Let the Church Conference appoint a suitable person at each appointment to put the plan in operation. The membership on your circuit embraces fifty, perhaps a hundred families. A few small donations from each would be sufficient to save your pastor from debt, and no one would feel the loss. In looking over a few pages of this little book I found flour, bread, bacon sides, hams and shoulders, lard, beef, mutton, turkeys, chickens, eggs, butter, dried fruit, canned fruit, sugar, coffee, molasses, honey, rice, vegetables in great variety and profusion, a few donations of cash, and some orders on merchants, and then at the close of the year a nice suit of clothes for the preacher, and a large box of dry goods for the family. This last was from unknown donors. Comment on the above is unnecessary. The plan is altogether practicable, and will prove a success in every case if fairly tried. Our people will take pleasure in sending their little presents to the parsonage, and it will be very pleasant to the preacher's family to be thus remembered by kind friends. They will be blest in receiving, the people will be blest in giving, but the greater blessing will belong to the giver, for "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Excuse me, Mr. Editor, for making this communication too long. My only apology is my great anxiety to see some plan put into operation that will save our married preachers from debt, and give them a better support; and I think the little book above mentioned suggests the plan. If we cannot support our preacher in the usual way, let us make up the deficit in donations, and keep him out of debt. One thing I have observed that indicates that this plan may be made a success: Our people take more pleasure in making presents to their preacher than in paying their assessments. This they regard as a just debt; and in paying it they do only what every honest person is bound to do. Their donations they regard as something extra above what any one has a right to claim, and as an expression of generosity and benevolence, every act of which sends through the truly liberal soul a flow of happiness, to which the stingy man, though legally honest, is a stranger. A man's liberality has a wonderful effect on his Christian experience. So Solomon thought when he said: "The liberal soul shall be made fat," and if he had said: "The stingy soul shall be made lean," no orthodox Christian would have called in question the declaration. If we support our preacher we will have a prosperous church; if we starve him we will starve ourselves. So if there is a spiritual dearth in the church, and leanness in our own souls, we may know the cause.

EX STEWARD.

Off to School.

MR. EDITOR: It is well that I should make a few statements, through the ADVOCATE, respecting the opening of East Mississippi Female College, September 8, 1879.

Many of our prospective patrons living in remote country places may be uneasy and hesitating under apprehensions of the appearance of yellow fever, and therefore may unnecessarily delay sending.

Caution is commendable at all times, and it behooves me to be even more cautious, if possible, than parents in the matter of opening school. In advising upon the subject, I appreciate the anxiety of parents, and also the general good of the college.

It can be easily understood that if there existed here the least apprehension of the fever breaking out it would be unwise and detrimental to the college to insist upon an early opening. The school would have a great deal more to risk than individual patrons. Surely I would jeopardize my own family by opening school under any sort of impending peril, or at an inauspicious time.

There has been no case of fever here, and there is no reason upon which we can entertain an apprehension of its appearance. The city is as healthy as one could imagine a real healthy place to be. There is no yellow fever in the State, and how are we to believe it will appear at this late date? It is next thing to folly, if not absurdity, to entertain such a conviction. It is, therefore, unwise to delay sending to school under the circumstances.

We commence early so as to begin deliberately, and in order to close before the approach of warm weather. Our school will close about the first of June. We will have pleasant weather in which to do the fatiguing work of preparing for examination and commencement. Some of the most unpleasant weather of this summer was in June. Our girls were then at home, free from the labors and restrictions of school. Pupils who enter the first of the term—September 8—will be given an easy and gradual introduction to their studies. They generally have the easy parts of their texts to study. If we have any warm weather in September it will be spent deliberately, and in those slow processes toward hard study usually made expedient at the opening of schools. By delaying, pupils will be subject to hard study from the very first day of entering, in order to catch up and to keep up.

Get ready, and come along to school. We have never had sickness in the college during the month of September. We have often had it in June.

From the Work.

WESSON, COPIAH COUNTY, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: There is not a town in Mississippi, according to the size and population, in a more flourishing condition than Wesson. It is noted for its large cotton mills, its stores, and especially its churches. The factory is running on extra time, to be able to fill orders. There are about 375 looms in operation, all controlled and under the management of Capt. William Oliver. There are about 400 employes, all classed off in their several departments, the majority of them widows and orphans. Here the widow finds a home for her children, and can make a handsome living with a little economy. About eight or nine thousand dollars are paid out monthly. The most of the hands are young lads and children. These children are most all poor. About all the schooling they get is at the Sabbath-school.

We have three good churches. The Baptists have a large church and a flourishing Sunday-school, and large membership. The Presbyterians have a fine church, with a good Sunday-school and a good membership. The Methodists have a flourishing Sunday-school. Our large new church which Bro. Heard started last year is a blessing to Wesson. Although not completed, the wood work is about done. We have a fine chandelier with twelve lights. We are painting the house now. Then we need a bell, some new seats, blinds for windows. We have a membership of about 200. The Sunday-school is doing well—about 100 in attendance. Capt. Wimberly is our superintendent. Bro. Lewis is our pastor this year. The Conference did us a great favor when they sent him.

PROVIDENCE CAMP MEETING, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to state that our camp meeting at Providence was quite a success. It closed on Wednesday night, the third instant, with 56 conversions, 32 applications for membership, 22 have been received in full fellowship, 20 children and 11 adults were baptized. The membership were greatly revived, many of whom were among the converts. We had with us nine of our traveling preachers, with our local brethren.

The freshet on Monday night was severe, yet we had a good meeting. And, though detained for one day by the high water, we all made the best of it, and endeavored to make the loss of the body the gain of the soul. All felt more than paid for all they did and suffered, and went home, hoping to meet again next year.

SEPTEMBER 5, 1879.

HOLMESVILLE, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a most interesting meeting of nine days at Adams' Church, Amite circuit, Mississippi Conference. Our congregations were large and attentive throughout, never less than 200 any day; between 500 and 600 the last day. The good Lord was present in great power. The slain of the Lord were many. Sixty five were added to the church, most of whom were happily converted. The church was greatly revived.

Bros. J. E. Jagers and W. H. Germany, two local brethren, were with us part of the time, and did good work. Bros E. L. Tarver and William Wood, two local brethren, who live at Adams, were also there, and did good altar work. In fact, the whole church was stirred, and went to work early in the meeting. The church roll now numbers over 230. We have here also the finest Sunday-school in South Mississippi. Most of those who joined belong to the Sunday-school.

FIELD NOTES.

LOUISIANA.

JACKSON, LA., Sept. 1—The third Quarterly Conference for this work was held at Winans, on the sixteenth and seventeenth of August. Our beloved presiding elder, Bro. J. A. Godfrey, was at his post promptly, as he always is. Finances not to be complained of. Church growing spiritually. We protracted the meeting one week after Quarterly Conference. Much good was accomplished. The work is still going on in the hearts of the people. We are indebted to Rev. I. D. Wall, who rendered valuable assistance. Crops falling off some. Health of country very good.

R. E. JONES, P. C.

MISSISSIPPI.

PELAHATCHIE, Miss., Sept 1—I have just closed my second meeting on Prairie mission, held at Lebanon, which resulted in 21 accessions to the church, and the church wonderfully revived. Revs. C. McIlwain and J. D. Hays rendered me very valuable service, also a Baptist minister, Bro. Parker, preached two sermons for me. Added to the church to date, 15 members, baptized 10 children, and yet the good work goes on.

A. J. MILLER.

SCOTLAND CIRCUIT, Miss., Sept 1—We have just closed a meeting at Bethel Church, and had a good time. The Lord was with us to own and to bless, sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, and the church strengthened. We also had a glorious revival at Bethesda. Christians were made happy, sinners converted, and the church built up. We have had a severe rain storm, doing much damage to mills, bridges, fences and crops. A great deal of cotton and corn destroyed.

H. R. FALKNER.

BATESVILLE, Miss., Sept 4—Our new church is about completed. We had three good meetings on this work recently. The one at Wesley Chapel was a revival. All the church felt it. Eleven conversions and seven accessions. Hope the good work will go on. The yellow fever in Memphis has a very depressing effect on this section. All business, except at home, stopped. Only two mails per week. Crops are not good. Twelve weeks' drouth injured corn, and low too much rain for cotton. One new bale sold here on the second instant for $13 65.

JOHN KILPATRICK.

ABERDEEN, Miss., Sept 4—Fine revivals in the Aberdeen district. The preachers are all well, and hard at work. Our church is having a large accession of members. Crops generally good, and we see no reason why our collections may not come up in full. Some political excitement, but the coming election will pass without material injury to the prosperity of this part of the State. This part of Mississippi was never healthier. Our church in Aberdeen is doing her work quietly, but, we believe, successfully. Sabbath-school and prayer meeting fine.

JOHN H. SCRUGGS.

WOODVILLE, Miss., Sept. 5—The storm of September 1 was very severe in this town and throughout the county. A heavy gale, varying from northeast to north and northwest, struck us about eight A. M., and continued unabated for twelve hours. Sheets of water came down, driven wildly before the blast. The corner of Masonic Hall was smitten off. A few out-houses in town, and gins in the country, were wrecked. Corn and cotton crops lie almost prostrate and beaten into the mud. Fences generally gave way, and let stock into fields and gardens. Damage immeasurable. No lives lost as far as reported. People healthy.

J. P. DRAKE.

GRENADA, Miss., Sept. 5—The Lord is still reviving his work on this circuit. One hundred and thirty-eight conversions up to this time. No yellow fever yet. The cotton crop is very good, also late corn. Forward corn was injured by the drouth. Health better than usual. The outlook on this circuit is good, temporally and spiritually.

J. P. DANCER.

MACON, Miss., Sept. 6.—To-morrow I commence my meeting. The prospect for a revival is good, and here are the signs: Membership, 145. Sunday-school scholars, 196, average attendance, 141. Prayer meeting well attended. Class meeting very weak. Congregations large and attentive. Missionary assessment all paid, beside a Woman's Friend Missionary Society working well. Bishop's fund paid. The pastor has a good home, is well cared for, and has the sympathy and prayers of his people. Health good. Crops good. No political excitement.

THOS. J. NEWELL.

MOSS POINT, Miss., Sept. 6—We protracted our quarterly services at this place several days. Had several accessions, and a very pleasant meeting. Moss Point is a delightful charge, and a most excellent membership. We acknowledge the labors of Bro. Inman Cooper, of Ocean Springs. In obedience to the request of our indefatigable presiding elder, I attended the quarterly meeting at Biloxi, on the Ocean Springs work, which proved to be quite a revival occasion. Bro Cooper is quite a worker. Has his church at that place neatly refitted and painted

G. F. THOMPSON.

CLOVER HILL STATION, Miss., Sept 8.—My third quarterly meeting failed on account of yellow fever excitement, and I was quarantined. Presiding elder absent. Closed a meeting of eight days at this place last Wednesday evening. Good attendance throughout. No ministerial help save one sermon. I think good was done for the church. No additions, however. Crops fine. A good deal of sickness. Still trust God and go forward.

H. J. SKARIS.

VALDEN, Miss., Sept. 9—I have just closed the sixth protracted meeting held on the Valden circuit since the middle of July. Good resulted from all these meetings. The church has been revived, and some accessions at each appointment. Health of the country good. Crops good, especially cotton. All would be quiet but for the exciting canvass through which we are now passing. Whisky is being used to the great injury of the negroes and youth of the country.

A. P. SAGE.

MAGNOLIA, Miss., Sept. 9—The third quarterly meeting for this charge closed yesterday at Holmesville. Bro. Godfrey gave us three days' good service. The storm and rains have done considerable damage to crops, mills, etc., in this county. Some loss in drowning stock. The religious interest has been increasing for the last two months in the principal churches. The circuit court occupied but one week the last term. The general health is good. There is improvement in the material as well as spiritual, but still there is room for more and better building.

J. W. SAMELL.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FREEPORT, FLA., Sept. 8—Third quarterly meeting just closed. The presiding elder, Rev. E. Phillips, was present. Twenty-six accessions to the church and twenty baptisms up to date this year. Congregations fine. Social meetings well attended. But little sickness. No crops here, but lots of pine logs, saw mills, schooners, steamer smacks, merchandise, salt-water fish, grapes and other things.

J. R. ANDERSON.

Montana, during the past sixteen years, has produced $153,000,000 of gold and silver. Of this sum $117,000,000 was in gold. This makes Montana rank next to California as a producer of gold. There are already 200 quartz mines in the territory. Iron and lead mines have been opened, and coal is plentiful. It is claimed that the cost of keeping herds of cattle in Montana is only 60 cents a head. Including taxes, a three-year old beef steer, which will sell on the ground for $30, only cost $3 for feed and care. The losses in raising are estimated at 2 per cent, while the profits vary from 25 to 40 per cent. per annum. In 1873 there were but 86,941 cattle in the territory; in 1878 there were 250,000 head, while 22,000 valued at $1,100,000, were exported to Eastern markets.

Obituaries.

REV. THOMAS K. ARMISTEAD was born in Autauga county, Ala., September 11, 1808, and died in Montgomery, June 16, 1879. Losing his mother when quite a child, he was committed to the care and training of Mrs. John W. Hubbard, who lived nobly and unselfishly devoted herself to his interests, being ably assisted by her husband who seemed to have loved him as his own son. His parents could not have been more kind to him and certainly would not have come more nearly to his usefulness and happiness. They treated him as a child, and had their reward in his warm unwavering affection for them both, and in seeing him honored and useful in the walks of life. Guided by their counsel and influenced by their example, while still a boy, he sought and found Christ as a personal Saviour, and joined the Methodist Church. From the hour he joined the church till his death his conduct was above reproach, and his moral and religious character without a stain. Gentle and quiet in disposition, and polite by nature, he passed along his way as a smoothly rolling current, making a pleasing impression on all around him.

Having no singular points he offended nobody. But few public men have adorned forty years with fewer enemies and sharper criticisms of their conduct. It is likely he had not so many in the world when he died.

In 1836 he was licensed to preach by the Montgomery Quarterly Conference, and in December of the same year was received into the Alabama Annual Conference on trial. For the twelve succeeding years he was a faithful worker in the itinerant ministry in different parts of Alabama. He was not what the world calls a grand or eloquent preacher, and yet he was both; for he was the honored agent of arresting and bringing sinners to Christ, and of building up the church who ever he labored, and certainly the simple and appropriate sermons of his Heavenly Father rested upon him. Like Mary he did what he could.

In 1852, prompted by patriotic feelings and a desire to participate against the Confederate soldiers, he entered the army as a private and remained in the ranks till the close of the war. He preached as opportunity was afforded him, and was present in his efforts to keep up prayer meetings among the men. The most devoted friends of his after life were some of his army associates, which attests his faithfulness and devotion during that trying period. Most tenderly and affectionately did they watch around his bed and minister to his wants during his protracted illness.

In February, 1871, he was happily married to Miss Jennie Perry, daughter of Sinnet Perry, of Auburn, Alabama, and sister of Gen. Frank Perry of blessed memory. Losing his wife and child in the Fall of 1872, and being in feeble health he soon after located, but he did not lose his interest in the regular work of the ministry nor cease to preach when able to do so. Thoroughly prepared himself for the practice of dentistry he opened an office in this city, and by his gentle sympathizing manner soon won his way to popular favor, and was rapidly acquiring a satisfactory and lucrative practice.

In 1876 the Herron Street Church becoming vacant because of the transfer of the pastor to another charge, I employed Bro. Armstrong to take that work. His residence was in an opposite part of the city and quite remote from his church, and yet, though feeble often, he rarely if ever missed an appointment on the Sabbath or during the week. Faithfully he attended to the details of work and the people of his charge hold him in most grateful remembrance.

In February, 1876, he married Miss Carrie Johnston, of Houston, Georgia, who survives him. The marriage was a judicious and happy one.

His last illness was protracted and most painful. Heart disease, complicated with a distressing dyspepsia and dropsy, confined him to his room for months before he died. I found him in a precarious condition when I took charge of the church here at the beginning of the year. And even then some of his friends had fears of his ultimate recovery. During his whole illness his faith in the saving power of Christ never for a moment gave way. His invariable reply to inquiries about his spiritual state and prospects was satisfactory. I know in whom I have trusted, had many protracted and free conversations with him, and have never seen one more calm, triumphant and safe. But a short time before his death he answered to the question, "Is all clear and satisfactory between you and God?" "Oh yes, I have committed all that matter to Christ." Forcibly he made that expression, which was nearly the last expression that escaped from his lips.

We buried him from the church where he was converted and licensed to preach, in hope of the resurrection.

W. M. ANGEL.

YOUR committee, named for the purpose of submitting to this conference a fitting expression of a sense of their bereavement in the death of Bro. YOUNG EDWARDS, which occurred to great peace and triumph at his late residence near Shady Grove Church on Friday evening, the thirteenth of June, 1879, in the eighty-sixth year of his age, respectfully submit the following:

Resolved, That the Great Head of the Church has, in the overflow of His wisdom, called home one of His workmen, who has been faithful and long a witness for Him, and has left behind him a record of a life well spent and well finished in the Master's service.

And whereas Bro. Young Edwards has been ordained by the Holy Ghost as leader, steward, trustee for a period of thirty-five years, therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Young Edwards we have been bereaved of one whose name and memory will be cherished by the Church of God, and whose spiritual and religious influence has been a Christian blessing to the whole community in which he lived.

Resolved, That we miss him in the Quarterly Conference circle, where the presence of his venerable form and the sound of his voice will no longer, when his name is mentioned, be responded to with the usual "Present," but we miss him in the house of worship, where he was always found in the Lord's house, in the prayer meeting, in the Sabbath-school, and in the class room, where he was always found in the Lord's house, in the church of which he was a member.

Resolved, That we will ever miss him in the Church Triumphant.

Resolved, That this paper be recorded on the journal of this Conference in memoriam, and that a copy be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, also a copy be sent to the bereaved widow with an expression of our sympathies with her in her sore bereavement.

BETSY ANN PIPPIN, wife of Q. L. Pippin, and daughter of Rev. W. J. and Tabitha Tyler, was born November 19, 1848, and died in her father's house on Hooms Valley, Washington county, Miss., August 15, 1879, aged thirty years. A husband and three little children, with a large circle of relatives and friends, mourn her departure. Sister Pippin was baptized in infancy, and raised in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. She was a devoted child, and a loving wife and mother. She came to her father's house on a visit and was taken sick on the 4th of July, and from that time on was confined to her room. The disease was a complication of diseases, which baffled the skill of the physicians. She suffered much, but bore it all patiently. She enjoyed her father's prayers and the ministrations of the Word. She was converted at the age of twelve years, and joined the Methodist Church, and lived a consistent member of the Church for eighteen years. She was a faithful member of the Church. She was a loving wife and mother. She was a faithful member of the Church. She was a loving wife and mother. She was a faithful member of the Church. She was a loving wife and mother

OUR FATHER'S CARE.

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

"Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things."—Jesus.

The golden lights of the summer
Lie on the laughing land;
The voice of song is borne along
By the breeze on every hand.
The flowers spread out their beauty,
Above the vivid green;
And the water's rush, and the forest's hush,
Make tender the glowing scene.
But the cooling kiss of the summer air,
And the joy and beauty everywhere,
Are proofs of Almighty, loving care.
For our heavenly Father knoweth
We have need of all these things.

There are sounds of a gathering tempest,
And the clouds are black as night;
O'er the earth is spread a shade of dread,
And all things sigh for light:
The caves of the green woods quiver,
And a silence falls around,
Till over the hills with a haste that thrills,
The thunder peals resound,
And angrily falls the pelting rain,
And sullenly roars the mighty main,
And the heart grows sad with a fear of pain.
But our heavenly Father knoweth
We have need of all these things.

For daylight calls to labor,
And the work we have to do
Calms all our powers for the passing hours;
And we must each task pursue,
Although we are often weary,
And the aching hands hang down,
There is much to be done ere the rest be won,
And we wear the victor's crown.
But the day that comes to us day by day,
And even the troubles that throng our way,
Do more proofs of the love of God display.
For our heavenly Father knoweth
We have need of all these things.

We joy in the rainfall season,
The time that we love the best,
When the sea's calm floor, and the meadow's glow,
Is bringing the needed rest.
And sweet is the summer golden,
And glad is the early morn,
And soft is the light that falls at night
Upon the whispering corn.
For all the world sings happy days,
And our hearts are stirred to songs of praise,
And Christ comes near in the holy days.
For our heavenly Father knoweth
We have need of all these things.

For rest of the light and shadow,
Need for the loss and gain,
Need for the rest and the labor,
Need of the ease and pain:
For only thereby we learn
To submit to all that falls
In our pathway here, till the rest be near,
At the voice of the angel calls.
Then, upon God's Rest shall glow
To the sheltered place by the Saviour's side
And all is good whatever betide
For our heavenly Father knoweth
We have need of all these things.

Christian Citizenship.

BY C. B. G.

The subject of our Sunday-school lesson for September 21, 1879, is "The Christian Citizen," and the golden-text for the day is Matthew xxii, 21: "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's." As briefly expository, and practically helpful in the study and application of the subject, I offer to Sunday-school workers a "sermonette" on the golden-text.

These words were the reply of the Saviour to certain questions of His enemies, insidiously designed to compass His ruin. The Pharisees and Herodians, though jealous of each other, and advocating principles that made them avowed and bitter enemies, formed an unholy alliance against Jesus, their common and dreaded enemy. They came to Him with the question: "Is it lawful to pay tribute to Cæsar?" By this they hoped to entangle Him in certain destruction. The Pharisees were restless under the Roman yoke, and longed for their national independence. The Herodians were advocates and defenders of the Roman government, and were ever vigilant to detect any disobedience or insurrection. Now, if He refused tribute to Cæsar He would have invited upon His head the condemnation of the Herodians. On the contrary, if He acknowledged allegiance and subjection to Cæsar, He incurred the relentless hostility of the Pharisaic party. So, penetrating into the dark and malicious design of their question, He called for the tribute money. He asked whose is this Image and superscription? They reply Cæsar's. Then, saith He, "

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1879.

REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Out of the Whirlwind.

As the still small voice came to Elijah after the wind, earthquake and fire, and as the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, so we may suppose that there is a divine lesson in the recent storm. The first chapter of Genesis, as read by the scientist, merely relates the several stages in the order of creation, and furnishes a clue to the processes by which the present condition of the world has been reached. The same scripture, as read by the devout believer, has for its chiefest and supreme purpose the declaration that God made the heaven and the earth, and that man was made a spiritual being. God in creation is the important element in the account. It is so in regard to the cotemporary phenomena in the natural world. The laws of storms, earthquakes and floods have a practical and a scientific interest, and engross the attention of a certain class of observers. It is not improbable that thousands living in the path of the cyclone, and suffering from its destructive power, have scarcely thought of God at all in connection with its devastating results. It is so much property swept away, a hair breadth escape from death, a wonderful manifestation of forces in nature, an exceptional disturbance of the elements.

There are those who will regard the storm as, on the whole, beneficent, as tending to restore the general equilibrium, and as a means of purifying the atmosphere. They would say that as the world is constituted tornadoes are necessary, and are as much a part of the general system and course of nature as the sea breeze and the calm. They would explain that the damage done is local and of limited extent, and nothing in comparison with the general ends to be subserved. For the damage done a greater good to the whole world has been secured. For so limited an amount of suffering the compensation to the race is large. This all may be true, and is in the direction of the highest Christian conception of the matter.

But the questions will occur whether the laws of nature might not have been so adjusted as to render the storm an unnecessary phenomenon in the world, and whether, if it must be, it might not have passed by some other route than that which involved us in the wreck. And then the inquiry will arise whether this and other atmospheric disturbances had their origin and locality determined in the star dust or gases of an inchoate world, and so fixed before the foundations of the present system of things, or whether the divine will did not call it up at once and give it its marching orders. One explanation may be as devout as the other provided we recognize the hand of God, and hear Him as He speaks to us out of the whirlwind. It was not by chance that it came our way, and that it swept over our homes. It came hither because it was sent hither, and it came on a special mission to us, and with a specific message to our souls. Beyond the universal law, and beyond the general beneficence of its operations, this storm, and every storm everywhere, speaks personally to those whom it desolates. God does speak out of the whirlwind, and there is a still small voice that always follows in its path. We may not hear it, or, hearing, we may not lay it to heart, as Job and Elijah did, but God speaks.

The world over, this has been a year of storms, floods and elemental commotion. Europe has suffered; in different sections of our own land there have been great calamities. The first autumn day was to us ushered in, and went out with a destructive tempest. It might have been many times more severe than it was, but we must have seen and felt enough to be impressed with our utter helplessness and our absolute dependence. We may have felt that there was poverty and trouble enough already, and that, as the toils of the year were about to bring relief, a merciful Providence might have spared us. Herein every one must hear the voice for himself, and make answer. If it lead to searching of heart it will be well. Was the property destroyed in any considerable part consecrated to God? How deeply were the hearts of the people imbued with reverence for God, and obedience to Him! But we need not recount the general state of wickedness, the neglect of God's ordinances the desecration of the Sabbath, the prevailing unbelief. God's voice was in the roar of the tempest, thundering in the ears of the ungodly. He sent his blasts to rebuke the avarice, the worldliness, the practical atheism of men. He struck the sugar-houses and gins, the cane and the cotton fields, to remind us that our bread and our fortunes, as well as our lives, are in His hand.

The good may have suffered with the bad. It is certain that every class in city and country will feel the stroke. Impoverishment and straitness, to some extent, will follow in all departments of trade and industry. And yet have the best of us nothing to learn? Will not the lesson be worth all it costs if it convict us of sins of omission, of too much love of the world, of withholding from God what is His due? The property destroyed is estimated at many millions; more, probably, than the church and Christian world altogether give for missions in a whole year. To have devoted ten per cent. of this loss to public improvements, to education, and religious and benevolent purposes, would have been regarded as a most preposterous and unreasonable thing. But, if we will not be wise and faithful stewards, God will both despoil and judge the covetous.

Where the storm brings no reproof it may come with its voice of resignation and submission. The uses of adversity are sweet to the child of God. The grievous chastening brings forth the peaceable fruits afterward. It leads the trusting soul nearer to the divine refuge, to the strong tower into which the righteous runneth, "and is safe." The storm is one of "the all things" that work together for good to them that love God.

Reading Dissipation.

Editor's Table, Sunday Afternoon, says:

The flashy newspapers that are sold upon the news-stands, and the vile publications that are peddled about more secretly, are not however the whole of the miscellaneous reading that falls into the hands of our boys and girls. The libraries, the public libraries, the Sunday-school libraries furnish them with a great deal of reading that, as they do it, is extremely sinful to them. The statistics that our librarians give us showing the great excess of novels over all other classes of books issued to the patrons of the libraries give us but a faint idea of the appalling reflection. From the Merrimac Public Library one boy took one hundred and two novels in six months, and a girl one hundred and twelve in the same time. Think of the condition of these children's minds at the end of such a carnival of sensuous. Even though no books of positively immoral character are admitted into the public libraries, it is clear that the provision of so much mental excitement from young people is doing them great damage.

The late convention of librarians in Boston discussed this matter very carefully, and tried to reach some practical conclusion. One radical suggestion was that a city or town has no right to tax the people for the furnishing of mere amusement to anybody, and that, therefore, no fiction that is not clearly educational in its character should find room upon the shelves of the public libraries. Another proposition was that school children and the prescription need not be limited to fiction at school, should not be allowed to take more than one story a week. This rule ought to be immediately adopted and rigidly enforced in all the public libraries. It is simply degeneracy for any young person to read more than one novel a week.

The Chicago Inter Ocean, from the librarians reports of twenty-four public libraries, finds the percentage of fiction drawn from each to average sixty-eight per centum of fiction against thirty-two per centum of all other kinds of reading.

These statements indicate a growing and pernicious form of mental dissipation, and alarmingly prevalent among the youth of the day. It is a habit that fastens upon the mind, and unfits it for solid reading and for study. It excites unduly, but does not stimulate or strengthen the faculties. It rather enervates and enfeebles the mental powers. Excessive novel-reading produces a distaste for the earnest and real work and business of life, and occupies the time that should be devoted to practical affairs and pursuits. The boy or girl who becomes a devotee to this fascinating kind of literature may be injured beyond recovery. The habits of thought, views of life, the mental tone, feel the blight, and a career that might have been noble and successful has been anticipated and forestalled by an inane and objectless drifting upon a tide of romance and dreams.

The novel mania unfits for industry and hard work, and contributes largely to swell the number of idlers and thriftless people that make up no inconsiderable part of what are called the intelligent classes of society. The habitual novel reader, if a girl, will not take kindly and heartily to the routine of housekeeping; if a boy, he will be apt to loathe the drudgery of the first steps in a business career, and he will scorn the idea of taking off his coat and going to work in the field. They are more likely, under the inspiration of fiction, to spend their time in castle-building, waiting for fortune to come to them, and to move in a sphere that is utterly unreal and aimless.

The influence of fiction on the religious character depends, of course, in a great degree upon the books read. Excluding from present consideration all that are clearly immoral and impure, the habit is as unfavorable to spirituality and an earnest religious life as it is to industry and success in secular pursuits. It leads to distaste for the Bible and for instructive religious literature, and often to the neglect of religious duties. It becomes a mental disease that incapacitates the mind for serious truth, and draws the heart away from the spirit of prayer and communion with God. There is a style of preaching, brilliant and sensational, sometimes heard, which reveals the paternity of a mind under this morbid influence. A congregation of novel readers is the most difficult of all to impress with the awakening truths of the gospel. It is a company of world and fashion worshipers, flippant in mind, and almost invulnerable to the appeals of God.

The religious fiction with which the press teems is, no doubt, meant to counteract that which is altogether worldly and sensual. The object is a good one, and to some extent the end may be attained. But, where this kind of fiction crowds out other religious reading and study, the effect is most unfortunate and damaging. Many of the writers of religious fiction know little about doctrine or experience, and often the religious sentiment in them is distorted, and of unwholesome tendency. Where not mercenary, they are apt to be blind guides and unsafe teachers. Works of fiction cannot be excluded altogether from our young people or from any class of readers. It is neither practicable nor desirable. But discrimination, most rigid and careful, is demanded. The habit of mind, the utter absorption of thought, the diseased craving for excitement, and reading as a mere recreation, must be guarded against. Besides exercising judicious supervision over the young people, parents must take care that they do not implant this excessive love of fiction in their young children. The early craving for stories might be met and satisfied by real narratives, by bits of history, and by the many curious, entertaining and useful things which are found in the domain of natural history and science. Many children are nursed and raised on fiction, and it is not strange that the love of it ultimately possesses them, and perverts their whole being and career.

"Like Them That Dream."

BY DORCAS.

The poetic affiliation under such high auspices of wild fancy with sober reality, the dreams of slumbering senses, and the real surprises of good fortune, induces an abandon to the current whose drift, sure and steady, will bring us to the open sea at last; before that, the epochs the heart is set upon may be reached and passed, and a brief human life period may be divided by distinctive eras. A happy surprise of unexpected good fortune is like the ecstacy of a congenial vision in an hour of slumber. What are the points of similarity that seized the fancy of the poet, and imprinted on his thoughts this beautiful image?

Exceptional.—Both the pleasant dream and the happy surprise are exceptional in the course of human life. The toil to these cheerful pictures are the uniform common places and frequent reverses of life. These are the broader margins for vanishing speculations and creative perspectives. What a life could have been, look at the possibilities, measure the actualized. What a life may be, study the prospect. One bright spot shines in isolated splendor—a single dream, the one of a whole life of sleeping hours. One surprise, the single luck of yearning years, the pleasant taste upon the palate to be remembered, not repeated.

Reactional.—The wakened sense realizes only a dream—not of use save to suggest what might be, but is not, the more to be deprecated. The surprise, too good to be either true or lasting, a moment's joy to be followed by heart-breaking sorrow. When the turn in captivity came, what a joy came with it, a delirium of gladness! But when the ruin and desolation of the old home met the expectant eye, what a disappointment ensued, a sudden reaction that checked the hurried breathing, a collapse of the holiest enthusiasm, the laughter is gone, the singing tongue is mute, the heart beats heavily, languidly! Oh, the rush of memories as scene, time, place and pleasure come back, reviving feelings long depressed, opening the fountain of pent up tears, causing the flow of a bath for the Spirit, but how refreshed by it the glow of complexion, the exhilaration of recovered spirits, the dutiful submission to the rod, tells.

Prospectional.—Alike with a pleasant dream, and a surprise of good fortune, each fixes a prospect upon which the memory and the heart lingers. He will not forget me who has once done me a kindness—I must leave it to him—what more, but he has not excited a hope which he will fail to redeem. So with a dream. It lingers in the watchfulness that scans the coming home for what they bring. I shall know mine when it comes. I have the earnest in hand. How beautifully a pleasant dream and a piece of good luck gilds the edges of approaching time! How delightful the moments and sense of waiting for it!

The epochs of a mortal life have nearly all been reached—the most marked of all secured—the sweet surprise of peace found and kept, through believing. The ends are few—chief, youth separated from its natural drift by a call to the ministry. Startling as the stroke of a bell at midnight, trying as the brake upon the flax, exalting as the sentiment of reverence, which discerns the heart of the Deity upon him in the midst of affliction, "magnified by the divine regard."

And one pleasant dream, "like a fragment of Eden," stranded by a valley skirting the great desert, its light tinges the vista overhanging the sea yonder—the deep green sea, the boundless waters of the infinite life—a dream of heaven, the recovery and reunion of separated comrades, the realization of Hope's richest inspiration.

As the rim of the horizon touching the swelling surface of the broad sea affords a line of rest in the boundless to the eye of the finite, so yonder moment, in which mortal life closes, gives us faint and still pursuing, a resting point for soul, mind and spirit.

"Like them that dream," we gratifyingly indulge all the delights faith brings to earth from the romantic lands that skirt the great beyond and would not waken to tell the echoes in the cold, damp, dark vault that answers back the heartless challenge of unbelief. Dream though it be, or very like a dream, from its ravishing sweetness, fill, oh! fill my slumbering and waking hours.

Expense of Our Missionary Operations.

A careful calculation will show that the missionary operations of the Southern Methodist Church are carried on at an annual expense of from three to four cents on the dollar. If this statement be true, then the Board of Missions can well afford to compare the facts and figures in reference to its operations as a business venture with the business transactions of the best managed firms in the commercial world. We presume, for we do not know, that no business firm on the continent of America can make as good a showing as the Board of Missions of our Southern Methodism. So confident are we as to the prudence, forethought and painstaking economy of those charged with this matter, that we would be willing to see the books of the Missionary Secretary put side by side with the books and accounts of any of the business men of our land. What merchant can invest $100,000 in his business, and carry on his trade at an expense of from three to four cents on the dollar? It evidently stands him in hand to have as little expense as possible. If he is a business man he studies this side of the question with great care, and cuts off an expense here, and one there, so as to increase his profits by that much. If it be true as assumed, that our missionary operations are carried on for the sum named, then what becomes of the charge "that if takes nine dollars of every ten raised for missions to get the tenth dollar to the place where it is needed." An enemy hath said this—said it with an intent to injure the cause of missions so dear to the heart of every child of God. If the statement were true, and it actually took nine dollars to get the tenth one to the foreign field, the statement would not weigh a feather against the cause, provided there had been no needless outlay in the management of the business. This is a question of salvation—the salvation of souls—and we are for missions, even though it took ninety nine dollars to get the hundredth one to the place where it could do good, and aid in saving souls. It is astonishing how readily some men swallow down every statement that in any way reflects upon religion, or upon the honesty and integrity of men professing godliness. If any thing or statement be against religion and the cause of God, it is therefore true. Many persons have, no doubt, repeated this charge against the cause of missions in ignorance of the facts in the case. They had heard it said, and jumped to the conclusion that it was true—indeed such persons have a propensity to jump to conclusions on the side of evil. Once every year the Board of Missions makes out and prints in pamphlet form a complete and minute account of all its operations, giving a tabulated statement of the fractional parts of every dollar received, and the items of expenditure, even to the last cent. These reports containing carefully audited accounts can be had for the asking; in fact, the Board of Missions covets nothing so much as investigation into its operations. It would be glad if every man, woman and child in our church would read these reports, and see and know what is doing and what ought to be done. The Board is not afraid to have its operations inspected by the business men of the church and world. These things are not done in a corner by a set of tricksters who wish to hide their transactions from the world. They are the servants of the church and of the world, and make a full and fair showing of their work whenever called upon for it. Indeed, the members of the Methodist Church, and all persons who contribute as much as one cent to the cause of missions, are to that amount partners in this business venture, and have a right to know what becomes of their money, and how it was expended. If they have not invested anything in the enterprise, they have neither part nor lot in the matter, and it is only an act of officious impertinence when they undertake to criticise the management of other people's business. But if they wish to invest, and would like to know what they are doing, any live Methodist preacher who keeps abreast of his work will be able, on a moment's notice, to furnish them the facts and figures as to the missionary operations of our church. Our people need information in these matters; hundreds of them would be glad to know the facts, and, knowing them, would willingly help the cause. Intelligent friends of missions are friends forever. Get the book, and give the people the facts.

R. C. PORTER.

Temperance in England.

Prof. J. P. Lacroix, writing from London to the Northern Christian Advocate, says:

One of the most lively interests among the earliest Christians of England at present is the cause of temperance. This cause has long ago passed the stage at which it was a subject of ridicule. It has conquered respectability. It has assumed a definite, organized form. Temperance associations spread like a network over the whole United Kingdom. They make active use of the press. The reading-room table of Ling's Hotel, South Place, Finnsbury, where I stop, is covered with a large variety of temperance publications, tracts, monthlies and weeklies, and the secular papers treat the whole subject not sneeringly, as was formerly the case, but respectfully, if not encouragingly.

It has also vindicated its place among legitimate themes for the pulpit. The great bishops and archbishops of the Established Church have, almost without exception, (why do not their American brothers imitate them?) come out in earnest favor of total abstinence, and they gladly preside and make addresses at great temperance mass meetings.

And surely there is need of this reform, for intemperance is a very canker, eating out the life of the English masses. At least this is the case with the laboring class in all great cities. New York is bad enough, but it seems to me that London, Glasgow and Liverpool are much worse in this respect. With us drinking or drunkenness is largely confined to men, but in England it embraces the women and even the infant at the mother's breast. For it is the common practice of the gin-drinking women to give a portion of every dram to the nursling in their arms. And of all sights this side of perdition, the saddest, it seems to me, is that presented every evening among the gin-houses of London, where poor haggard women by thousands press forward through coarse crowds of men to the ever flowing fountains of death.

The middle classes, I am convinced, are much less addicted to drink than formerly. It is quite rare now that men of wealth and of respectable antecedents become actual drunkards incapable of attending to their commerce or the duties of their professions. With them it is a thing non gentee and even disgraceful to drink to excess. Still the practice of habitual moderate drinking (as a part of their daily meals) is very prevalent. And this is one of the most serious obstacles to the whole cause. In America where, as a rule, every moderate drinker ends with becoming a sot, it is easy to convince the whole public that the only safe course is abstinence. But in England, where the cool, phlegmatic dram drinker often lives up to eighty, without ever once having been really "drunk," it is a very different matter.

Rev. Dr. R. Abbey, writing from Yazoo City, Miss., to the St. Louis Christian Advocate about the Dixon affair, and concerning which the Northern brethren have made so much ado, says:

The two parties here, one called Regular Democrats and the other Independents, have each met in this town on different days, by delegates selected, and quietly, and without molestation, nominated their candidates for all the county offices and the legislature. This was done in the usual way, with no semblance of strife or hinderance beyond the usual scramble for office seen everywhere.

Secondly. The public trouble here was not party against party, but the "regular" Democratic party against one individual person. That man is now dead; he was shot in the street and killed about a week ago. He was a candidate for sheriff but was not nominated by any party or persons.

Thirdly. The opposition to this man, whose name was Dixon, was his tens, and of a kind and enmodying circumstances such as I have not known or heard of before.

Lastly. Without expressing any opinion at all, for I am only stating facts, some of the persons who sought to prevent Dixon from being a candidate were among our best citizens, as quiet, as peaceable, as law abiding, as prudent, yea, and as old and as religious as you and I would claim to be. It is also true, that some of the friggings or ravellings of the Dixon matter, rather than the matter itself, were, with some little success, sought to be forced into political quarters. But the matter was personal and not political. The killing was purely personal and individual.

HEALTH OF NEW ORLEANS.—No cases of yellow fever, and no deaths from this disease during the week ending Sunday, September 14. There have been no new cases since September 1. The few cases that have occurred this summer were sporadic, and at no time has the city been an infected place. It is, at this time, as clear of yellow fever as any city in the United States. Dr. Burke, the representative of the National Board of Health, admits that his telegram, a week or ten days ago, announcing two mild cases of yellow fever here, was founded on error, and that the cases referred to were not yellow fever. There are no good reasons whatever for the maintenance of quarantines against New Orleans. Dr. Bell, the distinguished sanitarian of New York, now on a visit to this city, declares that it is one of the cleanest and healthiest cities in the nation. Families absent during the summer are returning in large numbers daily, the public schools are open and thronged with pupils, and the bill of mortality for the past week is the lowest that has been known at this season for many years.

—A portion of our "Field Notes" for the week will be found on the second page. These items of intelligence from the country and the churches are received with great favor by our subscribers generally. In order that they may not overrun the space which can be given them, the writers must give only facts, and only write when they have something to say of general interest. The details of a meeting, the preachers present, the character of the sermons, and some other things, are not what the average reader cares to know. The work done, the results in conversions, the hearty, joyful churches built, members received, are matters that all like to hear. Our brethren have done marvelously well in condensing. They will appreciate the need of studying brevity.

—We are compelled to delay some excellent articles on hand. The paper will not stretch, and only a certain amount can go in at each issue. We ask our contributors to continue to write. Everything of merit will find a place, sooner or later, if it be not too long, and if it be suited to our purpose in making an interesting and edifying religious journal. We have put our first page, and some other parts of the paper, in smaller type, in order to make room for more matter. Let our friends continue to write. We need illustrate, short articles, carefully written, on religious, literary and social topics.

—A very fatal fever of some sort has broken out at Concordia, a little town on the Mississippi river, seventy miles above Greenville. The disease is supposed to be yellow fever. As the place is not very far from Memphis, this supposition is reasonable, but still there may be some mistake.

—The fever at Memphis is still prevailing at about the same rate as for a month past. If it is governed by the usual law of yellow fever epidemics, it must begin to abate shortly.

—On our third page will be found an article, from one of our well-known contributors, on Christian Citizenship, the subject of the Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, September 21.

Rev. T. D. Wardlaw, one of the most distinguished Presbyterian ministers in Tennessee, died at Shelbyville, Friday, August 22, at the age of about 55 or 60 years. He was born in Ireland, and was regarded as one of the most accomplished and highly educated ministers in his Church, and was one of the ripest scholars in Tennessee. He was for a long time pastor of the Presbyterian church in Clarksville, and a Professor in the college at that place. On account of his pronounced Southern views during the war, he was silenced from preaching by the Federal authorities. He thereupon went to New York, studied medicine, and graduated as an M. D.

He was pastor of several churches in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and Tennessee. In character he was modest and reserved with strangers; with those he knew, frank and gifted with a mild, genial humor which was like May sunshine. In the pulpit he was too metaphysical to be popular, and yet he won, even upon the minds of hearers, by his clear demonstrations and his solid logic. Not a pulpit orator, he was not excelled as a pulpit reasoner. His learning was vast, but so deftly used that it appeared as patchwork in his sermons or conversation. His work was from it. It was not used as reasoning. As a close and constant friend, a true man, a genial companion, simple and unostentatious as a child in his intercourse, and as inflexible as a rock in the right, none who have ever known will ever forget him.—Nashville American.

J. B. Wilson, former publisher of the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, has disposed of his interest to the editor, Dr Samuel K. Cox. Dr. Cox is now both editor and proprietor of the paper. In assuming the entire charge Dr. Cox says:

We are gratified to state that the Episcopal Methodist during the fourteen years of its existence was never in a more hopeful and healthy condition than now. It is free from all embarrassment, and has a large, reliable and steadily increasing subscription list. All the present indications give promise of a bright and prosperous future. Very much is due to those generous and noble brethren of the laity who, at a time when the very existence of the paper was imperiled, came to the rescue, and liberally invested their means without the slightest expectation of any return. Under their skillful management, or that of their business representative, Bro. J. B. Wilson, it has reached its present favorable condition. The church owes these brethren a grateful and lasting recognition.

Rev. R. S. Trippett, in a private note dated Doncaster, Yorkshire, England, August 16 says:

I enclose you another scrap from the Wesleyan Conference. I intended to have spent some time in Birmingham, but the terrible state of my wife's health called me away. I expected to have left for New Orleans by the twentieth of August, but in account of your city being quarantined and other causes unforseen, I shall remain awhile longer. My Methodist brethren treat me very cordially, and I have preached in them twice, every Sunday since I have been over.

We have had a very wet summer—it has rained nearly every day since I landed in England. The farmers are in great distress respecting their crops. Business is very dull and there is a good deal of suffering among the working classes. I hope to be able to return next month. Kind regards to the brethren.

A greater outrage against the convictions and feelings of our Protestant Christian people could not well have been perpetrated than was committed in the military and other demonstrations on Sunday last in New Orleans. It was the anniversary of the ever memorable Fourteenth of September, when a number of our citizen soldiery lost their lives in resisting usurpation and tyranny. However noble and patriotic the cause, the celebration was an unmitigated desecration of the Sabbath, and an invasion of the rights of those who desire a quiet Sabbath and the privilege of undisturbed divine worship. The parade of soldiery, the noise of bands of music, the firing of cannon, and the general crowding of the streets with multitudes of spectators, were anything but agreeable to those who have any regard for God and His commandments.

The Rev Dr. Charles Taylor writes to the Christian Advocate that the first missionaries from Kentucky to China the Rev. Clarence F. Reid and his estimable wife, left for their distant field of labor, August 26, full of Christian hope and enthusiastic zeal—expecting to sail from San Francisco on the steamer of September 13. They expected that Miss Dora Rankin, of Tennessee, would probably reach San Francisco in time to accompany them. Miss Dora Rankin—sweet sister Miss Loettie Rankin now in China—goes from Mitau, the home of their parents, in the hands of the Memphis Conference. How the consecration of these two young sisters to the great work of China should stir all our hearts, and particularly the hearts of our Christian women! It calls loudly upon them to increase their activity and liberality through their own organization the Woman's Missionary Society.—Western Methodist.

The exercises of the camp meeting near this city, says the St. Louis Christian Advocate of September 3, were closed on Sunday night last. The presiding elder informs us they had a delightfully pleasant, and, as he thought, a very profitable meeting. We have not been informed as to the number of conversions and accessions to the church, although we were told there were quite a number of the former. The congregations from time to time, are said to have been large and orderly; except on the first Sunday the weather was delightfully pleasant, the sermons of Bishops Kavanaugh and Powman, and those of some other ministers, were very highly spoken of, and, on the whole, it seems to have been a very enjoyable occasion.

In our school notes, some two or three weeks ago, we omitted Readville Seminary, Baton Rouge, La. This is one of the oldest and best schools in the State for girls. It is most truly a select home school, in which young ladies will have a mother's care and the best of literary advantages and moral and religious influences. Mrs. Read has been for many years at the head of this school, and her pupils everywhere in the South are an honor and a blessing to society. The next session begins October 1. See card in another column.

The New York Democratic Convention met at Syracuse, September 11. The following are the nominations by the regular Convention: For Governor, Lucius Robinson; for Lieutenant Governor, Clarkson N. Potter, of West Chester; for Secretary of State, Allen C. Beach; for Comptroller, Thomas W. Olcott; for State Treasurer, James Macklin; for Attorney General, A. Schoonmaker, Jr. The Tammany delegation withdrew from the Convention, and nominated John Kelly as their candidate for Governor.

The editor of the Central Methodist, Callettsburg, Ky., cannot be a presiding elder as some other editor's are. This is what Bro. Meek says:

Correspondents, at this season of the year, need not write us of their "beloved presiding elder," since we have no room for such matter. If they deserve the praise usually heaped upon them, they do not need it; if they need it, they do not deserve it.

By the way, we wish our contributors would not feel under obligations to give the names of all the brethren helping at a meeting. It takes up valuable space and is unnecessary.

Bishop Doggett held the Western Virginia Conference at Clarksburg, W. Va., September 3-8. Dr. McFerrin was present, and received $250 in subscriptions to the four per cent. bonds. The Central Methodist says:

Bishop Doggett, though not feeble, is not in vigorous health. He will spend Sunday next in Covington and Newport, preaching in Scott Street Church in the forenoon, and Taylor Street in the evening. Our brethren there may expect a rich intellectual and spiritual treat.

Rev. J. T. Daves, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Shreveport, La., writing September 13, informs us that his charge is doing well, the church has been recently painted, congregations have kept up remarkably during summer, prayer meetings lively, and the interest of the church in missions growing. Business in Shreveport excellent; receipts of cotton large for the season; health good.

G. W. Kern, in a private note dated Pattersonville, La., September 11, informs us that Rev. A. E. Clay, pastor of our church at Pattersonville and Morgan City, has been sick for three weeks. There has been but one death from yellow fever at Morgan City this season. What few cases they have had there seem to have been of a sporadic and mild character.

Says the Richmond Christian Advocate, August 28: The roof is now being put on the Duncan Memorial building at Ashland, and unless it has to be stopped for want of funds, which would be a shame, it will soon reach completion. It is a massive and imposing structure.

Rev. Dr. Mathews returned from his trip to West Virginia last week, in vigorous health. He speaks of his visit as a very pleasant one. The camp meeting at Moundville was a rousing time.

The summer religious conventions are suppressing the Sunday travel as far as they can. Chautauqua, Thousand Isles, Cazenovia, Round Lake, Ocean Grove, and others, have closed their gates to Sunday excursionists.

The Three Hundred Thousand Secured.

The Book Committee of the Southern Methodist Publishing House at a meeting September 1, announce that the sum of three hundred thousand dollars has been secured in subscriptions for the four per cent. bonds. The action of the Book Committee is given on first page. The following from the Book Agent is all that we have space for at present:

TO THE SUBSCRIBERS TO OUR PER CENT. BONDS.

You have seen that the three hundred thousand dollars asked for to relieve the Southern Methodist Publishing House has been secured. The Book Agent is instructed to make collections as "rapidly as possible." He takes this method of asking all those who have subscribed to forward the money at the earliest possible date. On its receipt certificates will be returned and held by the subscribers till the bonds are prepared, registered and ready to be delivered. The importance of a speedy settlement with the creditors will be appreciated by every one interested in the fortunes of the House.

Note particularly. Moneys sent should be in drafts or checks on Nashville or New York banks, payable to the order of J. B. McFerrin, Book Agent. Where these cannot be procured send by express or postal order.

Many brethren, I presume, will calculate on paying at the time and place of the meeting of their respective Annual Conferences. If the money cannot be safely remitted before the Conference meets, please be ready at that time. The agent, or Dr Young, or some one else authorized to receive and receipt, will be present with the certificates as provided for by the action of the Committee. In the absence of the Book Agent, L. D. Palmer, Business Manager, will sign the certificates for moneys sent to Nashville. Now, brethren, let us act promptly, and the work will soon be done.

J. B. M'FERRIN, Book Agent.

All our church papers are requested to give the foregoing two or three insertions.

Books and Periodicals.

—From Darkness to Light is the title of a neat little paper-covered volume by Rev. George G. Smith, of the North Georgia Conference, John W. Burke & Co. publishers, Macon, Ga. The subject is "advice to the awakened sinner," and is handled in a way to help the inquirer to find salvation.

—The Preacher and Homiletic Monthly for September is the closing number of the present volume, and is of special interest. Among its contents are the following: Sermon: "Sowing and Reaping in the Kingdoms of Nature and Grace," by James McCosh, D. D., LL. D., delivered before the graduating class at Princeton College, and revised for this publication; "Reverence and Godly Fear," by Henry J. Van Dyke, D. D.; "The Testimony of Our Conscience," by J. H. Rylance, D. D.; "The Human Side of Christ's Person," by Rev. David Winters. The four sermons just mentioned are given in full. There are a number of sermons given in abridged form from Drs. Van Doren, Tyng, Harris, Bonar, Herrick Johnson, Foss and others. These reports and abridgments are made especially for this publication. $2 50 per year; 25 cents per copy. I. K. Funk & Co., New York.

—Good Company, No. 1 (formerly Sunday Afternoon,) for September is brought out in handsome style, and is one of the freshest and most inviting of the magazines of the day. Among its numerous and attractive articles we note: A Wilderness Romance, by Charles Dudley Warner; Hospital Work in New York, by William H. Rideing; Do Not Even the Publicans the Same?—a story, by Horace E. Scudder; Nature and Revelation, by Austin Bierbower; A German School, by C. H. Hamlin; All Day Long in Paris, by Sophia Gage Burr; Mr. Scattergood's First Parish, a story, by Ellen W. Olney. Good Company is published at Springfield, Mass. Price, $1 a year.

—The Princeton Review for September has: Progress of Christianity in the United States, Philip Schaff, D. D.; The Philosophic Movement in Italy, Prof. Luigi Ferri, Ph. While we continue to do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements from the ADVOCATE, parties must judge for themselves as to the real value of the goods advertised. In ordering please mention the ADVOCATE.

THE ADVOCATE

FOR FIFTY CENTS TO JANUARY, 1880.

The publisher announces to the thousands of our friends that he will send the paper from date to January next on receipt of fifty cents, in currency or postage stamps. This is done to facilitate securing new subscribers, and, feeling assured that with but little effort on the part of our patrons, thousands of persons could be induced to take advantage of this trial offer, many of whom after that time would become permanent subscribers. Will they exert themselves to swell the list? There is no other investment that will supply the same amount of interesting reading matter, fresh each week, as this liberal offer. Let us hear from you as early as possible.

THE ADVOCATE FREE.

To any person sending us four yearly subscribers with $8, the paper will be sent free for one year. Sample copies will be mailed to parties when advised, to facilitate agents in securing subscribers. Address all communications in connection with above to the publisher.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS of the staff of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, left Wednesday evening, for the West and East, on business connected with the ADVOCATE. We bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—Fruit jars. Mason pints, $1; quarts, $1 25; two quarts, $1 50 per dozen; American china dinner sets, $15-$18. Equal in looks and usefulness to French China. 19

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so central a first-class house, having reduced its rates to $1 and $1 50 per day.

KEWANEE WINDMILL.—For particulars respecting this popular wind mill see the card on the sixth page. It is considered to be the best one in use, and those requiring a reliable and at the same time an economical windmill should buy one from the Kewanee Manufacturing Company, 35 Broadway, N. w York. They invariably take the premium wherever exhibited. Agents wanted.

A PEN WORTH RECOMMENDING.—We have been favored with samples of the celebrated Spencerian Double Elastic Steel Pens, and after trying them, feel justified in highly commending them to our readers. They are made of the best steel, and by the most expert workmen in Europe, and have a world wide reputation for reliable, durable qualities which no other pens seem to have attained in so great perfection, combining with a uniform evenness of point durability, elasticity and precision. It is thus not to be wondered that the Spencerian should be preferred and used by professional penmen in business colleges and public and private schools throughout the country. Indeed, so popular have they become that of the Number One alone as many as eight millions are sold annually.

The Spencerian Pens may be had at a trifle from any dealer; but we, if not thus obtainable, the proprietors, Messrs. Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Co. the well known publishers, 138 and 140 Grand Street, New York, will send for trial samples of each of the twenty numbers on receipt of twenty-five cents.

QUEBU'S COD LIVER OIL.—This excellent oil is approved by the Academy of Medicine of New York for coughs, colds, bronchial and tubercular consumption, etc. It is manufactured by E. H. Trox, 3 Platt street, New York, one of her most honorable citizens. For sale by all druggists. Quebu & Trox.

THE AMERICAN WARWICKSHIRE SAUCE.—The above sauce is manufactured by S. H. Clark & Co., the oldest sauce men in the United States. This excellent article is much cheaper than the Worcester's fine, and is fast superseding it wherever the Warwickshire is known. A large number of the principal hotels in New York take it in preference to Lea & Perrins'. It is very pleasant and agreeable to the taste. Try a bottle, and you will give up using any of the others. If your country grocer does not keep it W. G. Lyon & Co., 25 Tchoupitoulas st. will supply you with any quantity you may want. See advertisement, and remember it is cheaper than all first-class sauces.

DR. HUMPHREYS' PREPARATIONS. This gentleman's preparations are known from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Gulf to the Lakes, so it would be useless to say anything about him or his valuable medicines. See his advertisement on this page.

Pure Cod-Liver Oil made from fresh selected livers on the seashore, by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York. Is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have declared it superior to any of the other brands in market.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

BE YE LIKE FOOLISH.

"For ten years my wife was confined to her bed with such complication of ailments that medicine could tell what was the matter or cure her, and I had given a small fortune in trying and exhausted nearly all I possessed, when I was induced to try Hop Bitters. I said to myself, I will be a fool no longer to physic, but will try what virtue there is in Hop Bitters, and if that fails I will be a fool no longer, and let her die. The Hop Bitters did their work well and in a few months was restored to health as sound as a new dollar, and has been ever since. Be ye likewise foolish." H. W. DeGOLYER, M. C.

IF PEOPLE WILL SUFFER from the dangerous ills that meet us everywhere in spring, and neglect to ward off the danger, how can we quick it can be cured, by taking AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to purify the life from their systems; we should have fewer neighbors as well as clearer heads to deal with.

Hygienic.

If you are bilious have headache, indigestion, pain in the side, back or chest, feel lassitude, suffer with constipation, sour stomach, bad taste in the mouth, or any derangement of the biliary secretions, use Maguire's Cuadrangle, the Great Liver Invigorator, Blood Cleanser, Anti-Bilious Purgative and system renovator.

PEOPLE residing in palmful districts, or removing to such localities, can place reliance in the efficacy of Dr. F. Wilhite's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic, to prevent or rather counteract all malarial diseases. It never fails to cure Chills and Fever, Dumb Chills and Enlarged Spleen, and is guaranteed to contain no poisonous drug. The composition of this medicine is given with each bottle, and can be had from all druggists.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, clog, blister or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

Farm, Garden and Household.

FOR THE MONTH.

CLOVER

In the northern part of the cotton belt and where stiff soils are present, clover will be sure to and very profitably grown. We have never seen a crop which gave to land so much "heart" as this. In our old fields it improves under it as a rule of course, always. We have [illegible] seed from the first cutting of clover, as it is generally [illegible] crops and gets it. The Southern farmer's element would bring [illegible] of clover on very ordinary land and more manure [illegible] since. We believe it costs only $14.00 a ton to C. at cost and 50 lbs. per acre is the quantity usually applied. Where power cannot be grown, the pea must take its place as a renovator; but as this is not a winter crop we pass it by for the present.

BARLEY AND RYE.

For winter pasture towards the Gulf, and early spring grazing or soiling further North, these two hardy well known plants stand unrivalled for hardiness and for the certainty and quantity of their yields. Make the land very rich, put it in good tilth, and sow 2 or 4 bushels barley per acre and you have pretty certain of rich, unsurpassed food for your horses and cows in early spring. The land need not be made quite as rich for rye, but the richer it is the better it will be, and two bushels of seed per acre will suffice. Procure seed raised as near us possible to your own locality. Western seed does not do well. After saying this much we will depend upon our readers to sow largest of these grains—at least one bushel per each horse, mule and milk cow. You will not regret it next spring when your barns begin to look empty, and your cows are pinched for food.

OATS.

It is hardly necessary for us to urge the seeding sowing of a large area in oats. The great value of this crop is now so generally appreciated. Almost every farmer we meet nowadays is convinced that oats are both cheapest and better food for horses than corn. Rust proof oats on good land and well tilled have supplanted Western seed in poor hands and the "rosilla" certain crops and large crops, again—small crops and failures a few years ago. We prefer to make two sowings—one in September and one in January—both seldom fail.

WHEAT

Let every farmer arrange to sow enough for home consumption. Select high, dry rolling land and manure heavily with cotton seed and phosphate and sow in drills running north and south. Sow all early variety of southern wheat, and as we say in Latin, as the "early" is over the better the crop will be, the less the danger from rust, which is the great thing to be dreaded.—Southern Cultivator.

FRUIT SYRUPS.—The following seasonable directions for making fruit syrups are from the Cubic Tourist Journal:

For cherry syrups only the dark red sour cherries should be used, and for raspberry syrups the red berries, as they contain the most juice and have the richest flavor.

All fleshy and juicy fruits contain pectin, which substance causes the fresh fruit juice to be slimy and to gelatinize if boiled with sugar and afterwards cooled. When a syrup made of fruit juice contains some of this pectin, it is certain soon to mould and to spoil. Therefore the fruit juices have to be freed first from the pectin before they are made into syrups. The pectin has to be decomposed, and this is done by fermentation.

The fruits are first crushed and set aside for three or four days in an earthen jar, the mass being stirred once a day with a wooden spatula. The juice is now pressed out and set aside again for a few days, until fermentation is completed and the juice appears clear. In order to detect any undecomposed pectin, a little of the juice is mixed with a concentrated solution of magnesium sulphate, which, if any pectin is present, it will congeal or gelatinize, or a thicker precipitate will separate. The juice, mixed with twice its volume of 90 per cent. alcohol, should form a clear solution.

The juice is then filtered through paper, and to the crushed fruit 2 per cent. of sugar is added. Fermentation will go on more promptly, and the fermented juice will filter more rapidly. In five parts of this filtered juice nine parts of the best white sugar are dissolved by the aid of heat, the temperature is raised to the boiling point, and the solution strained while hot. No iron vessels should be used. The vessel containing the syrup is covered with a large sheet of paper and set aside in a cool place for a day. The syrup is now filtered into perfectly dry bottles of convenient size, the bottles are tightly corked, and late on, a shelf in the cellar. The syrups thus prepared will keep well for one or two years.

FRUIT CANS AND CANNING.—In the canning of fruits and vegetables, the writer, after having used a great variety of cans and jars, including tin, glass, earthenware, etc., with various methods of fastening and sealing, has found none as yet so perfect and convenient as the "Mason" glass jar with porcelain lined screw caps. A ring of India rubber is placed over the neck of the jar inside, upon which the lower edge of the cap presses firmly when screwed down, rendering it air tight.

For convenience in filling the cans, I use a large funnel tinned. This has a tube soldered on the inside of the tunnel at its mouth or lower end through which an iron rod the size of a large pipe stem passes or fits, the lower end resting on the bottom of the jar. This prevents the jar from breaking when suddenly filled with material boiling hot. The philosophy of this I do not exactly see, but I know it to be true from experience.

In filling over two hundred of these jars last year with fruits and vegetables boiling hot, one was broken by the heat, although they were scalded and nothing was done to prepare them for the sudden heat.—Prairie Farmer, Loveland, O.

RUST IN WHEAT.—As a general rule when Ayer's Sarsaparilla is used the first day apply one thousand dollars to show decisive results. That an imposing gesture, a hundred pounds of iron and show much good iron will be done to the growing crop. Proved daily. Rust in cases not readily recognized on this farm pasture season decided on one hundred and fifty days, then a long increase of wheat per acre is but about thirteen pounds. A typical case in England, where bone and [illegible] to favor rust [illegible] Land [illegible] to direct or [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Scientific.

COPYING PROCESS.—The imperfections of the ordinary copying press have led to the invention of a number of appliances for copying letters, drawings, etc., by chemical and artistic means. Of these, the "blue process" and one or two others have come into general use, and are more or less satisfactory; and more recently a new chemical process, said to be cheap and effective, has been announced. Make a warm mixture of 100 grams of fine gelatine with 400 or 500 cubic centimeters of a pasty precipitate of sulphate of baryta, and when well mixed add 100 grams of dextrine and from 1,000 to 1,200 grams of glycerine. When melted, allow it to cool till just sufficiently fluid to flow, when a little may be poured into a shallow dish and allowed to harden. If this becomes quite hard and stiff, add more glycerine and pour the whole into a shallow tin tray and let it cool. Write the letters in a thick aniline ink—"Violet de Paris" will answer—and lay the sheet, written side down, on the jelly-like preparation, and press it down gently for a minute or two. In lifting the paper a part of the ink will be found transferred to the jelly, when sheets of paper may be laid on the jelly and reprints taken from it. Sufficient ink clings to the jelly to give forty or fifty impressions, when the surface of the jelly must be sponged clean with cold water. The tray containing the jelly must be kept in a cool place, and if not used for a day or two must be moistened with a sponge before using. Another formula employs 100 grams of gelatine, 1,000 grams glycerine, and 500 cubic centimeters sulphate of baryta, and gives sharper impressions from the sheet of jelly; but in cooling it with water must be used.

THE DISINFECTING LAMP.—The public authorities of Constantinople are considerably interested in the new lamps used in disinfecting the cafés, and the general public has entertained some very strong views about this disinfecting instrument. Some people picture to themselves a syringe which squirts carbolic acid over passengers and shirts, until they look as if they had come from a mud bath. Such notions are wide of the truth. A person can place one of the lamps almost against the face and will experience nothing but the smell of the coal. He does not feel as if he were being disinfected at all. The same apparatus is used in the European hospitals for examinations, and it is estimated that the mortality has been decreased one-half by these precautions. In order to set the public mind at rest, a lamp subject, a description was necessary. In the first place, there is a small tin reservoir of water, provided with a tube. The latter causes a vacuum in the cooling coil, to carry the acid, which is placed by itself in a small tin receptacle, and by the action of the air is thrown over the spray-like top. The "spray" and not anything else is thrown, and the process is going on in one corner by a most simple method could be produced in a few hours. The best disinfectants are regard carbolic acid as the most effective, for in spite of its poisonous nature, it is the only one which destroys the germs of malignant fevers, such as cholera, typhus, and yellow fever, solely, who has been a student of the subject.

A study of the various forms of animal life, from the smallest to the largest, will show that the definite variety of form and color, as well as the habits of propagation, are the most general characteristics of the different species of animals. Even the most minute animalcules, which are invisible to the naked eye, are found to be endowed with the same characteristics of color and form as the larger animals. It was by such observations that Linnæus was led to the definite variety of form and color, as well as the habits of propagation, as

CURED OF DRINKING.

"A young friend of mine was cured of an insatiable thirst for liquor that had so prostrated his system that he was unable to do any business. He was entirely cured by the use of Hop Bitters. It allayed all that burning thirst; took away the appetite for liquor; made his nerves steady; and he has remained a sober and steady man for more than two years, and has no desire to return to his cups, and I know of a number of others that have been cured of drinking by it."—From a leading R. R. Official, Chicago, Ill.—Advt.

SHEET GINGER-BREAD.—Two teaspoonfuls Kellogg's Baking Powder, sifted dry in one quart flour; two eggs; two tablespoonfuls ginger; butter the size of an egg; a cup of water and a pint of molasses.

VASELINE.

You may hunt the world over and still will not find
A need of the household, which brings to the mind
The idea of value more plain to be seen
Than petroleum jelly, the famed Vaseline.

If a cut or a pimple, or a wound or a burn
From peace to confusion, the household shall turn,
On the shelf should be found the foe of all pain,
And quiet shall reign in the household again.

If our dearest and fairest are kissed by the sun,
And the touch of his lips is too rough to be borne,
Kind Vaseline comes as all sally he wisely,
And the cheek takes on well-it had not else seen.

If the voice it is husky, the throat it is sore,
Take the jelly at once, and the trouble is o'er.
In fact read the circular, and learn it clean
All the virtue and praises of the famed Vaseline.

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the flash germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5 (if to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER.

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventive for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during the last season in New Orleans very successfully, the common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. The reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the miasmal poison. They are very cheap and almost certain preventive. Ask your physicians about them. Benson's Capcine Plaster are sure preventive and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

The Archduchess Christine of Austria, who is to become Queen of Spain, is just twenty one years old—a year younger than King Alphonso.

TESTIMONIALS FROM WELL-KNOWN PERSONS.

From Mrs. General Sherman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 21 1870.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—From very much pleased with the Piano you made for me. It is really a fine instrument. In every respect and is admired by all who have seen and heard it. For its fine tone, delicacy of touch, and beauty of finish. Many good judges, and distinguished persons have called since it has been in our parlor, and all pronounce it a fine instrument. We ourselves are delighted with it. I shall most certainly recommend it to my friends who may wish to purchase.

I am, very truly and respectfully yours,
ELLEN H. E. SHERMAN,
205 I Street.

St. James, December 27, 1873.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very happy to be able to rank your Pianos as one of the very best I ever had and saw. I think the touch and brilliancy of tone required to perform the great pieces of modern and classical masters are equal to any Piano made in this country. Hoping that your Pianos will also stand our climate as well as any other manufactured at the North, I shall with much pleasure recommend them wherever I have an opportunity. Very respectfully yours,
ANTHONY WIMMER,
Professor of Music, St. Mary Jefferson College, St. James, La., (Convent, P. O.)

From St. Vincent's Abbey, Beatty, P. O., Westmoreland County, Pa.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—The two Pianos have safely arrived, and on their first day of being here have reached a position of honor much above that in which they were originally intended. For, now that amidst their hands of walnut dresses, they have been put into the Music Hall, a latticework of rich rose-wood cases half yielded them their place. Thus, instead of serving the months at their pranks, they will be used by the professors at music lessons and concert performances.

From this it may be seen that the instrument you sent me did not only meet, but by far surpass my expectations. I find their tone rich and melodious, their action easy to obey, and, as I know of, surpassed. Very respectfully yours,

IGNATIUS THEIL, C. S. C. H.,
Professor of Music.

MY BIRTHDAY.

BY JULIA C. R. DORR.

My birthday! How many years ago
Events for Infancy? Don't ask me!
I never can remember!
I only remember my birthday comes
To hear new evidence—nothing more!
That once I, the Legends say,
A Child was born and that grows I
Heaven knows I vouch for the truth, I pray!

I know I mother—but when I came
To me the world was then an Enchanted
I know I think that flowers so plucked for me
Knew when its God began to bloom!

Ah me! Oh, misery strange as life!
To think that we who vary now so dear
Were once in our dreams so far apart,
Nor cared if the other were far or near!

But I was old as I. You must feel!
Just so old as I seem to you!
Never still I a day older be
While there's truth in and love is true.

—Good Company.

GREENVILLE, Miss., Sept 16.—Dr. Carrel, who went to Corinth as nurse was sent by Major Lee to this city to the relief of Concordia. Nothing has been heard from George Tobin's case and the fever is still confined. There is now no danger and could Dan the disease is yellow fever of the most malignant type.

Hugh D. Tobin and J. Key were taken on Tuesday and died on the twelfth. Spry took was taken on the same day, and died Sunday. The cases not hitherto reported are Conrad, Dora Miller and Adaline Arnold, Sallie White, Miss Sarah Pemberton and Mrs. J. Key.

The total failure of cotton in the Mississippi Delta. Almost seventy-five persons are dead in the unfortunate villages. Boats are being made to rescue the sick. In response to an urgent appeal two more physicians here last night for Concordia.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—Daniel Drew, a well known old man on the streets as Uncle Dan, died suddenly last night at his residence in this city, at the age of eighty two years.

GREENVILLE, Miss., Sept 19.—Four new cases at Concordia: Minerva Arnold and Caleb Smith, colored, Frank Tobin and Mr Bussing white. Sam Blesmond and Mrs. Keys dying, and Geo. Tobin's life despaired of. So far, out of sixteen cases no one has recovered.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 20, Evening.—Seven cases in all—6 white and one colored—were reported to the Board of Health to-day. The total number of new cases officially reported in the week 80, whites 48, colored 32; total to date 1216. Total deaths from yellow fever in the city for the week 31, total to date 340.

Donations to the Howards to day aggregate $3,250. They have 135 nurses on duty, attending 93 white and 32 colored families.

The thermometer has ranged between 54 and 72.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 20, P. M.—This was the closing day's session of the Grand Lodge I. O. O. F., and the public business transacted was comparatively unimportant. The resolution to repeal the law admitting unmarried daughters of the scarlet degree members to Rebecca degree Lodges was not adopted. The Grand Lodge refused to restore the conferring of the Rebecca degree to Rebecca degree Lodges. After two hours' secret session, the Grand Lodge adjourned sine die.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 21.—Upon the arrival of the steamship City of Tokio, at her wharf last evening Gen. Grant was received by the Governor and his staff, the fly officials, the Executive Committee of Arrangements, and welcomed by Mayor Bryant in a brief speech.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 22.—Two new cases of yellow fever developed near Dunlap Station, four miles east of this city. The sick are two children named Rokers.

GREENVILLE, Sept. 22.—Advices from Concordia, dated Sept. 20, have just been received. Although seven new cases and four deaths are reported, the situation is a trifle more encouraging, in view of the fact that a few of the sick at least are getting well.

STARKVILLE, Miss., Sept. 22.—This has been another gala day for Starkville. In fact one of interest to the State at large. The corner stone of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Mississippi was laid today with the usual Masonic honors. The ceremony was conducted by the officers of the State Lodge, several subordinate orders participating.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 22, Evening.—16 cases in all—12 whites, 4 colored—were reported to the Board of Health to-day. Among those reported this afternoon, are: R. T. Delney, Littleton Penn, Mrs. Ida Berman, H. Kornfeldt, Herbert Elsner, L. Ross, Frank Foster and Hetty Sprague. Three more deaths have been reported: D. L. Carmichael, Caleb Williams and Anderson Reeves, the two last colored.

SELMA, Ala., Sept. 22.—The Selma and Gulf railroad was sold under foreclosure today. The bidding was spirited. The Mobile and Montgomery railroad signal bid of $120,000, was raised $100 by Charles Williams, of Atlanta, for D. N. Sullivan, president and owner of the Peninsular railroad, who was declared the purchaser. The citizens of Selma are rejoiced at the prospect of a direct line to Peninsular Bay. The Mobile and Montgomery railroad did not bid, as a company, on the Selma and Gulf road. The syndicate was composed of New York parties.

FOREIGN.

CAPE TOWN, Sept. 2, via St. Vincent.—When Cetewayo was captured he was utterly prostrated. His followers were too weak to resist. The King and his men were taken to Natal. During the march eleven of his followers tried to escape; six were successful, the other five were shot. The King will be taken to Marizburg and from there to Greytown.

HAVANA, Sept. 13.—The American Bark Ann Elizabeth sailed from Havana on the 9th inst. for New York, infected with yellow fever. The British bark Prince Rupert, whose crew died and deserted of yellow fever, left two men in hospital, sick with the same disease, and sailed for New Orleans on the 11th inst. To-day the American brig Edes Brighton, in ballast, with yellow fever, sailed for New York. There were 117 deaths here from yellow fever during August. A close approximation for total number of cases of yellow fever existing in Havana and its hospitals to-day would become hundred and fifty.

D. M. BURGESS,
Sanitary and Quarantine Inspector.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—Rev. Charles Baring, Bishop of Durham, is dead.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—The following dispatch has been received from South Africa: Cape Town, Aug. 20, via Aden.—Moteri captured Cetewayo yesterday. Slatter was commissioned a captain of dragoons.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—The agent of the Eastern Telegraph Company in Aden confirms the report of the capture of Cetewayo by Major Slatter with a detachment of the 17th Dragoons, serving under Lord Gifford, in Northeast Zululand on the 21st of August.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—Sir Garnet Wolseley telegraphs from Sutherland that important Zulu chiefs have surrendered to the British authorities.

The St. Petersburg Golos says: "A great fire broke out Tuesday last in the town of Ekaterinoslaf, in South Russia, near Dnepr. The fire occurred in the most populous quarter of the town, and the damage is immense."

LONDON, Sept. 19.—The South Arkansas cable has been completed between Natal and Mozambique. The setting from Mozambique to Zanzibar will be finished before the 26th inst., when it will place South Africa within nine days communication with England.

LONDON, Sept. 19.—A dispatch from Cardamar says: Gen. Hughes's brigade has been ordered to Khyaghilzas. Regiments at Herat mutinied on the 10th inst., and murdered their commanders.

The Standard's Ali Kheyl dispatch says: Intelligence has been received here of a terrible outbreak at Herat. The troops have revolted and murdered civil and military authorities.

HAVANA, Sept. 20.—The insurgents have attacked the village of Mayori, in the Province of Santiago de Cuba. The garrison held out three days, when it was relieved by Gen. Valdez, who routed the insurgents and pursued them into the hills.

LONDON, Sept. 20.—The Indian Office reports the report of an outbreak at Herat on the 5th inst.

Special dispatches state that the troops of the native garrison plundered and burned the Governor's house, murdered the Commissary General, who was starved and supported on the Ameer. This addition throws suspicion upon the loyalty of Yakoob Kahn, brother of the Ameer.

LONDON, Sept. 20.—A dispatch, dated Valparaiso, August 29, via Lisbon, says: The Peruvian ram Huascar yesterday bombarded Antofagasta for five hours. The Chilian gunboats Magellanes and Abtao and the forts replied. The Abtao's hull was pierced three times and a considerable number of her crew were killed and wounded. The town was not much damaged.

The Chilian monitor Cavadonga arrived at Antofagasta four hours after the departure of the Huascar. The Chilian corvettes Covadonga and Chiggins, have gone in quest of the Peruvian corvett Union, which is reported to be creeping in the Straits of Magellan to interrupt Chilian transports. The Chilian Government has made an additional issue of six millions of pesos in paper money.

BERLIN, Sept. 21.—The Rev. Mr. Thompson the oldest member of the American colony here, died to-day of apoplexy.

CAPE TOWN, Sept. 22.—King Cetawayo will come here at once to await the orders of the Home Government. His capture has had a subduing effect among the natives, and danger of a rupture with the Pondos has passed away.

The final assembly of the great chiefs, comprising all people of Zululand was to be held at Ulundi, when the terms of peace were to be proclaimed and each of the chiefs so elected to rule over territories was to sign an agreement.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

RUSSELLVILLE, ALA., Sept. 6.—Your "Field Notes," given in the language of the correspondents, short but unedited, have a charm for every reader. We are in the midst of work, building a church near "The Hermitage," five miles from town. This community has long needed a church, and now it is up and covered; will soon be completed, and no debt over it. We have a good society here, and plenty material, which we hope, by the grace of God, to mould. Corn crop good; cotton much injured by rust.

JOHN C. STEADHAM.

LAFAYETTE, ALA., Sept. 12.—I was appointed by the Conference to the LaFayette station, but Hadeville having been deprived of a pastor the elder requested me to preach for them in addition to my work here. I have just closed a ten days' meeting there, which resulted in twenty-two conversions, nineteen of whom joined the Methodist Church and one the Baptist. It is probable that several others will join. Bros. Urquhart, of Auburn, Mayson, of LaGrange, Ga., and Cumble, of the Baptist Church in this place, rendered valuable aid.

H. F. LARRABEE.

ABBACOOCHEE CIRCUIT, ALA., Sept. 13.—I have been in protracted and revival meetings for several weeks. Have witnessed some of the brightest conversions of my ministerial experience. I have received thirty-two into the church this Conference year. There is some sickness and deaths, which does not seem to be confined to any particular age. Crops are generally good, and I think the finances of the church will all be brought up. Some new houses of worship are in course of erection.

JAMES E. MCAIN, P. C.

BAINBOE'S COVE CIRCUIT, ALA., Sept. 17.—We are having revivals on this circuit; have held four protracted meetings, resulting in twenty-one conversions, twenty nine accessions to the church, and the reviving of the membership. Health of the country good. Crops tolerably good.

J. M. DOBBS.

CLIFTON CIRCUIT, ALA., Sept. 11.—We have just closed a good meeting at Magnolia. Twenty-four accessions, and as many conversions. Interest intense during the whole meeting. We were assisted by Bros. G. Hawkins, J. D. Shipman and Geo. Tomlin. Crops in this circuit damaged by excessive rains.

G. F. ELLIS.

GENEVA, ALA., Sept. 15.—Our third quarterly Conference for Cerogordo mission was held at St. Paul's Chapel, September 13, Rev. E. Phillips, P. E. Congregations very large. Six additions to the church, four adults baptized and ten infants. The mission is moving on hopefully. Crops good. Health not good in some parts of the work.

H. B. REGISTER, P. C.

BLOUNTSVILLE, ALA., Sept. 16.—My wife has been sick five weeks with typhoid fever. She is recovering now. Health of the country generally good. Corn crops very fine. Cotton not so good. Spiritual condition of Blountsville circuit is hopeful. Just closed a meeting at New Lebanon; church wonderfully revived; ten conversions and eleven accessions. We hope to see the finances of the church all up by Conference.

J. T. MORRIS.

GENEVA, ALA., Sept. 16.—Crops are not good. Weather bad for gathering. The nights are cool. Sickness in every part of the circuit; not many deaths. We have held five protracted meetings; one was not a success. All of the others great good seems to have been done. A number of accessions to the church, several conversions reported, together with a general disposition on the part of churches to get to work, are the results.

GEO. G. SMITH.

LOATOPA, ALA., Sept. 17.—Cuba mission, Alabama Conference, is situated in southwest Sumter, on and contiguous to the Alabama Central and Alabama Great Southern Railroads, embracing four regular appointments. At York station, the crossing of the two railroads, a thriving little village, we are building a church hope to have it finished by December 1 costing about $800. We have had two meetings of considerable interest, with five accessions and several conversions. Finances are very low. Incessant rains during August damaged crops very much. Corn crop fair. Cotton sorry.

J. M. PATTON.

TOWN CREEK, ALA., Sept. 17.—We have had some profitable meetings in the Courtland circuit. Several conversions and twelve accessions. Many members of the church refreshed, hence some improvement. Health and crops moderately good in this valley. Finances only moderate, but we hope to be able to carry up to the Annual Conference a passible report.

T. G. MELTON.

ARKADELPHIA, ARK., Sept. 18.—We have a fine meeting here. I do not know the exact number of converts; at least thirty, I judge. Immense congregations and good order always. Fourteen additions to the church up to date. An excellent Sunday-school, using our own literature. Hope to get a parsonage here. Finances behind. This appointment will pay up.

R. T. HOGKWELL, P. C.

WHISTLER, ALA., Sept. 18.—There has just closed a long series of meeting at this place, resulting in the knowledge of many to their acceptance with God; backsliders have been reclaimed, and some who were not satisfied as to their peace with God resolved to seek until they obtained it. We can well say that we hear the songs of Zion in a strange land, when we hear them from working-men in railroad shops.

C. CHASLAIN.

MISSISSIPPI.

SARDIS, MISS., Sept. 11.—August was wet and unusually cool. Corn was injured by early drought. Cotton is more than average, or quite average. Temperature fluctuates; to day about eighty degrees; a few nights ago it fell below sixty degrees. We expect early frost. We have two mails per week each way between Memphis and Grenada. Our district lies along this road. Preachers are all at work with good effect. Our daily prayer meeting, for two weeks, were precious seasons to many. Our Sunday-school uses McTyeire's catechism freely.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

BEAUREGARD, MISS., Sept. 11.—Our circuit has sustained an irreparable loss in the death of Bro. Archie Steele, who died on Sunday, the seventh instant. The freshet on Monday, the 8th instant, was very destructive in this part, carrying off bridges and fences, and submerging hundreds of acres of corn, cotton, cane, etc., and drowning a great many sheep and cattle. People much discouraged, yet we are having good meetings generally. Another cow and calf given to the parsonage.

P. HOWARD, P. C.

MADISON STATION, MISS., Sept. 13.—Our third Quarterly Conference was held at Pearl River, August 27, and was continued nine days, resulting in eighteen conversions, all of which were very bright and clear. Our next meeting was at Wesley Chapel; continued seven days, resulting in five conversions.

D. C. LANGFORD, P. C.

SCOTLAND CIRCUIT, MISS., Sept. 13.—We are having some good meetings on this circuit. Conversions of members in the church has been the most prominent feature in our revival. Some converts from the world; ten accessions to the church; finances low. Corn crop very short. Cotton damaged by rust and rain. We have had a very destructive storm and freshet. Crops in many places were entirely destroyed. Bridges and fences were swept away by the flood of water. Orchards were greatly damaged by the storm.

H. B. CALDWELL.

PAULDING CIRCUIT, MISS., Sept. 18.—The camp meeting at the Holland camp ground embraced the fourth Sabbath in August; fifty conversions, sixteen accessions to the church, backsliders reclaimed. The finances are low. Hope to bring up the collections ordered by the Conference. Cotton injured by the rain. Corn tolerably good. Great excitement about the election. The ADVOCATE is popular; expect to send a list of subscribers to January, 1880.

JAS. M. GANN.

OCEAN SPRINGS, MISS., Sept. 18.—I have been holding divine service at Seashore camp ground nearly every Sunday since camp meeting. Some fifty children, ample corps of teachers, with the veteran superintendent, Wm. H. Foster, compose our Sunday-school. Every Sunday a specific collection was taken in the Sunday school for our Cuba mission. There has been upwards of one hundred and fifty to two hundred souls on the grounds ever since camp meeting. Prayer meeting every Wednesday night. Last Sunday I closed the work for the year, as but few families, if any, will remain any longer city being so healthy. Sorry to write that Bro. Inman Cooper is in feeble health. Weather delightful.

R. H. DOWNER.

LOUISIANA.

WASHINGTON, LA., Sept. 10.—We have had a glorious meeting at this place; were getting under good headway when Bros. Sheppard and Jackson had to leave for their homes. The preacher in charge was taken quite sick. Bro. Manley did not feel that he could carry on the services alone, so we had to close our exercises. The whole community appeared interested. We hope to be able to renew the attack soon. We had about six evangelical conversions, and two more have made a profession of "perfect love."

JOHN C. WYNN.

ST. HELENA CIRCUIT, LA., Sept. 13.—We have just closed a most gracious revival at Center. The church has been greatly strengthened. We had twenty-two conversions and thirty-two additions. Ten bands of families stood up in the congregation on the last day, pledging family altars thenceforth. A prayer meeting was established with twenty persons promising to keep it up.

WM. A. POWELL, L. P.

CENTREVILLE, LA., Sept. 11.—We have much whereof to be glad. The health was never better. The crops are not a failure. The cotton crop is fair. Corn sufficient to subsist the people. The pea crop is not good. The potato crop an average. The churches have rested, and are in a healthy condition. We have had some few revivals. A goodly number were added to the church.

C. W. MADDEN, P. C.

LIBERTY CHAPEL, LA., Sept. 15.—I have just closed a series of protracted meetings on this (Welsh) circuit, the result of one of which I have already given you. Another was held at this church, commencing August 17, and continuing until Thursday following. Visible results: a thorough revival of the church, five accessions, and three adults and four infants baptized. The next was held at Andrew Chapel, embracing the fourth Sabbath in August, and closing on Tuesday night. Fourteen were added to the church and nine baptized. To date there have been thirty one received into the church, and fifteen adults and four infants baptized on this work.

R. S. COLLEN, P. C.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JEDDO, TEXAS, Aug. 30.—This portion of Texas has suffered terribly from drought. Some few will make bread. Many will make scarcely anything. Some have let their farms to search for work to enable them to get bread. Without assistance from abroad many will have to suffer. Cotton crop very sorry. Notwithstanding the hard, dry times, the cause of God is prospering in all the churches among us. Old-fashioned Methodist protracted and camp meetings in the land, and God with the people.

A. R. WARD.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE, TENN., Sept. 11.—Camp meetings in this district are being held with good results. One now in progress will continue over two Sundays. Sunday-school conventions for Monroe and McMinn counties will be held this month and next. All denominations represented, and much good results. College classes rather thin up to date.

F. M. CRACK.

Letter from England.

MR. EDITOR: The New Testament Commentary for English Readers is now complete. It has been edited by Bishop Ellicott, and by the profession of a number of scholars by men. The Epistle to the Hebrews has been expounded by a Wesleyan minister, Dr. Moulton, who has acquitted himself admirably. He is exceeding cautious and timid. If he had proceeded with more temerity and confidence he would have succeeded even better than he has done, although his exposition of the Epistle is creditable to his intelligence and scholarship. Had the project been under High Church auspices Dr. Moulton would not have been requested to write the commentary on the Hebrews. It invites scholarly criticism with beautiful reverence, and will be a valuable help to students of the Scriptures. Dr. Moulton has acquired a fine and enviable reputation among biblical scholars.

Indications are appearing in the direction of a revival of trade. This is universally encouraging, especially when the forebodings anent the result of the harvest are so very gloomy. The iron trade was the first to feel the depression. It is the first to show signs of returning activity. There has been a great demand for it in America, and the mills are unable to furnish all that is needed. There is an intimate connection between England and the United States. Vast breadful harvest will be required to supply the demands occasioned by the general partial failure of the crops here.

The celebrated Newman Hall has obtained a divorce from his wife. The trial attracted unwonted attention. All the press, as usual, was divided in its criticisms. Some sympathized with Dr. Hall, and other for loss of faith in his wife. He is now on the Continent. His pulpit for the last two Sundays has been supplied by an ex-Wesleyan minister who resigned during the last Conference—Jackson Wray. His resignation was enforced. But much leniency is extended to some offenders, and the charity which here falleth sometimes unwisely and hastily covereth their offences, which in others would be promptly condemned. Another young minister resigned because the Conference would not permit him to marry a woman who had obtained a divorce from her husband. She is wealthy, of course. Money, like charity, covereth many defects, and the taste of some people is very defective y educated. Mr. Hall's usefulness may suffer temporary eclipse—but not permanent hindrance.

"Sittings provided, 93,238; total number of families 79,532; communicants, 106,776; communicants added, 6,282; communicants left, 4,728; baptisms, 9,905; deaths, 2,115; deacons, 4,516; contributors to Sustentation Fund, 39,297; stipends paid, £85,785; seat rents, £11,326; sum per mensal stipend, £75 9s 9d; ministers' income from mission funds and other official sources, £6,983; congregational debt, £72,372; raised for building or repairs of churches, manses or schools, £35,711; Sabbath collections, £18,265; raised for Sustentation Fund, £23,121; mission collections, £12,157; raised by Sabbath-schools for missions, £2,263; other collections, £15,717; total for the year, £151,777; contributed to the poor, £2,919. There are also 712 national schools under Presbyterian management; 1,053 Sabbath schools, with 8,579 teachers, and an average attendance of 72,288 scholars. The convener of the Continental Mission of the Irish Presbyterian Church has been requested by the Mission Board to go to Spain, in order to examine and report concerning the mission work, and on the suggestions may be as to its future management. The Assembly's Temperance Committee proceeded to consider the subject of the commemoration of the origin of the Temperance Reformation. It was resolved: 1. That, as the Temperance Reformation in Europe was originated by Dr. Edgar and other ministers and members of the Presbyterian Church, this Committee are of opinion that this great work merits special commemoration on this jubilee year of its history. 2. That this commemoration be carried out by an address to the people on the history, principles and claims of the Temperance Reformation, by sermons on the part of our ministers, and by a series of public meetings in the leading towns and districts of Ireland. A committee was appointed to carry out these resolutions."

Irish Presbyterianism is doing noble work in Ireland.

Dean Stanley takes occasional visits to Scotland, and when there takes great pains to eulogize Presbyterianism. Recently he occupied a Scotch pulpit, and took for his text Matthew xxii. 31-32. Speaking of the judgment passed by men on their fellowmen, the Dean instanced the massacre of St. Bartholomew in France, and the expulsion of Nonconformists from the Church of England in the reign of Charles II. as illustrations of his meaning. Both judgments pronounced the most terrible and lasting misfortunes to France and England. These were considered to be the tests of the judgment day, but they bore no likeness to the account of the judgment given by Christ. He asked them if they had befriended the friendless. If they had done good to those who were suffering, and had sought out those for whom no one cared. That was the principle of His judgment; that was judgment according to works; that was the apostolical and evangelical doctrine of the Day of Judgment, which from the fifth to the sixth centuries was almost unknown to the Universal Church, but, by God's mercy, now restored, and which the true believer in Jesus would gladly hail as a sure mark of Divinity or a sign that he was the Judge who judged righteously. The Dean leaves out the marrow of the gospel. The expulsion of the Nonconformists from the Church of England was an act of persecution, but it has resulted in unto it blessings to England. If was averted to the conservation of the life of the branch. What would the Anglican Communion have been to day but for Evangelical Nonconformity and English Methodism. Bad as it is, it would have been infinitely worse.

Dr. Mullens, the foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, has just died of dysentery in Central Africa, where he had gone to establish and organize missions. He was a noble and useful man, and his death is widely and deeply deplored.

OBSERVER.

August 30, 1879.

Our French Mission.

MR. EDITOR: According to promise I now send you more items concerning the French mission from other points besides Isle aux Cannes.

Queue Tortue Bayou, from whence I am now writing, is, in my estimation, a very important center for missionary operations. All along the stream from the Hoffpauir settlement to the Mermenton river, lies a large Creole community. Far out into the prairies, on either side of the bayou, are many families. There are nominal Catholics, but non church goers, the nearest church being too far, and many of the people too poor to hope anything from the money saving priest. The all important thing is to go to church three times in their lives—once at baptism, again at marriage, last at burial. With that they dwell content. They are without God, live without education, and are very superstitious. Beliefs abound, and are more the vague than the creed of the mind. Their morals can be made easily imaging their deserts. I am not writing of the more refined French of the towns, but simply relating to society as it exists west of Bayou Vermilion. With all these defects they are French to the core—regard politeness, hospitality and sociability. Any passing stranger can find a meal at the farm and a shelter for the night in any private house.

After my several visits I have preached in this neighborhood. At the upper end of the bayou the priest has set to work to hinder the spelling forth of the word. Were not I afraid to speak evil of dignities, strange tales might be told of that scene. They may come out later on. But one means which the adversary cannot counteract is the infernal xylex. Hence we have many uncle Tims. Last Sunday, at the request of a Creole, we held a meeting over the grave of his father, delight of his eyes. At his request I read many passages, assembled with the American brethren, were cordially help on the occasion. Here, under the overarching moss-clad live oaks, we ministered the Word of Life. After this a prominent French citizen invited me to his house to preach, stating that he with several others, wished to build a church, and form one soon. Next day, rode further down, had a good congregation, and formed. The day went lower still, church formed at once, and they joined. Wednesday, rode through the farm, still southward, to an appointed spot, a grave-yard. Got drenched in going, and found a concourse of mules and men standing under the dripping oaks, waiting for the "Protestant." Took consolation, and proceeded to the nearest house. Standing in my wet clothing, expounded to my shivering but attentive audience the words "How shall we escape," etc. Never did labor appear sweeter, as in answer to my invitation, twelve more joined. Among these I include no Creole member of the nearest Methodist Church, nor the citizens I referred to above. So that at this point sixty miles distant from our Isle aux Cannes mission, we have a society of twenty-five. Verily, in spite of stern opposition, God is with us.

In closing let me say if we wish to maintain our own in this, the enemy's land, another campaign is absolutely necessary. No more stress can be laid on this point. I understand the difficulties of the case, but still, when Presbytery and Conference open up the country, and offer us the means, as I can attest to, we should not be recreant to the trust. This is but the very least we can say. From Merrimentar, from across Grand Lake, from beyond Terrebonne, from Lafourche, the cry is raised: "Come over and help us." But I dare not go. Then mission schools should be started. But I must stop. Praying Almighty God, the Protector of small and great as well as of great, to direct Dr. Wilson's attention this way.

Yours truly, WILLIAM ROBINSON.

QUEUE TORTUE, LA., Sept 11, 1879.

East Mississippi Female College.

The East Mississippi Female College, located at Meridian, now under the presidency of Rev. J. W. Atkeson, A. M., is the property of the Mississippi Annual Conference (South). Every member of the church, within said Conference bounds, is interested in its welfare. At the present time there is need of enlarged buildings, grounds, etc., that necessitates a call for aid from its owners. Rev. John Ellis, presiding elder of Seashore district, is the financial agent. But, owing to the special duties of the district, it is impossible for him to attend to this matter. At his request Bishop Keener has authorized me to act as special agent in this business. As the cotton harvest season has set in, it is my purpose to visit in person as many places within and adjacent to our Conference bounds as may be in my power to do, but I will not be able to canvass the whole territory. Now, dear reader and friend of Christ, do you want to invest some of the Lord's money in a worthy cause? If so, inclose in a letter your note, draft or money order payable to me at office in New Orleans, La., or Meridian, Miss., for any amount, no matter how small. My home and postoffice is at Ocean Springs, Miss.

Forward all mail matter to Ocean Springs, Miss., but, as there is no money order office there, make money orders payable to me at either New Orleans, La., or Meridian, Miss., and so advise me per letter to Ocean Springs. I trust this call will receive prompt attention.

THE DYING PROPHET.

BY INVALID.

"Say to the Church and my friends that I die
Just outside of Heaven."

Just outside the walls of Heaven,
Awaiting the Master's call,
So near the shining portals,
That he hears the strains that fall

From the harps and tongues of angels,
The wings of the holy band,
Fan the brow of the dying Prophet,
While he views the promised land.

Tho' still on earth he lingers,
While loved ones round him weep,
Yet the aged, weary Prophet
Already seems to sleep.

Yes, almost asleep in Jesus,
No storm disturbs that calm,
With God he is communing,
And he sees the victor's palm.

The aged, faithful soldier,
In his armor's lying down,
And the Captain of Salvation
Has for him a shining crown.

Hark! some loved one's bending o'er him,
To catch the word that's given;
"Tell those I leave behind me
I die just outside of Heaven."

HOME, Aug. 26, 1879.

The Itinerant's New Home.

Far away from the busy haunts of city life is our little home, embosomed in a magnificent bouquet of Nature's own fashioning. But, while I use the endearing word home, I pause to reflect how inapplicable it is to the fleeting resting-place of the itinerant's family, which is merely a short breathing place on Life's journey to gather together our scattered ideas and articles preparatory to another and similar move.

To return: after adventures by water and land, we reached our new abode. We shall not stop to describe the effects of man's ingenuity in fashioning our little home, but pass on to the natural beauties by which it was surrounded.

Nature was in one of her most prodigal moods when she arranged with fairy fingers the unrivaled forest around us, each tree a flower in itself. There the lofty oak stands rearing its proud head toward the blue dome of heaven, with its brilliant green, enhanced by the first kiss of the morning sun, which it claims by right of pre-eminence above its fellows of the forest. Here the dog-wood, covered with its snowy blossoms, though less pretentious, charms you with its quiet beauty, while here and there, in striking contrast, appears the high-colored maple, with its flaming leaves, throwing back a proud, defiant glance to the sun, as if it needed not its light and warmth to give it color and beauty. Now and then may be seen the hickory, with its pale buds, bending with willowy grace to the evening breeze, and, as the first rays of the moon casts over it a silver sheen, it seems as if it had been suddenly transplanted from an Arctic clime.

The red bud, with more than its share of Nature's coloring, claims affinity with none, but stands alone in its striking and singular beauty. The white oak, with its newly opened pink leaves, nurtured by the breeze, calm and composed, seems to stand a silent sentinel of the forest.

On every hand may be seen the holly, rising like a slender pyramid, with its coral berries, and deep green foliage, that defied the cold breath of the winter king, in bright contrast with the golden canopy thrown over it by the fragrant flowers of the wild jasmin, forming in all a picture of rarest beauty.

Here and there the crimson trumpet vine claims the right to crown a kingly head, with its royal diadem, as it twines with graceful ease to the topmost boughs of the lofty oak, mingling its rich colors with its vivid green.

But there are other beauties that do not climb so high to be seen, and our picture would be sadly incomplete did we not notice the lowly woodland violet, with its ever-varying tints, decorating knoll and sward with its own modest beauty.

The whole scene is one to awaken admiration for nature and for nature's God. But when I look at the lowly, unpretending violets, raising their blue petals in seeming thankfulness to receive even a single drop of rain, unappropriated by the Lords of the forest overhanging them, I am impressed with a feeling of humility and resignation that should ever be the adorning of the true Christian character.

"FORMER HOME," FRANKLIN PARISH, LA., Sept. 8, 1879.

The above beautiful article was written by Mrs. Helen E Wallet, the recently deceased wife of Rev. A. M. Wallet, of the Louisiana Conference. Her pure and brave spirit has found the itinerant's true and immortal home in heaven.—ED. AD.

The Late Storm

MR. EDITOR: We had a fearful storm here on the first instant, which raged, it seemed, in all possible fury for about three hours, though it blew very hard about eight. It commenced raining in the afternoon of Sunday, intermitting frequently till the next morning, when it never ceased, while the wind blew so furiously. I have never seen anything like it. An old settler here says he had not seen any such storm since 1824. It blew out the sash of our upstairs windows, and it would have taken two strong men to put them back during the storm. The room below was two inches deep in water, everything being removed. The town presented a strange appearance after it had ceased—fences blown down in every direction, trees of all kinds uprooted, and many houses blown over. The ice house was whirled over. The Temperance Hall, a large two-story building, careens eighteen inches at the top from a perpendicular, and many others in a similar dangerous condition. I am told that there are only four sugar-houses in the parish that are not injured, while the damage to many others is immense. The cane crop is cut short two-thirds, and many are murmuring, while others are blaspheming blind fate, and some the God of the universe for touching their idols. This is the most beautiful, attractive and desirable country to live in, on account of health and natural advantages I ever saw anywhere, but it is the most Godless. I never saw such universal wickedness as is found here. I could particularize, but I will not, only this far, that the Ten Commandments is a dead letter on the law book of God's moral government, and lies shattered and broken in the dust. Our church suffered. Bible and Hymn Book ruined. Plastering damaged very much, and steeple injured. Our Jeanarette Church, together with the Catholic Church, went down, and is a total loss, only we have the lumber, some of which can be used. Every colored church in New Iberia is destroyed. At Franklin, the Catholic and Episcopalian Churches blew down, and the Presbyterian Churches at Morgan City and Centerville. Our collections will doubtless fall behind those of any previous year, though I shall press them all more earnestly, and expect a more than usual sacrifice to be made by our people in response. Other calamities will come, unless there is a change of life in this fair land—may be God will scourge us with ephlemics, I don't know. We have one case of yellow fever in town. Everybody is excited, and all places are quarantining against us, but our faith is in the infinite, all-conquering love of our God, and we rejoice. "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines, the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat, the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls, yet will I rejoice in the Lord. I will joy in the God of my salvation." Amen.

Yours in Christ,

Medicine $5, tax $;	15 00
For conferences and missionary collections,	10 00
For church and other claims,	10 00
Total,	$ 0

The above does not include the hire of a cook, nor the wear and tear of household furniture, which the preacher's family has to furnish.

ARCHIAS.

Note from Dr. Abbey

MR. EDITOR: I have partially read, as far as I desired, the communication in your issue of September 11 on "Genesis and Creation," by your correspondent, "Roderick Random, Sr." It cannot receive an answer from me in the nature of an argument, for the following reasons: It is disrespectful. It indulges in cant and slang. It is a long, verbal hypercriticism. It misrepresents my meaning at important points. Its object is not the discovery of truth for the benefit of the church, but to make me appear ridiculous. For those reasons, thus violating some of the most important rules of debate, it can receive no other reply than this from me.

But if any of your correspondents wish to discuss those phases of the subject of creation which I suggested, and do it obviously for a legitimate purpose, I have no objections to assist him in finding a safe conclusion. But there must be the ring of true metal.

R. ABBEY.

From the Work.

DEMOPOLIS, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a protracted meeting, which has been a great blessing to the church, as well as adding to its membership six young persons, who, we have every reason to hope, are "Of such as shall be saved." Bro. E. W. Solomon was with us several days, rendering very efficient help in the work. We are disposed to "thank God and take courage," believing that the church has made progress toward that degree of spirituality without which the work of the Lord may not prosper in our hands, and that what we have seen is but an earnest of "more to follow."

I learn through the secular press of the death of Rev. Edward Robinson, a local elder, Stockton circuit, Alabama Conference. He was a devoted Christian, an earnest preacher, and a good citizen. Doubtless many other members of the Conference who have served that charge remember, as I do, his ever active sympathy in their labors, his warm hearted welcome to his home, and the assurance that they could always depend upon his aid in every good work. I suppose an obituary will be furnished you. Am not in possession of any particulars as to his death, but who, that knew his pure, devoted life, could doubt that his end was peace?

Crop prospect discouraging. Rain and worms made sad havoc of our hopes of a large cotton crop. Corn crop good, however, and that mitigates the evil greatly.

Yours fraternally,

G. M. ROPER.

SEPTEMBER 4, 1879.

VILLULA, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: Last night we closed our protracted meeting at this place, of seven days' continuance. The congregations were large and attentive. From time to time many were at the altar for prayer. Several were converted and many reclaimed, and all who had been faithful to church vows were abundantly blessed. At this church last year was the greatest revival ever known in this immediate section of country, and sixty-two added to the church. During our meeting, just closed, ten members were added, among these one from Roman Catholicism. Last Thursday was the happiest communion of the Lord's Supper that I ever witnessed.

Last Thursday, a week ago, we closed a delightful meeting of six days' continuance at Anthony's Chapel. Several conversions, the church much revived, and twelve members joined.

During the last month forty-eight members have been added to the church on this work, and during the year sixty members. The outlook is bright and cheering.

ANSON WILKINS.

SEPTEMBER 10, 1879.

ILLAWARA, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: It may be that a few items from East Carroll will not be uninteresting to the readers of the ADVOCATE. Our parish is very healthy, and the crops are fine. Planters are busily engaged in picking and ginning cotton. Prospects are flattering, in a financial point of view. My circuit (Lake Providence and Pecan Grove) is moving on steadily. The membership in the church seem to be growing in grace. Sinners are being converted, and joining the church. We hope by the end of the year to have doubled the membership. Our congregations are large and attentive. Finances are coming up well. I flatter myself that I have one of the best Board of Stewards in the Conference.

H. D. WHITE.

SEPTEMBER 8, 1879.

SMITH COUNTY, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed a meeting at the Carr's Church on the twelfth instant, which resulted in four additions to the church, three children baptized, and the church revived. Crops are very much hurt with the rain—cut off almost half—and money not to be had in some sections. We closed a meeting at Pike's Chapel on the twenty-eighth of August, with good result—sixteen added to the church, five or six happily converted, eighteen children baptized, and about fifty-two made happy in the love of God. Bros. Clark, Weems and Burton assisted in the meeting. Pray for us that the work may still continue to increase.

Yours in Christ,

JOHN D. EVANS, P. C.

SEPTEMBER 12, 1879.

TOULMINVILLE CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a meeting at Edington Church. The meeting lasted ten days. The people enjoyed seasons of refreshing from God's presence. A large number found peace in believing, and many of them members of the church. The whole church seemed to enjoy the influences of the Holy Spirit. There were seventeen accessions to the church. Rev. J. H. Allen rendered valuable assistance.

Your brother,

R. P. BAKER, P. C.

SEPTEMBER 13, 1879.

SPIRIT, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: There has been a number of good meetings in the bounds of the Lisborn work, under the pastoral care of Bro. T. L. Williams, during the last few months. The most powerful display of divine power was at Harmony Chapel, at a meeting begun there on Saturday before the fifth Sabbath in August. There was an addition of twenty one members to the church, and many conversions. Among the converts was one seventy eight years old, who was baptized and received into the church in full fellowship on the first Sabbath of the meeting. The converts are mostly heads of families, and many family altars will be erected. The meeting lasted for eight days, with unabated interest from first to last. Corn is a failure. Cotton only half crop. Finances very low. Health fine.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

WARRENTON, ALA., Sept. 11.—We have just closed a protracted meeting at Warrenton, which resulted in eight conversions, and eight added to the church. It was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Weather pleasant. Nights cool. Health of the country good. Crops fair.

J. W. WEST.

CHOCTAW CORNER, ALA., Sept. 11.—During last year we obtained the furniture; this year we have purchased a parsonage, consisting of a five acre lot at this place, a house with two brick chimneys, four rooms, store room and pantry, all connected, all for the sum of $202. While it is not a fine house, it is comfortable, and a wonderful improvement on anything that has ever been in this county. We have held four meetings up to date, resulting in twenty accessions to the church, and many backsliders reclaimed. These meetings were occasions of decided spiritual power. Decided increase of family worship, and of contributions to the collections ordered by the Conference.

W. W. GRAHAM.

PINKNEYVILLE, ALA., Sept. 11.—Have just closed a very interesting meeting at Liberty Church. Twelve conversions and seven additions. The church is in a good condition. The people have been very liberal in repairing and refurnishing their church.

B. S. J. BRETTEN.

PERRYVILLE, ALA., Sept. 12.—Some parts of our work had first a drouth, then the rust, and then the worms, and altogether cut off our crops at least one half. We have held two meetings. The church somewhat revived. Only two additions. Have had a great improvement in Sunday schools on work this year.

A. J. COLLINS.

ALEXANDER CITY, ALA., Sept. 12. The fourth Quarterly Conference for this work was held at Flint Hill Church, commencing September 6. Rev. J. B. Stevenson, our presiding elder, was at his post, and continued to preach with great power and acceptability until September 10. The church was very much revived. Many rejoiced outright. Eight conversions and ten accessions.

A. L. DORIS.

ATHENS, ALA., Sept. 13.—The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has for years afforded me and my family intellectual entertainment and spiritual profit. The "Field Notes" show how the light against the powers of darkness is progressing. Thank God that the banner of the cross still waves in triumph. Many of the protracted meetings in this section have been attended with gracious results. Yesterday a mob of more than a thousand broke open our jail and took out a wife-murderer, named Ballis, to hang him; but the sheriff and his posse operated on the ground and took him back to jail. From some causes the crops of corn and cotton are not promising. The prospects of the Athens Female College are unusually flattering. We have a large Sabbath school, and several have been added to the church.

C. H. DRAKE.

COLUMBIANA, ALA., Sept. 13.—The business of the town increasing. New houses going up. Old ones in a state of repairs. Crops moderate. Health good. State of religion improving generally. Held four day meetings at Chapel Church. The attendance was very large. A general refreshing to all the Christians. Some conversions. By letter, and otherwise, six accessions.

T. P. ROBERTS.

STEWARTSVILLE, ALA., Sept. 14. Held two protracted meetings. Almost every church member was made to shout the praises of God. God has done a glorious work in the conversion of sinners, especially the old sinners. Crops good. Health good. Weather favorable for gathering. The church seeking for higher attainments in divine life.

T. B. MCCAIN, P. C.

NEWBERN, ALA., Sept. 15.—We closed a meeting last night at this place, which lasted eight days. Seven accessions. Our Woman's Missionary Society is doing well. We have organized a young men's prayer-meeting, which meets every Sunday afternoon. We held a protracted meeting at Hamburg, embracing the fourth Sunday. Some religious interest was awakened, and five added to the church.

H. M. MOSS.

MISSISSIPPI.

OKATUPPA, MISS., Aug. 29.—Just closed a meeting of great power at Keizer Hill. The whole church thoroughly baptized with the blessed Spirit. At this church we began the year with thirty-eight members. We have just held a Church Conference, calling each name and examining character. We closed with one hundred members in full connection and good standing.

A. J. BRIGHT.

HEBRON, MISS., Aug. 30.—Just closed a meeting of six days. Five accessions to the church, and a general revival. Altar was crowded with seekers of salvation the last day of the service. Weather fair and cool. Health good.

O. W. BLOWS.

COLD WATER, MISS., Sept. 12.—We are having good meetings on the Senatobia circuit. Fifteen conversions, and that number of accessions recently. Congregations good. Crops, both corn and cotton, are fine in this county. The health of our county is excellent. The farmers are now busy picking cotton. Business is dull, because of the yellow fever at Memphis, which continues to spread. Many revivals in our district. God bless you.

J. W. RUTER.

IUKA, MISS., Sept. 12.—We are having times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord on the Iuka circuit. Have had about eighty conversions since the first of July. Have six protracted meetings to hold yet. Hope for similar results as at the ten we have held. All denominations unite with us, and sinners generally interested. Health excellent. Crops good, especially corn. Cotton injured by rain. May we appreciate the goodness of the Lord.

R. A. SCRUGGS, P. C.

WINONA, MISS., Sept. 12.—We have been blessed with quite a revival throughout the Winona circuit. Fifty-one have been added to the church within the past twelve days. People are being converted at home in all parts of the circuit as well as at the public altar of prayer. Indeed everything indicates the dawn of a brighter day for the church in this county. Health of the county remarkably good. Crops short.

A. W. LANDLEY.

ELLISVILLE, MISS., Sept. 12.—We have just closed a five days' meeting at Shady Grove, resulting in twenty conversions and fifteen accessions to the church. Have received thirty-five members in all to date. Crops short. Health tolerably good.

E. J. MILLER.

HOUSTON CIRCUIT, MISS., Sept. 12. Nine protracted meetings held. Forty-three conversions. Forty-two joined the church. No parsonage. We had a camp meeting. Spirit did success, as far as we conducted it. An immense rain fell on us, and stopped the meeting. Six Sabbath schools doing splendidly. Mission collections will all be raised. The health of this circuit is good. Politics at fever heat. A great mind divisor of our people on the subject of religion. Fine crops. No yellow fever. But little confusion about quarantine.

JOS. W. POSTON.

LOUISIANA.

SIBLEY TOWN, LA., Sept. 8.—There is among this people a universal thirst for holiness. The man who does not profess it, and live it, is the exception; and they are very rare. One hundred and fifty-nine have joined the church to date. Health good. Crops short, indeed. Have just completed and dedicated an elegant house of worship. Collections good, so far.

J. W. BEARD.

ARCADIA CIRCUIT, LA., Sept. 11. Since writing before, I have had meetings at Macedonia and Spring Hill. Was assisted at Macedonia by Bro. Stone. Six accessions. An excellent meeting. Bro. Cornett and a local brother, Dr. Nixon, assisted at Spring Hill, doing good service. Twenty-five additions by letter and by application. Meeting extraordinarily good. Here we organized a new church on the ground occupied by one of the first Methodist Churches in this region, but was afterward abandoned. There have been fifty-six accessions on this work since Conference.

THOS. J. UTON.

ST. HELENA CIRCUIT, LA., Sept. 15.—We have six well organized churches. Have just closed our last protracted meeting. There were seventy-three bright conversions and seventy-two additions to the church. Twenty two family altars erected, and twenty-nine pray in public. Four prayer meetings and two class meetings organized. This has been the grandest year's work of my life for the blessed Master. Twenty five children baptized.

J. S. PARKER, P. C.

MISCELLANEOUS

MARIANNA, FLA., Sept. 10.—We have no pastor this year save the presiding elder. He has served in his office well. Though we have local preaching from once to twice per month, and prayer meetings in our little meeting, we are comforted with joy and peace, such as the world cannot give. Bro. J. Dayley and myself attended a two days' meeting at Red Oak Church, on the Calhoun circuit, last Saturday and Sunday, the sixth and seventh instants. The Spirit was present to bless believers, comfort mourners, mourners and convict sinners. Three additions to the church.

J. C. FOX.

PADUCAH, KY., Sept. 12.—Fine crops in all this region. Murphy clubs are numerous through the county, and are doing much good. Have attended two fine revivals in Graves county. One, six and the other twenty-three conversions. Why do not the brethren in the Greenville district, North Mississippi Conference, report their meetings? I know there was success.

J. C. C. HILL.

The thirty third annual meeting of the American Missionary Association will be held in Chicago, beginning October 28. Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs, of Brooklyn, will preach the annual sermon.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MRS. N. Y. TAYLOR died September 12, 1879, at Tangipahoa, La., aged fifty-six years.

ANNEATHA, infant and only daughter of A. J. Adkins and Isabel Bass, died on the twentieth of June, 1879, aged seven months. It is hard for her parents to give back the precious babe but God knows what is best.

J. M. FRANKS.

DAVID BARNS, eldest son of A. and S. Wise, died near Evergreen, Avoyelles parish, La., August 12, after a brief but severe illness. Thus his sainted spirit took its flight to the Paradise of God, where, amid the flowers and trees, the fountains and perennial rivulets, close to the Redeemer's breast.

D. MCGLYNN.

L. MARVIN PRICE, only child of Y. T. and S. A. Price, Evergreen, La., was born July 28, 1877, and died August 29, 1879.

The messenger came and with bleeding hearts we said, Give us back Marvin. Brief was the stay; he came from us as a sunbeam which flitted to cheer our hearts in for a few short months, when God called the wanderer home.

EDELENE WHITE.

MRS. SALLIE A. BOYD, wife of Dr. C. E. Boyd, of LaFayette, Ala., died at Bluff Springs, Ala., August 7, 1879. She was the daughter of Mr. Joseph Cunningham and Mrs. Sallie A. Mayfield, was born March 20, 1841, and married March 27, 1858. She joined the Presbyterian Church in the year 1858, and up to the time of her death, for the space of twenty-one years, she was a consistent member of the same. To mourn her loss, besides a devoted husband, are left children, and two grandchildren. May they be able to realize the truth: "For her to die was gain."

VALLELIA BRYANT, daughter of Jesse and Martha Family, was born in the Family, Dallas county, Ala., January 9, 1861. When quite young her parents moved to Alabama, where she professed religion and joined the Baptist Church, when about twelve years of age. She was married, in 1878, to Mr. W. T. Meeks, who died October, 1883. During his life she joined the Methodist Church, with him, and remained a consistent member all the days of her life. She was a devoted wife, a kind mother, an affectionate daughter, and to all a good Christian. She died July 12, 1879, in hope of everlasting life.

Her sorrowing brother,

J. W. BRYANT.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT by Quarterly Conference of Floyd circuit, Louisiana Conference.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God in His wise providence to remove from our midst our dearly beloved brother Rev. J. D. Stevenson, taking him from active labor, and inviting him to rest in the tomb.

Therefore be it resolved, That while we bow with submission to the will of God in this matter, we feel assured that the church and community as well as his family have sustained great loss in him, as members of the Floyd Quarterly Conference deeply deplore our loss; and feel that he has drawn very near to us in his death, as he was to all ready.

Resolved, That we tender to his bereaved family our deepest sympathy in their bereavement, and pray that God may take special care of his widow (our sister) henceforth and forever.

Resolved, That a copy of the above be furnished to the Editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and also a copy be furnished the family of deceased.

T. R. MCKENNON, } Committee.
C. COX, }

ON THE recommendation of the undersigned committee the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Quarterly Conference of Floyd and Girard, Homer district, Mississippi Annual Conference, Sept. 6, 1879.

Whereas, Our faithful and beloved brother DAVID W. GRIERS, who served the church many years as a faithful steward, was removed by death, from our midst on August 30, 1879, therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Griers this Quarterly Conference has lost one of its most efficient and valued workers, and our church one of its honored and devoted members.

Resolved, That while we deeply suffer at the death of this child, and deeply mourn our loss, yet we bow in humble submission to the will of Providence who has taken him away.

Resolved, That we extend our sincere sympathy to the family of our deceased brother, and that the resolutions be laid on record, and a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

LATE TO THE KINGDOM.

BY REV. S. W. DUFFIELD D. D.

Born in the purple of purples,
To sit on a throne as king;
With a soul marred and determined,
With fate in a golden ring,
With the way to the crown so easy,
And the heirship of everything!

But the royal and loving father
Has said: "Not yet, my son!
You must know how the people sorrow,
How battles are lost and won,
How the heart and the brain together
Must labor ere all is done."

And the royal and loving father
Sent forth the princely lad;
And he journeyed hither and thither,
He saw both the good and the bad,
And his heart was grieved at the conflicts
And sorrow his people had.

Then late came he to his kingdom;
A touch of gray in his hair,
Deep lines of thought on his forehead,
Strength in his air;
But when he sat on the throne,
They cried: "A king sits there!"

A Methodist Reliquary.

BY REV. CHARLES S. ROBINSON D. D.

London is the Methodist Jerusalem. Thither our pilgrim tribes go every year by a vast. And what wonder? A look at the "consecrated" ground of old Marylebone Church-yard, where Charles Wesley's clay rests, finds visible proof of his churchly fame, while a personal visit to the humble shop in Little Britton street gives a local habitation to the fact of the conversion. A half where now the serpentined traffic of a widened street rolls above a lost grave sets the mind freshly wondering at the strange career of its occupant, Mrs. John Wesley. A visit to City Road—that is the topmost step of the Wesleyan Sahla Scala.

How many a reader remembers standing at the doorway of the preacher's house and mounting with tremulous hand the very knocker which has probably felt the grasp of nearly all the heroes of British Methodism, but which no longer longs to answer its sound the great founder. The tall clock which used to call him to start on his long journeys, and the chair that received him when he returned; the table at which he wrote, and the book case on the inside of whose doors he pasted the wood-cut portraits of several of his helpers; the very walls of the room that heard him say what the best of all is—how dear these things bring the widely-separated years together!

In the chapel yard there is no knee-worn furrow in the stones about the simple obelisk, as around Thomas a Becket's shrine on the floor of Canterbury Cathedral, but the spot is a not less worthy goal for thoughtful pilgrimage.

These be the things, not to mention Susannah Wesley's grave in Bunhill Fields, which the Methodist pilgrim usually seeks; but a kindly star lately led me into a certain study, whose contents could not fail to interest every soul of all the millions of our Israel. There stood on the mantle a bronze bust of John Wesley, made by order of Dr. Adam Clarke, the only one in existence. A leathern pocket book was handed me, in which Charles Wesley kept his private papers until the day of his death. One of these was his own copy of an affecting letter he had written to his son, beginning "Dear Sam," and regretfully appraising the ability longer to provide him support; and another contained a keenly satirical verse, composed impromptu by Sarah Wesley, and handed to a man who, in a mixed company, had loudly whispered a disparaging comparison between her charming conversation and her pock-marked face. I had in my hands an original letter of John Wesley's, in which he refers to certain reports about Charles' son, the minister going over to the Roman Catholic Church.

From a formidable pile of documents I was told to take a parcel of papers which proved to be one of the original manuscripts of Adam Clarke's Commentary. Then I was shown his brass door plate and a pair of pliers he used to carry, with which, in coaching accidents, he more than once extracted wooden splinters from the flesh of grateful passengers, and after that the instrument with which he cut his quill pens was displayed. He had the habit of trying his new pen's on the text "God is love," and scraps of waste paper have survived which show that precious sentence repeated thus many as six different languages. By the way, I doubt if Methodists generally know how tightly the British government was compelled to bind round his learning. Oxford and Cambridge had been asked in vain for a scholar who could fluently read the old Norman French of certain State papers, when the Parliamentary Committee was sent to a Methodist preacher. The success of his six months' work on these documents secured to him a privilege with which he is under before or since, has been favored—the possession of a private key to the British Museum library, and the liberty of coming and going day or night.

The impression of the actual reality of bygone events and personages was completed, when I stood in the same room with a man whose face bore an astonishing resemblance to the best known portrait of John Wesley. I was about to whisper something to a friend touching the coincidence when I was introduced to the gentleman, who proved to be a grandson of Charles Wesley. My astonishment was no new thing, I learned, for on the mounting of his truth the likeness of his features to those of his illustrious kinsman so struck his father that he burst out: "Good God! its my Uncle John come back again."

A visit to London, more than anything else, makes John Wesley and his times come back again.—New York Christian Advocate.

Dr. Chalmers.

BY ROBERT IRVINE, D. D.

Chalmers was principal of the university, and professor of theology and divinity proper. He was also royal chaplain for Scotland, and subject to the order of the Queen to preach at any time or place that the royal will might determine. He was the Jupiter Tonans of Scotland at that time, and the Magnus Apollo of the evangelical party for over a quarter of a century. He at once molded and led the best minds of Scotland. The country was ripe for such a movement as the disruption of 1843, and that condition of public sentiment in the nation and in the church of John Knox was the direct result of Chalmers' teaching, alike in the rostrum and the pulpit. When he preached he preached like an angel from heaven. When he lectured to his students he always spoke as a man who was groping his way into the hearts, as well as the heads, of his hearers. His views had so thoroughly permeated the whole country that the Honorable Fox Maule (afterward Lord Panmure,) in the House of Commons, warned the nobles of England against a measure which might result in the disruption of the National Church of Scotland, using these words: "I tell England, and I tell the civilized world, that if this Parliament shall hazard a disruption in our national Kirk, nine-tenths of the intelligence and piety will go out of the church, simply because it is the movement of Thomas Chalmers;" and Lord Panmure's prediction was verified by the disruption of 1843.

In the rostrum, as in the pulpit, Chalmers read closely. His manner was rather awkward, his dialect very broad Fifeshire, and his voice by no means sweet or well toned, yet not harsh nor disagreeable. His eye was mellow, yet the very symbol of earnestness, purity and sincerity. When he became intensely interested in his topic or theme, his eye was the most expressive and overpowering organ of his whole head. It looked as though his brain was on fire, and his soul—his whole soul—aglow. As he swung back and forward in the rostrum, and the big thoughts rolled out of his great soul, the one hundred and thirty-four students who sat at his feet, and fifty or sixty amateur students in the gallery, were at times electrified. Old hoary-headed scholars and sages would look down from the gallery, and the embryo divines of Scotland and Ireland would look up, while both would feel literally spellbound by some of his mighty sentences. The pens of the students would unconsciously fall on their note books, and after one of Chalmers' avalanches of thought there would be a moment's pause, a still, breathless silence in the class room, then an audible utterance almost unconscious, but always earnest and unaffected, of approbation. On one occasion there was a burst of applause from every student in the hall and in the gallery. Dr. Chalmers made a pause, then went on reading, not speaking, as follows: "Joost what I expected, gentlemen; and in talking with my revered friend Neander, of applause in the lecture-room, we both agreed that it was welcome and very agreeable; but we also agreed that in future, when cordially accorded, we should request most respectfully that it should come from the heads rather than the feels of our students." It is needless to say that this elicited renewed and loud applause.—Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

(STATUES FOUND AT OLYMPIA.—Excavations have recently brought to light at Olympia several fragments of sculptures which belonged to the Temple of Zeus, among them the head of the river god Cheleus, whose body lies in the right-hand corner of the pediment of the temple. The type of the figure is described as that of the older statues of Greek youths, whose strength and suppleness, acquired in gymnastic exercises, are depicted with uncompromising realism, and show no trace of the dreamy and soft idealizations which a later and more subtle period used to adopt in portraying river gods. With the head was found the entire left leg of a bald old man who occupies a corner of the eastern pediment, while in another place was dug up the huge leg of an Apollo, and his right hand, from which the fingers were missing. An enormous hand, showing that the soul still contains somewhere a marble colossus of rare workmanship, was also found. The King of Greece has, it is said, expressed a wish that a suitable museum might be erected at Olympia for the reception of these and other treasures found there. There is a feeling that this museum should be erected at Athens, but great obstacles are in the way of placing it there, since the cost of transporting the marbles would be enormous.—Christian Union.

There are growing up all over the country a small, irregular force of men, well intentioned, many of them however, under educated, following the example of Mr. Moody, to a large extent teaching with more or less consistency and publicity what are called "pre-millennial views," and so getting ready themselves, and preparing some others for entering into "Plymouth-brotherism." If a man can be said to enter that which is without land-mark or definite boundary. Some of them are already "brethren" of the "open" kind—one of the earlier stages of the disorder. In the full development of the thing, all churches are denounced as corrupt and worldly organizations, from which all saints must "come out," and the ministers of money-loving or place-loving hirelings. What should be done? Two things: ministers had better do their own evangelistic work in their bounds rather than engage three men; and secondly, in their sermons, Bible classes, and week day lectures, pastors should teach the truth on such topics as have been suggested. Any "evangelists" who are as above described will denounce this statement. The others will be grateful for it.—Dr. John Hall.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. J. M. Douglas, of the Canada Presbyterian Mission in India, writes a very interesting account of the conversion of a Brahman of the fourth or highest order. Gungahir is a native of Bhilwara, in the Northwest Province. He married at an early age a lady to whom he was passionately attached. His wife died and left him inconsolable. He abandoned the world and became a wandering devotee or fakir, and resolved to reach the highest position in this order. The process of acquiring the title of fakir, as described by Mr. Douglas, on the authority of Gungahir, is a very singular one: 1. For the first four months he abstained from salt. 2 For five months, in the native City of Poona, he endured the trial of swing in the smoke. The smoke is of manure from the sacred bull, and the devotee, hung by the heels, is swung backward and forward through the smoke, his head brushing the flames. This is kept up on every occasion until the fire dies away. 3. For the next six months he was concealed in a cave dug in the earth. He did not see the light of day, but sat in meditation, only emerging from his retreat at midnight to receive the food left for him. 4. The next six months he passed in communion with the river god (Ganga.) From twelve o'clock to four o'clock each night he stood in the Ganges, waist deep in water, and had his sins washed away, and imitated the wakefulness of Brahm. 5. He next practiced sitting in the presence of the dead every night for a year on the banks of the Ganges. The next rites—such as painting the body with ashes of the dead, remaining silent, etc—were duly observed, and thereupon Gungahir received the coveted title of Swami. Thereafter he was worshiped as a deity. In the course of his wanderings he became possessed of a copy of the New Testament. He read and studied it diligently for eight months, and emerging from the jungle he sought out Mr. Douglas. He told the missionary that he was convinced of the truth of Christ's claims and the efficacy of prayer, and desired to read and study further in company with him.

CONCERNING MISSIONS.—1. During the last year the gospel was preached in one thousand towns and cities in China where it had not been previously heard.

2. In China there are 14,000 native church members.

3. The missionaries of the American Baptist Church baptized last year in 600 converts from heathenism.

4. In Madagascar the idols have been burned, and the London Missionary Society reports 4,000 churches and 67,750 church members.

5. The British Wesleyan Missionary Society reports 170 foreign missionaries.

6. Not less than sixty thousand idolaters in Southern India cast away their idols and embraced Christianity in the year 1878.

And so we might go on and fill much of our space with similar statistics from the several Protestant Churches, of converts, schools, contributions by native Christians, their consistent piety, etc. These are facts and figures of which the Republican is profoundly ignorant. That libeler of Foreign Missions has not chosen to inform itself, else it would not have implicitly charged the Protestants of Europe and America with the folly and wickedness of swindling themselves in the matter of sending the gospel to heathendom.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

—The Pall Mall Gazette states that on a single day recently some 3,000 pilgrims set out for Lourdes, many of them being pauper invalids who are being taken to the miraculous grotto by charitable persons. Those who are better off, and the wealthier of the clergy, however, still seem to prefer Vichy and watering-places. The Ultramontane papers point out that the number of pilgrims to Lourdes is double what it was last year, meaning to imply that this publicity is somewhat connected with the Jules Ferry bill. The Archbishop of Paris, too, is about to crown Notre Dame de la Salette, who was supposed a short while ago to have fallen into disgrace. At Amiens there has been a procession in honor of the vow of Louis XIII.; the said vow dedicated the Dauphin, afterward Louis XIV., to the Virgin Mary. There is a celebrated picture of the vow of Louis XIII. in the Cathedral of Montauban, painted by Ingres.

INDIA.—The Lucknow Witness gives us this item: "The number of spoken languages in India is said to be 213, and including dialects, 542. Translations of the Bible, or part of it, exist in some seventy or eighty of these languages and dialects, but those which have a Christian literature are much fewer; from which facts it will readily be seen how great is the work yet remaining to be done before all the people of India can read the Word of God in their own tongue. A few of the leading languages, like the Tamil, Telugu, Bengali, Urdu, Hindu and Mahratti, possess a good many Christian volumes of sorts, but the rest are very destitute. And what a vast undertaking it will be, to make them anything else! The English language ought to be simplified, and then made the one medium of intercourse in all the East."

—The Wesleyan Methodist Mission in Jamaica raised on the island itself last year no less than $81,410, which is an average offering of $1 50 for each church member and which shows great generosity and self-sacrifice among native Christians. But one of these quotas was raised in the following way, which probably speaks merely for itself. At a certain meeting the minister (whether white or black the account does not say,) in reading over the list of contributors for assent to proposed assessments, called out: "Nelson Kaffee, one dollar." The individual named, being present, answered, with spirit: "If you would say Mr. Nelson Kaffee, I would give two dollars." "Well," was the prompt reply of the minister, "say five dollars, and I will give you the title of Nelson Kaffee, Esquire." "Massa, here's the money."

METHODIST CHURCH OF CANADA. The Rev. Geo. H. Cornish, secretary of the London Conference, sends us the following synopsis of statistics for 1879: "The Methodist Church of Canada consists of six Annual Conferences and one General Conference. Ministers and preachers, 1,172; circuits and missions, 842; members, including those on trial, 123,013; Sunday-schools, 1,702; Sunday-school teachers, 10,145; Sunday-school scholars, 123,069. The increase for the past year is: Ministers, 6; circuits and missions, 13; members, 408; schools 9; teachers, 391; scholars, 2,637; 5,192 conversions are reported in the Sunday-schools; 50 probationers for the ministry are allowed to attend college, and 39 were received on trial at the last Conference."

—The Athenæum states that the New Testament Revision company have made such good progress in their work that the New Testament will probably be issued from the University presses early in 1880. The English and American companies are now busy with the final revision of passages in which the same Greek word is found, with a view to harmonize, as far as possible, the translation. It is intended to issue at first two editions—a large, handsome octavo, and a small, cheap volume for popular use. Dr. Schaff in a recent letter, speaks of the courtesies which he received from the revision committee, and "the very gratifying expressions" which he heard of "the great value of American co-operation."

—The Lucknow Witness notices very cordially and favorably, the advent of a new monthly paper—the India Methodist Watchman—of sixteen pages, published at Madras. The new venture does not claim to be an official sheet, but represents the zeal and sacrifices of a few ministers of the South India Conference, who have taken for their platform the following: "The New Testament, and its illustrated exposition, the Methodist Discipline, contain all that we shall advocate." The utterances of the first issue are said to be "very outspoken," and its positions "very radical." The Methodists in India at present publish and control six periodicals, though only one—the Watchman—is strictly denominational.—Zion's Herald.

—The progress of Sunday desecration is perhaps as marked in England as in this country. The London Methodist says: "We regret that so many persons of position are using their influence in favor of Sunday recreation for the people. The National Sunday league boasts that its views, in regard to the use of the Sabbath, are spreading. There are Sunday organ recitals in the Albert Hall. On the last Sunday in August the Royal Horticultural Society's gardens are to be open from two till six o'clock P. M. On August 17, the duke of Westminster will open Clivedon to the league, and Mr. Grenfell will open the adjoining grounds of Taplow court."

—Of the 11,000 converts reported among the Teloogoos in the Orgole Mission, India, Mr. Downie of that mission said, at a late Conference in India, that it was not a contested scheme, or prompted by insincere motives. A thousand people came one day, and laying their village idols down at the missionary's feet, requested to be baptized. Some had spoken of 10,000 people having come to Christ in three months, as if they had never previously heard of Christ. For thirteen years the seed had been faithfully sown; for thirteen years the gospel had been faithfully proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of that district.

—The Independent mentions that a lady, Miss Waterston, has gone to Central Africa as a medical missionary. She is the third woman who has had the courage to undertake the long journey from the coast, perilous to strong, healthy men, and to settle among the savages in the vicinity of the great lakes. She is to join the Livingstonia mission, with which a European woman is already connected, who is to be the wife of Dr. Laws. Mrs. McDonald, at the Blantyre mission in the Shire hills, south of Lake Nyassa, is the only other European woman north of Lake Ngami.

—Mr. Gladstone has written a letter to the Rev. Dr. Rainey, of Edinburgh, in which he declares his willingness to make the disestablishment of the Scottish Church a political issue if the people of Scotland are ready, although, "in the present condition of imperial affairs," it does not occupy the first place in his mind.

ROMAN CATHOLICS AND THE NEGROES.—Our Romanist friends are now said to be spending $500,000 a year among the Freedmen, among whom they have 150,000 pupils under priestly schools. There are 137 Catholic missionaries and teachers among the Indians.

The one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of Sunday-schools in England is to be celebrated there next year by a series of services, conferences, etc. The proceedings are expected to extend from June 28 to July 4, 1880.

—The Protestant Alliance has issued a circular, asking that the law against lotteries may be enforced against Roman Catholic enterprises of this character with the same severity as against those conducted by private persons.

At a General Conference of the African Methodist Churches of New England, recently held at New Bedford, reports showed a church membership of 1317. The denomination has twelve Sunday-schools, attended by 855 scholars.

Rev. Dr. Newman Hall and wife, of London, have been for some time engaged in a most painful controversy. Each entered a suit against the other for a divorce. Dr. Hall has gained the suit.

More than 30,000 Hindus during the past year have renounced idolatry and professed Christianity.

Our Young People.

BABY HAS GONE TO SCHOOL.

The baby has gone to school; ah me!
What will the mother do,
With never a call to button or lace,
Or the little shoe?
How can she keep herself busy all day,
With the little, tinkling feet away?

Another basket to fill with lunch,
Another task to say,
And the mother stands at the door to see
Her baby march away;
And hurries with a sigh that is half relief,
And half a something akin to grief.

She thinks of a possible future morn,
When it to children, one by one,
Will go from their nest to mingle into the world,
To battle with life's cares;
And not even the baby be left to chase
The dreadful hours of that future year.

She picks up garments here and there,
Thrown down in careless haste,
And tries to think how it would seem
If nothing were displaced.
If the house were always as still as this,
How could she bear the loneliness?

The Runaway Pancake.

Every country has its own stock of quaint, fanciful tales, handed down from mothers to children for many a generation. Among the simple Norwegians, these traditional tales abound, and one which may amuse our young readers runs much as follows:

"There was once a mother who lived above all things to make her children happy, and one day she promised them a fine large pancake.

"It will be such a fat pancake," said the mother, tossing it into the pan. She thought it was only an ordinary pancake, whereas I must get you to believe it was most extraordinary and uncommon, for it could hear and understand all that went on.

"You don't believe it?" but then I must tell my story, as it is told away in Norway, perhaps in the long days of summer, or in the winter, when there is scarcely any day at all.

The pancake knew perfectly well that it was made to be eaten, and it did not like the prospect at all, so it sprang out of the frying-pan, and rolled quickly to the door, and then on and on the steep road, which was fortunately all "downhill," from the cottage. The woman and her children had stood quite still from astonishment for a moment, so the pancake got the start, but only for a moment, and then they were all in full pursuit, crying, "Stop! stop!"

Of course such a sensible pancake was not likely to do anything of the sort; away it went, and so quickly that it was soon out of sight, and the hungry children went back to the cottage shedding tears of disappointment, for I am afraid there was no flour or eggs to make another!

As the pancake rolled along, an old man came toward it, and he too cried "Stop," for it seemed a pity that it should not be turned to good account and be eaten; but it was of no use. A cock and hen, a duck and drake, a goose and gander, all in turn rushed out, hoping to get a meal, yet the pancake escaped them every one, and went down the hill faster than ever.

At length a pig came to meet it, and instead of crying "Stop," he said, "Good morning," so we must conclude he had received some sort of education, and was tolerably well bred.

"Good day, piggy," replied the pancake; but it was much too cautious to stand talking.

"I think we two had better keep company through the wood," said the pig, trotting after it. "They tell me it isn't safe to go through it alone." There was no doubt that the pancake wished to be safe. Why else did it jump out of the frying-pan? So now it began alarmed and sighed, "Ah me! what shall I do?" as they came in sight of a rippling brook.

"If you like to sit on my snout, I'll ferry you over," said piggy, turning back; and the pancake agreed, for she was still desperately afraid of being caught and eaten; but what pig could resist a pancake within such easy reach of his mouth? Not this one, at any rate; so, giving a toss to his head, he sent the pancake down his throat, and thus ended its adventures forever.

"I don't know if any of the little children can find a lesson in so fanciful a story, and yet suppose we try. Surely it must be the old, old lesson of how foolish it is to seek to escape what we ought but do not like to do. Something is too hard, too disagreeable for us; we give it up, then worse befalls us, and we wish we could have the time over again. If this had been a really respectable pancake, I am quite sure its last thought, as it slipped into piggy's mouth, would have been, 'Dear, dear! I wish I had stayed in the frying-pan.' It would have been better to make a dinner for those poor children than to be swallowed up by a treacherous friend."—New York Observer.

A Baby's Adventure.

In the year 1849 died, in the town of Greene, Me., an old man named Thomas, who had a thrilling, wolf-story of his own to tell, though the experience was too early for his memory, he being at the time a baby in arms. Mr. George J. Varney relates the adventure in the Lewiston Journal. Mrs. Thomas was a fisherman's wife who lived in the town of Brunswick, Me., where Bowdoin College now stands. At one time when her husband was in port, but could not come home, she started on foot to Harpswell, a distance of ten miles, to see him, carrying her youngest child in her arms. Returning, with a load of fish on her back as well as the burden of her babe, she heard a wolf howl in the forest, and terror quickened her pace, though she was already fain to sink with fatigue.

She was midway of the five miles of unbroken woods when the howl of the wolf again smote her ear, and this time other voices, one after another, joined in. The pack had gathered on her trail.

She must climb a tree, one would say; but she did not. She did not even throw away her fish.

The wolves gained upon her moment by moment, the great gray wolves of the North, that stand as high as a man when they rear. It was a mile and a half to the nearest house when she first caught a glimpse of the approaching demons.

She had for the last two miles walked at her utmost speed; it was now time to run. Yet she still held firmly for babe and her fish.

A quarter of a mile more, and swiftly as she had passed it, the wolves were within a few yards. She could see their white teeth and hear their labored breath above her own. She loosened and threw down a single fish, and ran on. The pack discovered the game and fought together for its possession.

By the time it was eaten the courageous woman had got a quarter of a mile in advance, but the pack was soon at her heels again. Another fish checked them, and their snarls and yells, as they again fought each other for a bite of the savory fresh cod fish, hurried the laborious flight of the weary woman.

Her pace, annoyed by the shaking it received from the rapid pace, at length cried lustily, calling the wolves to renewed pursuit. In vain the poor mother tried to soothe her infant, but another fish was followed by a fresh flight and precious delay of the pack.

Again and again this action was repeated, until at length the barking of two huge dogs alarmed the wolves, while the almost exhausted mother ran, just the friendly brutes to the door of the farm-house, thrown open to receive her.

The great dogs were trained to do their duty, and no sooner was the fugitive in the house than they also retired in good order to the same safe stronghold, leaving the foiled wolves to rage outside, and to fall before the guns that were speedily brought to bear upon them.

The weary mother found safety and rest, but whether she saved any of her fish tradition does not relate.

True Story of Betsey Prig.

Betsey Prig lived at Hull's Cove on the island of Mt. Desert. The scenery around her home was beautiful, and crowds of strangers came every summer to praise the sea which sparkled at her feet, and to roam over the mountains that towered far above her head. But Betsey Prig cared nothing for scenery. She devoted all her time and thought to getting a living for herself and children.

Fortunately she had a little house, and it did not cost her much to clothe them, though they could not be blamed if sometimes when their toes were frost-bitten in the winter they asked her for better shoes and stockings.

But Betsey had a way of telling them if they had not been standing about idle their toes would not have had time to freeze. Hers never had when she was their age.

Times have been hard at Mt. Desert lately, as they have everywhere, and Betsey has found it difficult to get her great family enough to eat. She has scraped together all sorts of dishes, some of which they liked and some they left untouched until hunger drove them to eat. Clams, blunders, even the detested sculpins, that family had to consume; and as they grew fat, Betsey ceased not to tell her friends that it was all nonsense being so particular with children—one thing would do as well as another if they were properly brought up. So when she chanced one day to capture a little snake, as green as the sweet grass that grows at Hull's Cove, and as changeable as the treacherous waters of Frenchman's bay, she ordered her family to devour it. But they rebelled; go hungry they could, but eat snake they would not. Then Betsey, to carry out her notion that one thing was as good as another, tried to swallow it herself. Even she found the head slightly objectionable, so specially turned her dainty morsel began at the tail, and down it slipped.

A neighbor who saw Betsey thus prove herself to circumstances, described the scene to her son Cally. He said if his mother had not seen it with her own eyes, he would not have believed it.

"Well," answered Mrs. Hamor, "I caught a green snake this very morning, and it is under the door step now; let us take it down to Betsey, and you can see her eat it."

So Cally poked out the little reptile, put him on a shingle, and they went to Betsey's modest house. She thanked them, and said, "Certainly, she should be glad of it." Then she, called the children in from the shore to their supper; and that night he duly influenced by the example, swallowed it as she sat in her place at the head of the table. But this time she began at the tail. Cally said he should have to believe it, but he knew one thing: he never would eat another egg Betsey Prig had as long as he lived; for Betsey Prig is a hen.—Angie Saw, in Down in Wide Awake.

READING THE DICTIONARY.—The following story is told of the late Caleb Cushing:

"The publishers of the first edition of 'Webster's Dictionary' sent him from Springfield a presentation copy, requesting in return a critical notice. Cushing, having plenty of leisure time, glanced at the first page, and found numerous mistakes. He read the second page, and found as many more. He read the entire book, wrote to the publishers that if they expected that he was going to write a complimentary notice of a book with 5,000 errors in it, they were mistaken. The publishers, of course, found fault with his extraordinary statement, and wrote back that if he would prove this to the satisfaction of Prof. Porter, of Harvard, the editor of the dictionary, they would believe him. Angry at this imputation, this extraordinary man, read the gigantic book over again, and wrote out the 5,000 mistakes and mailed them to Prof. Porter.

The Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1879.

REV. LINUS PARKER, D.D., Editor.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Our Political Needs.

Much depends upon the character of our legislators, and upon the executive officers of a State, and the judiciary. Honest and capable men are needed in all these positions, men who have intelligence, and who are incorruptible, men who cannot be bought. The executive and judicial departments should be filled by men who will mete out justice, and punish crime without fear or partiality. The need of such men is manifest when murder and robbery and fraud are permitted to go unpunished, and when it is almost impossible to arrest the guilty, and bring them to trial. The fault may often be with the juries, but the greater fault has been in the weakness and partisan character of those whose business it is to arrest and prosecute the violators of law. Our Southern States must relieve themselves of the damaging reputation which they have abroad for lawlessness, and as affording inadequate security for life and property.

The State governments are in the hands of the white people, and they are justly held responsible for the political rights and domestic peace of all classes of citizens. The great body of the people is on the side of justice and law everywhere, and, if violence and wrong prevail, it is the fault of those who administer the government, and whose duty it is to see that the laws are executed. No political influence, no circumstances of wealth or of social position should be permitted to shield the criminal. We want men in office who have the nerve and the conscience to bring the lawless to justice, to swift punishment. An administration of this sort would do more to build up the prosperity of the country than the improvement of the Mississippi, or the building of additional railroads.

For legislators we need men of enlightened views, of honest and patriotic purpose, and of sound moral character, men who can look beyond the limits of a single town or parish, and take in the interests and welfare of the whole country. With the requisite intelligence it is vastly important that we have legislators who will neither get drunk nor lie, nor sell themselves to rings or corporations. Here in Louisiana, however it may be elsewhere, we have been cursed with a legislature that foisted upon us a legalized gambling institution, and that has largely denied to our people quiet and peaceful Sabbaths. The Lottery Company, the whisky power, and the anti-Sunday sentiment, have controlled our legislation for years, and this, in spite of the fact that the majority of the people of the State at large is opposed to these iniquities.

There is need of a stronger infusion of religious conviction and of moral principle in the politics of the whole country. The character of those who are candidates for office is not as carefully sifted as it should be, and religious and good men permit themselves to be led and controlled by those who solicit their votes, and then betray the dearest interests of their constituents. There ought to be an uprising of the people against this tyranny of party machinery, and against the manipulations by which bad and incompetent men are charged with the making and execution of our laws. A solid South has been forced upon us as a means of protection against influences that were tending to ruin us. But in this union of political action there lies the danger of looseness and indifference in regard to the character of the men for whom we cast our votes. In getting rid of the greedy carpet-bagger and the hoard of Northern plunderers, the gain will not be great if we put the mercenary and corrupt among ourselves in their place.

Hungry, greedy office-seekers are the curse of every section. Men who live and fatten on offices, and have no other visible means of support, are the sharks in the political sea. They are ready to devour everything and stick at no means to secure the pelf they are after. Of the thousands who are to-day laying their plans for office, and working for the nominations, what proportion of them cares a button about the moral welfare, the educational enlightenment, or the material benefit of the country? It is simply too bad that the welfare of the people should be slaughtered by the trickery and cunning of a few sagacious but sordid political hacks.

While the name of no man is advocated in these columns as a candidate for any office, we advise the conscientious citizen, in city or country, to do what he can toward securing good and upright men for office. Have nothing to do, except to defeat them, with men who condone crime in high places or low, or who lack the courage or principle to oppose all measures injurious to the moral welfare of the community. Eliminate the trimmers and time-servers, the gamblers and drunkards, and the advocates of drunken and brawling Sabbaths, from your tickets, if such be on them. Good men in the State are not there to wink at crime, nor to be silent lookers on, while the professional politicians deliver the government into the hands of the selfish and unprincipled. They have a heavy responsibility to meet, and they can only meet it by quitting themselves like men in the sphere of their political influence. If they allow themselves to be lulled to sleep in times of peril, and keep aloof when they ought to be alert and active, they will have no right to complain if affairs pass into incompetent and unworthy hands.

Ministerial Support among the British Wesleyans.

Chancellor H. O. Haven, LL. D., writing in the New York Christian Advocate, about the British Conference, says:

Another item of interest to us is the support of the ministry. This is raised from contributions in the class meetings, where the effort is to obtain an average of sixpence, or about twelve cents, a year from every member. The deficiencies are supplemented by collections in the congregations, and in some instances the rent of pews is appropriated to the purpose. Rev. J. Irr Rattenbury has been engaged for some years in raising an Auxiliary Fund, which is invested, the interest of which is to aid the poorer circuits, so that no married traveling preacher shall receive less than £150, or about $700, and no unmarried preacher less than £80, or nearly $400. Actually the preachers on the average receive more than this. This is in addition to a furnished parsonage, for which no rent is charged.

Mr. Rattenbury's Fund already amounts to £100,000 or $500,000. For the same purpose the Conference has a Sustentation Fund, which has been in existence only five years, but is now established in thirty of the thirty-three districts. It is claimed that the Sustentation Fund is only temporary. It was reported that out of the 504 circuits in the Conference, only 217 paid their ministers less than the minimum above stated, while the most paid more.

Another item of interest is what is called "The Children's Fund." This is a sort of communistic arrangement, whereby the whole denomination takes care of all the ministers' children. Older American Methodists remember that formerly our Discipline recommended that every circuit or station should allow so much for the minister, so much for his wife, and so much for each child, according to the age. This was the primitive Wesleyan practice. In both countries it was found not to work well in detail. In America it has disappeared, but in England it was modified into a Child's Fund. All the circuits, whether their pastors have children or not, few or many, are urged to contribute at the rate of £7 per 100 members to a general fund, which is equally distributed to the parents, according to the number of children, for their maintenance. A minister with a large family receives great aid from this fund in addition to his regular support.

This year a warm discussion arose from the fact that the proportion of the minister to the people varies so much that this system is unfair. A committee was appointed to investigate the subject and report at the next Conference.

Besides all this the ministers enjoy special advantages in the education of their children. At Kingswood and Woodhouse Grove Schools their boys are educated at little or no expense to their parents, and similar provision is made for the daughters elsewhere. All this seems wonderful to an American Methodist preacher, who enjoys but few, if any, similar perquisites.

In return for all this it is expected of a member of the British Conference that he will devote all his time and energy to his ministerial duty. He is not to buy, or sell, or trade, or engage in any business whatever for pecuniary profit. He must be a man of one work. It is enough for him to know that when he superannuates he will be cared for, and if he dies his widow and children will not be forgotten nor neglected.

All this tends to produce conservatism and contentment. Why should men spoil down so comfortable a structure? Why should a Wesleyan Methodist minister worry himself? Why should they not be vigorous and long lived? The consequence is that, up to a certain age, there is a larger proportion of elderly preachers in the British Conference than in the American Conference. A larger proportion of the American preachers "locate," or, if the Conference allow, take a supernumerary or superannuated relation early, in order to go into other business to secure a livelihood. Since American Conferences allow able bodied men to do this. This practice is almost wholly unknown in England, it is common in America. Therefore there is a larger proportion of effective or active English Methodist Conference preachers from forty to sixty years of age. But, strange as it may appear, as the age advances, there comes a period when the balance seems to turn the other way. There is fully as large, if not a larger, proportion of decidedly aged ministers in the effective ranks in American than in British Methodism. The ministers of the British Conference for 1877 had the name of only one effective minister who had traveled fifty years, and he was a foreign missionary; and of only one who had traveled forty-nine years, and he took a superannuated relation that year. There are, as I judge from personal acquaintances, at least from ten to twenty older than that in our effective ranks. This may arise from one or both of two causes: a superior inducement to take a superannuated relation in England, which would scarcely be refused, if asked for, to any man who had traveled nearly fifty years, and a superior healthfulness and longevity in America. This latter could not be claimed without careful statistical examination; but I have an impression that there is not a body of men in the world more healthy and long-lived than the Methodist ministry of America. Temperance, morality, and religion, in a good climate, with hard work, are great promoters of long life. It is not true that the people of England, or of any nation in Europe, are more healthy or robust or long-lived than the people of the United States.

The Conference at Basle.

We quote from the editorial correspondence of the New York Observer:

The seventh General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance opened its sessions in Basle, on Sunday, August 31, with an attendance that was large beyond all expectation. More than fifteen hundred delegates were present at the opening, including a large number from the United States and from Great Britain. All the hotels of the town were full, and private liberality has been taxed to the utmost to meet the demand made upon it. The Committee of Arrangements has been careful and effective in providing for the delegates. Each properly certified delegate, upon presenting his credentials, was provided with a card of admission to the sessions of the Conference, which contained a plan of the city of Basle, marked with the places of meeting and the objects of importance throughout the town, with programmes of the various meetings and invitations to social festivities. The English Secretary, Mr. Arnold, and Dr. Schaff, our American Secretary, have been assiduous in promoting the comfort and interest of the delegates from English-speaking countries. Among the Americans present at the opening were Rev. Drs. Anderson, John Hall, Washburn, Hurst, Stanton, Bishop Cheney, Drs. Bush, of the American Board of Missions, Atterbury, of the New York Sabbath Committee, Brown, of Hamilton College, Vermilye, of Antwerp, Stoddard, of the New York Observer, Hon. E. C. Benedict, Rev. Mr. Deems, and others. Rev. J. P. Thomson, D. D., of Berlin, has sent a paper upon the present state of religious liberty, which will be read by Dr. S. G. Brown, but on account of feeble health he will be unable to be present and take part in the Conference. Among the English delegates are Drs. Stoughton, Fraser, Rigg, Hope, Dykes, Sir Charles Reed, and a host of others. Pastor Esch and Dr. Pressense, from France, Drs. Friedner, from Madrid, Van Oosterzee, from Holland, Godet, Christlieb, and a large representation of Swiss and German divines fill up the catalogue.

The general appearance of the Evangelical Alliance is Saxon. There is a fair representation from France, and a few from the Southern countries, but looking over the congregations one would not mark any great difference between the men here and in England or America. An English Alliance might have more color; an American Alliance might be a little sharper in facial outline and paler in complexion; but that would be all. There is an expression of intelligent interest upon all countenances when matters of importance are on hand, an immediate, restlessness—seen also in American meetings when the discourse drags, or the speaking is too long; there is a reverent posture and stillness in prayer, and a general uplifting of all voices in unison when the tune is raised and some noble hymn sung. The singing of Luther's "Ein feste burg" in the St. Martin's church by the whole congregation, with the full power of the organ and a band of brass instruments, was something to be remembered. Of course the German and Swiss delegates are in large majority, and the English and Scotch follow next in order, but it is a gratifying thing to the brethren in Basle that so many have crossed the ocean to attend the Conference here.

The greatest man present is M. Necker, from Geneva. He is a giant, but a mild and lovely Christian giant. Pelzare hospitality dislikes, however, from entertaining so much of a monk, and a specially consecrated bear as the "Professeur" is deemed, that he may sleep in safety and comfort. He is great in mind as well as in body, a direct descendant of the famous Minister of Finance in the Court of Louis the Fourteenth, and a leader among his brethren. One would hardly take Dr. Bresse for a Parisian, though his ease and fluency and animated gesture mark him as a true Frenchman, for he is large, round, careless in dress and heavy in his appearance. His soul is all aglow with Christian fire, and there is a rich unction to his utterances which tell of Christian consecration.

The president of the Conference, M. Sarasin, is a native of Basle, and has the manner and bearing of a true Swiss. He speaks with fluency the French and German languages, and presides with a dignity and propriety which are most needful in so large an assembly. He has announced that Drs. John Hall, Pressense, Viget and others, would act as presidents in connection with himself, thus following the example of the New York Alliance. Dr. Van Oosterzee is the prominent representative of Holland. A man of commanding stature, inclined to corpulence, of ruddy complexion, and hair that is growing gray, he is a fine speaker, using no notes, uttering his sentences with the deliberation and weight that characterized Daniel Webster, using graceful and frequent gestures, and sometimes enlivening his discourse with points of wit. In contrast with him is Prof. Tardy, of Vienna, who has the thin, pale face of a student, and a nervous style, even when reading from a manuscript. But time would fail to describe men, or give even an outline of their addresses. The latter will be printed in two volumes in the German language, and published here.

Talking to Sunday-Schools.

In a tract on Sunday-School Follies, by Mrs. J. H. Morehouse, published by Phillips & Hunt, we find the following on the subject of making speeches. Our Southern Sunday-schools are greatly pestered with the evil so emphatically denounced, but the extract may be suggestive if not admonitory:

Among all the tramps that infest the earth, there is not wanting a sort of Sunday-school tramp; men who, with a small stock of religion and common sense, and a proportionately large stock of brazen volubility, as they chance to be stopping in different places always happen into the Sunday-schools, get introduced to the superintendent as a prominent Sunday-school worker or the relative of one, and look as if they expected to be asked to say a few words. So, just as the teacher is depending upon the last five minutes to bring the lesson to a point, the bell rings, and lessons must be closed to give time to the stranger.

There are several varieties in this interesting species of Sunday-school speech-makers. He may be an old person, who feebly and flutteringly tells the children how Sabbath-schools were conducted in his early days, and how much they have to be thankful for. This sort is very well.

Then there is the pompous speaker. He rises slowly, coughs ominously, and looks fixedly at the children from behind his spectacles, till they almost think he is a caged animal ready to eat them up. After looking them fiercely into silence, he begins: "Children, what is the ostensible object of Sunday-school instruction?" No answer. "Perhaps you do not comprehend the bearing of my interrogation. I will put it more perspicuously: What is the apparent design, or the covert motive, in all the modus operandi which goes to constitute the mighty movement known as the modern Sunday-school?" Shrinking silence or saucy tittering is his only answer; and he concludes that our children are little fools, or haven't been well drilled in responses.

Next comes the flippant speaker—the regular Sunday-school man, he is called—breezy and jovial, who springs to his feet, rubbing his soft hands, and smiling beautifully upon the young faces before him. He leaps into his speech with congratulations and compliments, and all things bright and pleasant. He is your inveterate story-teller; happy are you who never hear his speech but once. I remember hearing one such: he was—whisper it softly—a minister and a failure as a pastor, but he was pronounced a success in the Sunday-school. So he talked to our school very nicely, and closed with a beautiful story of a little girl in one of the passes of the Alleghanies holding her baby brother up in a niche in the rocks while the express train came thundering by. In all the danger she kept saying, "Cling to the rock, Johnnie, cling to the rock," and this refrain was used, of course, to point a moral. The story was new, and we thought it good. In the evening we heard this man again in the Sunday-school concert in another church, when lo! the same speech, and "Cling to the rock, Johnnie" for a finale. In the course of a week another aspiring speaker had purloined this much of the stock in trade, and again we heard Johnnie urged to cling close to the rock. By this time we felt as if the poor fellow must be ready to drop off, and we heartily wished he would. Let me hint a word to the wise. When we make Sunday-school speeches don't let us tell the young people about Alexander weeping because there was not another world to conquer, or about influence being like a pebble thrown into the ocean, whose wavelets reached the farthest shore, because some people have heard that hackneyed warrior and that old pebble mentioned before.

Our children are supposed to attend the regular church services, and there they ought to hear all the preaching they need. If anything more is required the superintendent ought to be just the person to know what of direction or exhortation his school needs. Heaven pity the school with a speech making superintendent! Happily, they are few, for our schools have the intuition to elect "grand, silent men," who, like the Corliss engine, make very little noise in doing a great deal of work.

Letter from China.

The following letter from Bro. Lyonhuth to W. H. Foster, Esq., of this city, will be of interest to our readers:

SOOCHOW, CHINA, July 3, 1879.

WM. H. FOSTER, ESQ.: My Dear Brother: I have just received a note from Bro. Dau (C. K. M.), native pastor at Soochow, and a Missionary of the Church of the Strangers, New York City," informing me of the happy death of one of our young men in the boarding school. He says: "I write by post of to-day to say Liang Fah, a boy in our boarding school, is dead. He passed away this morning at one quarter past five. He witnessed a most happy and triumphant death. Just before his death he tried to sing one of the sweet songs of Zion, which he had sung so often in school. He was too weak to sing through the whole. I knelt beside him, together with two or three of the boys who were left in school, also his father and sister, and we prayed with him. When we closed, he said to those standing around him: 'I see some one has come for me. I am going now to be with Jesus, my Saviour, and to enjoy happiness forever. I am now crossing the Jordan.' With these words he passed from earth to heaven. I have tried to do all I could for him, but it was God's will that his soul should be in heaven. Blessed be the name of Jesus! Liang Fah was the first to come into our school, and he is the first to leave it for a better home in heaven. He was a mild, gentle and quiet boy, and had been received into the church just two or three weeks before his death."

Bro. Dau writes me at a later date, July 14: "I had the body buried early in the morning. After the body had been lowered I read the burial service and prayed. The father and sister of the young man were present during his sickness and death, and present at his burial." His father was a Christian, and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

My dear young friends of Felicity Street Sunday-school, Liang Fah was one of the young men you have supported so long. You will mourn with us that he has been taken away from us so early in life, but, thanks be to God, we mourn not as those who have no hope. Liang Fah witnessed a good profession, and I feel sure you will unite with us in praising God for this evidence of the power of Christ over the hearts of even the heathen in China. Dear friends, your work of love has not been lost. One soul has been gathered into that heavenly home in the palace of God. What hymn he tried to sing I have not heard, but there are several hymns the native Christians like—"A Home Over There" also "Sweet By and By," and "What Wondrous Love Is This?" He is no more with us. We did hope in two or three years more he would be ready for some service in the church. He was a little over seventeen when he died. God has ordered it otherwise, and has taken him to a higher sphere of usefulness, and to be forever with Him in heaven. Pray for us, and hold up the hands of the missionaries among the heathen. If God wills, I hope to see you all in 1880. May the richest blessing of God rest upon you all, for which I earnestly pray.

I am yours in the love of Christ,

J. LYONHUTH.

California as a Home.

A general impression has gone out among the nations that California is the place for business and homes. The consequence is, all the nations are represented here.

Truly, the State and towns are wonderfully cosmopolitan. Native Californians are rare. Jews, Italians, Germans, Irish, French, Mexicans, Chinese, Japanese, Africans, Indians, are all here, and individuals among them have permanent and lucrative establishments. Most of the leading clothing and dry goods houses of San Francisco and the towns are owned by Jews exclusively.

The States are largely represented here. Southern, Eastern and Northern families are here in large numbers, and constitute the finest social element in the State. It is on this account that Southern Methodism has a foothold, and no insignificant one, in this State. The consequence of such a mixed population, and this preponderating, is, what might be readily supposed, social laxity, and little general refinement and solid culture. There are many schools, and good ones, and teachers are paid well.

Intellectually, this people compare favorably with any other section. Possibly, they are generally better informed than the aggregate population of any State East. But intellectuality, without its accompaniments, social refinement and the amenities of life, can urge no special claim to consideration. There are many exceptions to this, and it must not be considered a general statement. Many excellent families were induced to seek refuge here in pursuit of health. But most of the people came here for money. The report of sudden riches, secured by a turn in Fortune's wheel, has been spread broadcast. Every one seems in pursuit of that phantom. The best definition of the typical Californian is a professional money-maker. This being almost the universal pursuit among them, there is naturally a moneyed aristocracy. Character is not generally taken into consideration. Influence accompanies the rich. The most influential men of this State are notorious monopolists. San Francisco has been largely controlled by this element. There is an atmosphere of immorality in this city that is strongly suggestive of ancient Corinth. This is the State for adventurers and adventuresses. It is very common here for people to travel under assumed names.

There is very little respect for religion of any kind. There are many good churches in San Francisco, but most of them are poorly attended. The Californians, as a class, have little reverence for God, and positively none for men. Leaving aside millionaires, all men are on one common plane. Every man is as good as every other man. Where there is such diversity of people, there will be many various and conflicting opinions. California is today in a revolutionary state. The whole thought of the people is undergoing a great change. There is no stagnation in politics or on living issues.

The communists are at work. Kearney was the expolent of that class, but it is now confidently stated that he has been purchased into the advocacy of certain railroad interests, which at the first were the objects of his scathing rebukes and anathemas. This class, instead of church attendance on the Sabbath, congregate to a portion of the city known as the Sand Lots, and there they discuss politics and economics in all their phases. It is simply communism. It proposes a leveling process. It strikes right at the heart of all corporations. The wealthy are their enemies. Their language is fierce and bloody at times. These ideas are not American or Republican. They are imported European sentiments, and threaten, by their increase and general growth in this grand country of ours, to give great trouble some time. The Chinese, under no circumstances, are allowed to vote. But the ignorant Irishman, German, Spaniard, Englishman and negro, can have the same privileges as America's oldest and best sons. And here is a living illustration of how these European mobs use this right of suffrage. Were it not for the great sentiment of the nation that revolves as a regulator in the midst of this prodigious national machinery, it would not be long before communism would show not only its head threatening mischief, but its hands bearing the torch, fire and fagots of persecution and incendiarism.

California is cursed with this social monster, and many of the living and standard sentiments of the people receive color from this class of thinkers.

Skepticism is almost universal. As much Free Thinking, or more, than in any city or State of Virginia is found here. To resist the strong attack to which Christianity is subjected one must be strong and robust in faith. There is not much of the praying spirit or dependant trust among this people, so long taught by the experience of want to look by personal effort. It is living by faith. It is no unusual thing for a man's piety to be utterly shattered while living among them. I have met young men of my past personal acquaintance who, while living in this section of the State, have lost faith, and plunged into the most arrant infidelity. Such a people need the most direct and uncompromising gospel preached to them—a gospel which, though its deliverances may be unwelcome, yet shall be known and preached from pulpits consecrated to the service of God. There are such in the State, but reinforcement is needed. The preacher here enjoys no special dignity or favor among the people as a whole. He may be looked upon with indifference or partial contempt, unless by the robustness of his manhood, he obtains respect. His church has character only as he imparts it by his own personal attractiveness.

In this respect all churches have about the same opportunity for development. Salaries are seldom large, but sufficient to supply a livelihood. The population has usually an original increase, but last year the census was less. San Francisco, now numbering about 300,000 souls, and Oakland—the beautiful city of residences—about 30,000, are rapidly growing, and will, to all appearances, become two of the most populous cities of this country. Aside from some of these disagreeable features of California life, there are many redeeming points. The climate is justly world renowned. From Northern to Southern California are all climates—from the winters of the North to the temperate of our Southland, and the tropics of the Indies. In San Francisco the midsummer is cool in the morning and evening, making the use of an overcoat quite needful; at midday it is warm, never hot. In the towns away from San Francisco the nights are always cool—two or three blankets, sometimes not too many—while the days are warm. The soil is varied—from the richest valleys, where corn is abundant, to the most luxurious hills, where the cereals are profuse. California, to-day, is the great wheat State of the United States. The wheat fields, in size and annual yield, surpass any in the world. De Glenn, the Democratic and New Constitution parties' nominee for Governor, is perhaps the largest producer in the State. His yearly wheat crop averages 1,000,000 bushels, or 30,000 tons. It is estimated that his crop freights 30 ships of 1,000 tons each season, and it is thought that about $1,000,000 of the whole go to the advantages of the State and workingmen. His field covers 53 000 acres of cultivated land. There is nothing to compare with California agriculture. Farms often compass 5,000, 10 000 and 20,000 acres. The yield on the entire wheat crop of last year was $85 000,000 The agricultural implements used are the perfection of art in that line. Everything is done by machinery. A machine heads the wheat, another one thrashes it by steam, while yet another grinds it, sacks it, and prepares it in the field for shipment. The average yield of an acre is from 25 bushels to 60, and even 80 bushels. Simple farm lands cost from $75 to $50 per acre. Real estate investments are generally safe here, and pay handsomely, as the prices rise almost every year. The fruits of this wonderful land are astonishingly numerous. There are over one hundred distinct kinds of grapes, and as many distinct wines, manufactured at some of the different wineries. With respect to grape culture and wine manufacture, California is rapidly coming to the lead of the nations, and bids fair to rival France and Germany in the wines for which these countries are so famous. This is truly unfortunate, as it will constitute only another of the most potential factors for evil in the State. Temperance reform movements will make little headway in California for years to come. There is something very peculiar in the appearance of these grape-vines. They grow like little trees, sometimes having a main trunk four inches in diameter; they grow about five feet high, and, if not pruned, would rise as high as twenty feet. These vines live about twenty-five years, and every year produce abundantly. As many as fifty pounds of grapes grow on one vine frequently. Immense fortunes are often made in this way. All kinds of vegetables abound. A gentleman of veracity told me of having seen a wagon load of California pumpkins weighed; there were but twelve in the wagon, and their weight was 2 400 pounds. One of them weighed 284 pounds. Irish potatoes frequently weigh two and three pounds. The live stock of this State prospers and increase rapidly. The climate is just what sheep demand. The mountains are well adapted, on account of their immense yield of wild oats and bur clover. Without a blade of grass, this bur clover supplies a rich and nutritious food for sheep. Almost incredible stories could be told of their increase. Suffice it to say, California is the place for sheep-raising, for any one contemplating so profitable a business. Some flocks number over 100,000. Cattle also do well. The greatest fascination attaches to investments in the mining stocks, and the discovery of new mines—gold in California and silver in Nevada. The great Comstock Lode of Nevada has already sunk a shaft, and is working at a depth of over 1,200 feet under the earth. Virginia City has been deprived of its natural foundation by the undermine. The heat in which some of the miners work is 125 Fahrenheit; others labor in a temperature of over 100.

For many years California has been much demoralized by mining and stock investments, unsettling commerce and agriculture, but that excitement is subsiding, and people are beginning to engage in farming manufactories and commerce. The consequence will be a more normal and permanent prosperity. The State has, as the writer thinks, a great future, and, with some of the disagreeable aspects omitted, this part of the West is surely well worthy the commendation of Horace Greeley, when he said: "Young man, go West!"

The annual session of the Missouri Conference was opened at Louisiana, Mo., September 10, by Bishop Wightman, Rev. Dr. J. D. Vincil and A. V. Bailey acting as secretaries. The Conference is large the largest west of the Mississippi river.

At this Conference Dr. McAnally, the veteran editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, preached a semi-centennial sermon. He has been fifty years in the ministry, and still in full harness. Writing of the Conference Dr. McAnally says:

The members generally in attendance and apparently in good health; and, up to the close of the daily sessions on the twelfth, the regular business was carried on harmoniously and expeditiously. On the eleventh a fraternal messenger—Rev. Dr. Wayman—from the Missouri Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church was received, who made a neat and appropriate address to the Conference, and the more acceptable because there was no small talk about it. It was replied to by an appropriate resolution passed unanimously by the Conference, and a member appointed to bear the fraternal greetings of this Conference to that at its next regular session. The appointee was Rev. J. H. Pritchett, of Howard Female College, with T. J. Gooch as alternate.

The business of the Conference is carried on in the best of feeling, and with all the dispatch the interests involved will allow.

The religious services are attended by large numbers of people, who manifest more than usual interest therein.

The Nashville Christian Advocate says:

The Western Annual Conference met at Council Grove, August 20, 1879, Bishop J. C. Keener presiding. Admitted on trial, Geo. W. Payne. Received by transfer, J. W. Payne, Thomas H. Swearengen, J. S. Smith and D. W. Ward, from Missouri Conference; H. W. Abbett, Kentucky Conference; and J. R. Bennett, Southwest Missouri Conference. Readmitted, Evan B. Evans.

Ordained elders, J. T. Winstead and Andrew J. Lawless; ordained deacons, Harvey J. Brown, William H. Younger; discontinued, D. W. Ward; located, Geo. T. Gray.

The Bishops were requested to hold the next Conference as late as October. Oscaloosa was chosen as the place.

The same paper contains an interesting letter from Bishop Keener, from which we quote:

This Conference now requires a half dozen vigorous men, who travel light, to occupy the best part of Kansas, the Arkansas bottoms, a region fertile, and full of coal and other sources of wealth, and rapidly filling up with people from Kentucky, Tennessee and other Southern regions. It needs churches everywhere, and therefore church-builders, men who carry both spade and sickle—a spade to open ground for the corner-stone of a church—who are not content to build on another man's foundation, nor worship always in a country school-house; who are not satisfied with writing their names on the sand by galloping around the circuit month after month and year after year, leaving very few traces besides those of their horses. I find that circuits which are houseless melt away nearly as fast as they form. It is certainly a mistake to suppose that one cannot build a church without first forming a society. Very often the shortest way to interest a community in religion is to begin the work of church building. Many persons quite indifferent to our church, will contribute to the first party that solicits aid in this direction, merely because they look upon churches as necessary to the development of a neighborhood or town.

The colored man as yet makes no figure in Kansas. Here on the bottoms of the great streams are millions of bushels of corn; twelve bushels of it would feed a colored refugee for twelve months, at a cost of fifteen cents a bushel—say one dollar and eighty cents a year. Still, with all this corn and all the sympathy they can muster, and with large providential openings for doing good, there is no enthusiasm in this direction. I have been talking of the good things in store for them in the exodus—the comforts, the service, the easily diverted, not to say controlled, votes; it made no impression upon men who have been raised to help themselves.

I found our church in Kansas fairly going on to completion. It is about ready for the Conference session just at hand. It has a most delightful speaking-room; and it is a great credit and comfort to the few noble spirits who have borne the expense of its structure.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—One death from yellow fever occurred in Algiers, across the river, during the past week. This case came from Morgan City. So far as we can learn, there is no yellow fever in New Orleans at this writing, Tuesday, September 23. The number of deaths from all causes, for the week ending Sunday, September 21, was remarkably small. This has been the healthiest summer that New Orleans has experienced in the past five years, as shown by the statistics, and probably as healthy as any in the last twenty years.

There have been a few cases of yellow fever at Morgan City, and the trains from that point are subject to careful inspection. There may have been a case or two at Franklin, also at New Iberia, but it is not likely to spread in the Teche country. At Centordia, on the river below Memphis, the fever appears to be of a malignant type, but is now yielding more favorably to treatment. Some of the sick are recovering. The rate of mortality is steadily declining in Memphis, but the fever is there to stay, until checked by cold weather, or until it runs its usual three months course.

Cetywayo, the renowned Zulu King, has been captured at last, and is now at Cape Town, awaiting the orders of the British government. It might be well to send him to St. Helena, as was done in the case of another captured hero.

Trouble is brewing for the English in Afghanistan. A severe and protracted struggle seems to be looming up in that direction.

We have on several occasions quoted articles and extracts from the able pen of Prof. J. P. Lacroix. We deeply regret to learn that he has had an attack of paralysis of the brain, that is likely to result in death. Rev. J. C. Jackson, writing to the Western Christian Advocate, says:

You will regret to hear the painful intelligence that, on our return voyage, when about one week out from London, Prof. Lacroix was attacked with paralysis of the brain. At first it was but slight, but continued to increase, until his vocal organs were nearly powerless and his mind perceptibly affected. After reaching New York, and on our way to Delaware, he failed rapidly. We arrived at home Wednesday at two A. M., by which time he was helpless, mentally, and has been declining ever since. He enjoyed the voyage well up till the time of his attack, and felt much improved in health. There is no hope of his recovery, and it is now thought he cannot live more than a few days.

SEND ON THE NAMES.—We desire to send a sample copy of the ADVOCATE to every member of the church, and again urge all the preachers to send us a list of all the members of their various churches (not now subscribers,) that we may mail them a copy of the paper free. A few have responded to previous requests, and the results have been very gratifying, and if all would send on the names, including even those who have declined to subscribe, much good may ensue. As the regular subscription rate of $2 per year is less than four cents a week, and 25 cents will pay to January next, it is next in order to send samples free as an inducement, and thus give an opportunity for all to examine the paper at their leisure, and we have an abundance of faith in the result. Now, do not delay, but write out the lists, and send to the publisher as early as possible.

The Illinois Conference, says the St. Louis Christian Advocate, held its annual session last week at Kinmundy, Ill. Bishop Wightman presiding, and Drs. Marchison and C. T. McAnally acting as secretaries. The attendance was good, preachers generally in fair health, the session harmonious, very much so, business transacted with dispatch. What is technically termed "minute business" was completed on Friday, the session commencing on Wednesday, the third.

Dr. R. A. Young was present, attending to the interests of the Publishing House at Nashville, and of the Vanderbilt University, both of which he represented as in a very promising condition.

Rev. D. W. H. Watkins, of the Mississippi Conference, has been spending some time in the mountains at Ashville, N. C. When he left Jackson, Miss., his health was very feeble, and we regret to learn, through his son, Dr. J. M. Watkins, of this city, that thus far there has been little improvement in his condition. Let prayer go up for the recovery of this valuable and devoted servant of the church. We hope that the bracing autumn air and change of climate may bring him renewed vigor and complete restoration.

Prof. F. M. Grace, writing from Hiwassee College, Tenn., September 20 says:

Seeing your favorable notice of Uncle John's Sunday Evening Talks, I take pleasure in informing you, who, he is. It is no other than our worthy Presiding Elder, whose likeness you would have recognized had it been a good one. The book affords delight to the aged and the young. Every one of the fifty-two talks is a jewel and an absolute treasure in itself, and as a series of addresses is unsurpassed in literature.

It was a fact. We did not recognize our good-looking friend, Dr. Brunner, in that picture.

In "Field Notes" and "From the Work" the name of the writers must be given. In all communications the editor must have the full address, but in the Field Notes and From the Work the name of the writers must be printed with their communications. There are no reasons for withholding the name and several for their publication.

The Rev. Dr. A. A. Lipscomb, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of September 3, has been greatly prostrated recently, and there has been no improvement in his health since he left Nashville. His mind is serene. There is love for him and sympathy wherever this Advocate goes.

PASTORS AND PEOPLE OR METHODISM IN THEORY AND PRACTICE. By Rev. J. H. Potts, With an introduction by Rev. J. M. Reid, D.D. New York: Phillips & Hunt; Cincinnati: Walden & Stowe, 1879.

The author, in a practical way, treats of the discipline and usages of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and touches upon almost everything belonging to the Methodist system, its doctrines, ministry, changes, experience, methods of church work, missions, polity, and its distinctive features as a church. Mr. Potts is conservative, his views are generally stamped with good common sense, and his book is an excellent one for Methodists to read. With some slight eliminations and changes it would suit our Southern Methodist people. As it is, they might read it to great advantage. The volume is a 12 mo, 278 pages, and substantially bound in muslin.

—Relation of the Church to Higher Education is the title of an address delivered by Hon. William Lawrence, LL. D., before the faculty and students of the Ohio Wesleyan University, and others, Delaware, O., June 24, 1879. It is issued in tract form by the Methodist Publishing House, New York.

—The Sanitarian for September has, among other valuable articles: The Education of Girls as Connected With Their Growth and Physical Development; Liernur's New System for Keeping Cities Clean; Practical Sanitation. The Sanitarian is edited by A. N. Bell, A. M., M. D., New York. Price, $3a year.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.—The numbers of the Living Age for the weeks ending September 6 and 13 respectively, contain the following articles: The Works of Rembrandt, Edinburgh; Count Cavour, Quarterly; Some Facts and Thoughts About Light Emitting Animals, Popular Science Review; Prince Louis Napoleon's Expedition to Boulogne, and A Gallican Novelist, Fraser; Fashionable Charity, and The Late Youth of Philosophers, Saturday Review; Barnard Castle, Spectator; with continuations of Jean Ingelow's "Sarah de Berenger" and Miss Keary's "Doubting Heart," and the usual amount of poetry.

—"The Covenant" is the title of a religious semi-monthly paper, published at Philadelphia, as the organ of the Reformed Episcopal Church. It is a live paper, and set for the defense of the church it represents. We wish it success. It is edited by Rev. William Newton.

Publisher's Department.

We are authorized to receive subscriptions and advertisements for the ADVOCATE, but no solicitor is authorized to collect money on account of the same unless specially commissioned for ordering publication in the ADVOCATE.

THE ADVOCATE

FOR TWENTY-FIVE CENTS TO JANUARY.

The publisher announces to the thousands of our friends that he will send the paper from date of receipt of order to the first day of January, 1880, for twenty-five cents in postage or postage stamps. This is done to facilitate securing new subscribers, and nothing is asked that will burden any of the patrons. Thousands of persons could be induced to take advantage of this liberal offer, many of whom will become permanent subscribers. We trust every Methodist will do what he can to swell the list. There is no better investment that will supply the reader with so much religious reading matter, fresh each week, at this liberal offer. Let us hear from you as early as possible.

CLUB RATES.

To any person sending us four yearly subscribers who pay the price will be sent free for one year. Sample copies will be mailed to parties who may wish to hand them to persons whom they desire to solicit for subscribers. Address all communications and remittances with above to the publisher.

MR. E. E. HOSS, of the staff of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, Nashville, spending part of the Week and Sunday with the New Orleans Conference, will preach in the Carondelet Street Church, New Orleans, on Sunday morning, September 28, at 11 o'clock. We hope our friends will turn out and hear him. He is a most excellent preacher, and we are glad to welcome him to our city.

W. P. SHEPARD & CO., Importers of Segars, Originals 1 quarter, $1 25; two quarters, $2 per dozen. Approved Cuba cultivated seed, 15 lbs. boxed in books and my business in French China. 19

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home comfort which is so apparent at the American House Boston, is one of the characteristics of its popular and well established management. To the well posted no recommendation is necessary, but to those who are not, it is an opportunity seldom afforded to enjoy such home-like quarters at such reasonable rates. 19

NEWMAN'S WINE MILL. For particulars respecting this popular wine mill see the card on the sixth page. It is considered to be the best machine for making wine now in use, and by the same time next season each subscriber will be supplied from the Newman Manufacturing Company, Brooklyn, New York. They have probably taken the premium wherever exhibited. Agents wanted.

GLASS BALL CASTERS. These castors are very popular in the East. They not only improve the appearance of furniture but possess many decided advantages over the old style wood casters. They move more quickly and easily, get out of order or break less often. Nearly every dealer in furniture and carpets in the city keeps them in stock, and those who will become permanent customers will find them to be the best and cheapest caster in the market. Those who have used them for years are greatly benefited and relieved in their daily use. They run so much lighter than the old style that they require less than one-half the power to move furniture, and will not mar the finest carpet. Upon hard floors they are invaluable, as they will not scratch or mar the floor in the slightest degree. Any person who has furniture to move will find it to their interest to call at the office of the Glass Ball Caster Co., No. 37 Canal street, and examine them. Circulars will be sent free to any address.

PAPER PATTERNS are a necessity. You can always get the latest styles, cut to fit, of the celebrated "Butterick" and the well known Singer Manufacturing Company, New York. Write for catalogue, mailed free.

CORTIN PUB. Success to the best of temperance papers. Mr. E. E. Levy, of No. 32 Union street, New Orleans, announces, in another column, the largest subscription season of the "Cortin Weekly Pic" and "Cortin Standard Pictorial Pic." The conductors of the paper are to be congratulated on the success attending a favorite with so many on account of simplicity and interest at so small the low cost price.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, Indigestion, depression of spirits and General Debility in their various forms, nothing is a more decided antidote against Fever and Ague, and other Intermittent Fevers, than Plantation Bitters. A trial of one wine glass will convince you of its merits. Sold by all druggists and dealers. It has already gained the confidence of a large portion of the community, and is rapidly growing in favor. Manufactured by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists in the world. Ask your druggist for Plantation Bitters and take no other. Agents wanted.

SUNFLOWER CAKE FOR CATTLE.—Prof. Reiset, of the Royal Agricultural Academy in Sweden, publishes a most laudatory report on the virtues of sunflower-seed cake as food for cattle. He states that it presents a remarkable constancy of composition, rarely if ever met with in other cakes, as tested with the microscope. It contains from 15 to 16 per cent. of fat, and 25 to 26 per cent. of proteine substances, and has, therefore, a nutritive value far above that of most ordinarily feeding stuffs, besides which it has a most agreeable taste, and is altogether free from odor or any injurious matters. Some careful experiments on its effects upon horned cows have been made at the Vincennes Agricultural Institute by Baron Arnoldi, which tend to show that it both improves the quality and increases the quantity of milk, the latter from which is also of excellent, even delicious, flavor. Many practical farmers in the neighborhood have likewise made trial of the same food, and are unanimous in their favorable verdict. The milch cows have a "look greedy to the cake from the first day it was fed to them, and much uses an improvement in the quality of the milk was quickly noted. For draught oxen and fattening bullocks, also, it is equally suitable, especially for the latter, whose food it presents an unusual richness of flavor when this food, and it may be given in small quantities to horses with much advantage, mixed into a thick mass with chaff. In comparison with other feeding stuffs, this cake is very cheap, and it can be given in larger quantities than most other cakes without any ill effect. It is also particularly free from foreign matter, as there is no difficulty in gathering in the crop of the sunflower adventitious admixtures. It should be remarked, however, that experiments with this cake undertaken in Germany some few years ago gave far less satisfactory results than those reported in such favorable terms by Prof. Bergsund.—London Farmer.

AMERICAN CHEESE.—The extent to which American Cheese is being imported into Ayrshire and delivered at prices greatly under the cost of home products is causing anxiety to such a wealthy dairy farming district as Ayrshire. Many farmers, it appears, consider themselves in possession of the luck of the cheese-mite secret, last season, with the prospect of getting a good deal of it, during which the big fortunes may have been in the hand of creaking. The result is that quite a few of them have been compelled to abandon the making of cheese for the present. This, again, has had the effect of increasing the supply of butter and milk sent to the county seat monthly, and these commodities are selling at prices unknown during the past decade. Last week fresh butter of the best quality was quoted in the market of the county town at 8½d. per pound, or less than half the price for which it was sold at the corresponding date of last year. The reduction per gallon in the price of milk, resulting from the increased competition introduced by the suspension of the cheese manufacture, would seem to be equally marked.—For Glasgow and other large towns the supply is said at present to be in excess of the demand, and farmers are said to be at their wits' end in regard to the disposal of the milk. At Paisley, any one of the dairy carts containing the sets of milk to be seen in some parts of Ayrshire in charge of persons endeavoring to secure purchasers, but with no unfrequently are obliged to take the article home again and to be served out to pigs. Much of this season being reared in larger numbers than is ordinarily the case in Ayrshire. Should the state of affairs continue, the result can hardly fail to be serious, more particularly for such farmers, and these are said to be not few as have within the last year or two entered upon new leases at a considerable rise of rent.—Edinburgh Review.

AN EXPERIMENT WORTH IMITATING.—I have noticed for a number of years past, in this locality, that the bark on many young apple trees was split open in the spring, whether caused by the freezing of the sap, or from some other cause I will not attempt to say; but whatever the cause, when the warm weather came on, these trees would throw off their bark, in part clear around, on one side of the tree, and the tree was almost sure to die before the summer was over, or if not entirely killed, it became so badly diseased as to ruin its future growth. In a case which I treated, the bark was split open the whole length of the body of the tree on one side, and a portion of the way on the other side, so I was almost certain of its death; but thinking I would make one effort to save it, I cut through the bark, the entire length of the body and on the main limbs, and whether from this treatment or for some other cause, the growth of the tree was never checked, and to-day it is as thrifty a tree as there is on the farm. Now I believe this experiment worth a trial at least, as no harm can result from it in any case.—Rural New Yorker.

TENDER POULTRY.—The reasons poultry killed at home, though young, is not as tender as that bought at the market, is, that the former is generally not killed until warm, and when eaten is still rigid with death, while that bought at the poulterer's has been killed, at least, some hours, often eight days. Poultry ought to be killed several days before being eaten, dressed at once, and with a few bits of charcoal in it, hung in a cool place. If poultry are kept from food at least twelve hours before killing, the crop and intestines will be emptied, and any, especially the latter, cleansed. The chest will then be juicy, while the flesh will better keep without food or drink, though in good condition previously, too, fresh will be dry and tasteless and the fat soft. Never hang a undrawn fowl. The gas from the crop and intestines will taint the flesh, even though it is cooked but a short time.

SWELL CORN FOR FODDER.—A trial of several varieties of sweet corn for fodder for milch cows the past season, has resulted very satisfactorily. Many good farmers have an impression that sweet corn is poor fodder, being watery and innutritious, but the trial mentioned proves that to be a mistake. The sweet varieties contain a large amount of saccharine matter, which is highly nutritious food, and being as much a natural product as starch, is digested by the animal system. Some of the food consumed in great part for sugar during digestion, but will be found to produce just the most valuable product that which is given as sweet, viz., animal heat, the oil of the fat, the muscle, and the cells and considerable developed before the crop is cut. Sweet corn varieties planted in May and at intervals thereafter, cut in July and August, and the meadow fed to cows in August and September, will give an even run of feed. Philadelphia Press.

PUT UP YOUR SURPLUS BERRIES.—New York State is the natural fruit-growing locality for the people of the city, and the poorest berry of that State is worth a dozen of our Florida ones. We would like to see many of our friends have wanted to raise berry plants, they could find a ready market. They will drive away to sell the potatoes, as they know by actual test. While it hardly seems right to ask people to come from the country to buy, we think Editor Arthur's land in Chicago, writes: We have no private use for it, and as we are, I believe it would sell at private sale for more than it cost us. I believe that this plan is very popular in Boston, they being very fond of fruit, and would become a permanent institution.

Water made almost as thick as a culinary cream by the addition of rosin and manure, and poured on every part of the plant is the only effectual remedy I have ever found to prevent the ravages of the striped beetle. Should one application not be sufficient, it should be followed by another. The enemy becomes enamored of poisons in disgust. Such a liquid is a great stimulant to young plants.—Indiana Farmer.

THE ELECTRICAL ALARM COMPASS.—A short time since Mr. Henry A. Severn, of Heme' Hill, England, brought out an ingenious compass alarm for use on sailboard. It purposes to make the compass signal automatically, any considerable deviation of the ship from a desired course. Over the compass card are placed two index hands which can be adjusted to any angle; and these hands are so connected with an electric alarm that the moment the compass needle passes the limit of variation prescribed an alarm-bell will ring in the captain's office, and continue ringing until the ship's proper course is restored. In this way any departure from the ship's course as ordered by the officer in command, whether due to the steerman's inattention to duty or to a misunderstanding of the orders given, will be instantly made known. Of course, when the officer gives his orders to the steersman he sets the index hands to correspond, and after that he is relieved of the necessity of constant observations of the compass to be sure that his order is strictly carried out. This invention is just now receiving much attention in the scientific and other journals in England; and it is currently described as novel, as well as likely to be useful. Its novelty, however, says The Scientific American, is open to question. In principle, and apparently in mechanical construction, it is substantially identical with the electro-magnetic attachment to ship's compasses, patented in this country by Alfred Fremont, July 13, 1870. Why the invention has remained so long undeveloped is not known.

FIRE EXTINGUISHER.—Mr. Watson Smith discovered, several years ago, that crude ammonia water, or gas liquor, as it is called, has a charm in extinguishing a fire in a jar or cylinder. He now recommends that all sorts of cotton mills, and other works, various works, also, should have on their premises a stock of about 1,000 gallons of this gas liquor stored in a tank or cistern, placed upon brick-work, and at such an altitude as to give pressure enough for any need for service in case of fire. There is no reason why this cheap and efficient preventive of destructive conflagrations should not be generally adopted. It may be briefly summed, says Mr. Smith, how a jet of the liquor, thrown into a burning room, would at the space being so, succeed when the small is so powerful in a comparatively open place, and with such a return to any substance absorbing safety. It would seem, besides, that the extinguishing power of the liquor would be even further called forth by a smoke intensely hot, therefore, in all probability, the ammonia would be decomposed, and the generated hydrogen and nitrogen gases would help to swell the volume of non-supportive gas, displacing the air, and so choking out the combustion.

OXYGEN AS A CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA is stated to have proved an effectual cure by Louis Medicus. The case is reported by Dr. Schmidt and Zeitschrift. From 48 hours the first symptoms of rabies appeared 12 days after the injury. The patient was made to inhale three cubic feet of oxygen, and two hours afterwards he was in a state of perfect calm. Two days afterwards the symptoms disappeared, and another inhalation of oxygen was administered with the same success. This time the inhalation was continued for only five minutes. A slight relapse, which appeared after the disappearance of the grave symptoms, was treated for three weeks by the monobromide of camphor.

IT IS STATED that the success of borings for water in Franke County, Southern Austria, promises to render a large district, formerly almost destitute of water, highly valuable for agricultural or pastoral purposes. One artesian well, 430 miles north of Adelsberg, is 1,000 feet in depth, 370 feet of which is below the level of the sea, and yields 10,000 gallons of excellent water a day. Much of the arid and unhospitable region between the coast and the highlands which have been the scene in the interior of the experiment is expected to be reclaimed by a systematic boring of the springs supposed to exist beneath.

—M. Morel Fatio, who is continuing extensive explorations on the famous station of Cor fictis, Canton Vaud, in Switzerland, announces the discovery of a large canoe in an excellent state of preservation. It is formed of a single pine log 32 feet long and 2 feet wide, and though the stern is slightly damaged, the bow, which is carved and ornamented, is perfect. This interesting find will be placed in the museum of Lausanne, which now contains the richest collection of lacustrine relics in Europe.

GUTTA PERCHA CLOTH is now very much used for the laboratory. By its aid one can make a receptacle, and boiling of the carmine or any other pigment, a solution can be gained which when brushed on the cork and neck of a bottle, forms a liquid-tight cap impenetrable by air, chloroform, alcohol or acids, and can be taken off without difficulty.

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,
FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

THIS ELEGANT PREPARATION is absolutely free from all injurious ingredients, and is at once harmless and effectual for preserving the hair. It restores, with the freshness of youth, to faded or gray hair, its original color, with the gloss and softness of silk, and the vigor and flexibility which belong to healthy hair. It keeps the scalp cool and clear, prevents the hair falling off, and, where the glands are not decayed, produces a new growth, even when baldness, weakness, or other diseases have resulted from the use of other preparations. It contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil the whitest linen. It is the most reliable and lasting perfume for the toilet that can be used, and, as a dressing, is unsurpassed.

"LIES: BIG LIES"

Not so fast my friend; for if you would see the strong, healthy, blooming men, women, and children that have been raised from beds of sickness, suffering and almost death, by the use of Hop Bitters, you would say "Truth, glorious truth." See "Truths," in another column.—Adv.

BROWN BUCKWHEAT CAKES.—One quart water; one pint buckwheat flour; one teaspoonful salt; a tablespoonful of molasses and two teaspoonfuls Kellogg's Baking Powder. Stir briskly and bake immediately. The molasses makes them brown nicely.

Mr. Spurgeon says that Dr. Blaikie recently wrote him, "I had in my hands the other day one of your sermons, very yellow. It lay embedded in one of Dr. Livingstone's Journals—had probably been all over Africa—and had in Livingstone's neat hand the simple words, 'Very good!' Would you like it?" Of course he sent an earnest request for the yellow relic.

VASELINE

You may land the world over and all I will find
A need of the household which brings to the mind
The like of value, more plain to be seen
Than petroleum jelly, the famed Vaseline.

Has a cut or a pain, or a wound or a burn
From jar to too profuse the household shall turn
On the shelf should be found the first of all pain
And quiet shall reign in the merry old home again.

If our dearest and fairest are kissed by the sun
And the tell of his ills is too rough to be borne
Kind Vaseline comes as gladly be seen,
And the cheek takes on velvet it had not, I ween.

If the velvet it is risky the Great it is sure,
Take the jelly at once and the trouble is o'er,
Ignest read the circular, and from it glean
All the virtue and claim of the famed Vaseline.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER.

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventive for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENEDICT'S CAPSINE PORTER'S PLASTERS. They were used during the last season in New Orleans very successfully, the common method of doing them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS, and serve to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the circulation and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost perfect preventive. Ask your physicians about them. Benedict's Capsine Plasters are a sure preventive and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price, 25 cents.

"George, dear, don't you think it's rather extravagant of you to eat butter with that delicious jam?" "No, love; economical. Same piece of bread does for both."

MISCELLANEOUS.

TUTT'S PILLS

SYMPTOMS OF A
TORPID LIVER.

Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Pain in the Head, with dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder-blade, Fullness after eating, with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, Want of memory, Feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache, Generally prefer the night to day, Restlessness, with disturbed dreams, highly colored Urine. IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED, SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED. TUTT'S PILLS have especial virtue in such cases, one dose effects such a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.

CONSTIPATION.

A new remedy for Constipation. Dr. I. Guy Lewis, Felton, Ala., says: "I have used TUTT'S PILLS in my practice, and in every case they have given perfect satisfaction. They are the best remedy for Constipation I have ever used."

Rev. P. B. Osgood, New York, says: "I have used TUTT'S PILLS, and can say they are the best medicine I ever took for Torpid Liver and Constipation."

TESTIMONIALS, FROM WELL-KNOWN PERSONS.

From Mrs. General Sherman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 21, 1879.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very much pleased with the Piano you made for me. It is really a fine instrument in every respect, and is admired by all who have seen and heard it, for its fine tone, delicacy of touch and beauty of finish. Many good musicians and distinguished persons have called since it has been in our parlor, and all pronounce it a fine instrument. We ourselves are charmed with it. I shall most certainly recommend it to my friends who may wish to purchase.

I am, very truly and respectfully yours,
ELLEN B. E. SHERMAN,
2351 I Street.

St. James, December 27, 1873.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very happy to be able to rank your Pianos as one of the very best I ever had and saw. Its rich sound and brilliancy of tone required to perform the great pieces of modern and classical masters are equal to any Piano made in this country. Hoping that your Pianos will also stand our climate as well as any other manufactured in the North, I shall with much pleasure recommend them wherever I have an opportunity. Very respectfully yours,

ANTHONY WIMMER
Professor of Music, St. Mary's Jefferson College, St. James, La., (Convent, P. O.)

From the World Renowned Artist, Camilla Urso.

NEW YORK, May 27, 1879.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—After giving your Piano a fair trial I am happy to congratulate you upon the excellent improvements you have made. Your instruments possess rare merits, and it gives me much pleasure to recommend them to the public.

Yours truly, CAMILA URSO.

DISCOVERY by which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5; $1 to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

MOUNTAIN THOUGHTS.

BY EKOTA.

Yonder they stand, across the river's shining brim,
Those mountain lustres, we come so far to visit;
Height beyond heights rise to the blue distance dim,
Above the world, we pond'ring well of mystery.
Far into Time's weary throng on sounds of earth ever come,
To break the perfect quiet of their grand repose,
And human hearts, with reverential thoughts, crowd home,
No seek the mountain's rocky secrets to disclose.
Serenely pure, and clad in everlasting frost,
You hoary heights reach up and taste the fire of heaven,
Wearing the circling clouds, by golden beams embossed,
Like kingly robes, and crowned by all the stars of even.
Oh, lofty heights! Oh, white veiled city of snow,
Yet in the weary, burdened soul, bowed down by care,
To higher realms of thought, where purer forms dilate now,
And tired hearts your restful splendor may share.
No fail me with a longing to be free to soar,
And pass beyond your lofty domes of changeless hue,
Where we may rest, nor bend beneath our burden more,
But, like freed birds, sing of the cage from whence we flew!
There is a Land—of fairer heights and purer airs than those are seen,
Whose everlasting hills lift up their heads in calm,
Where from the soul's lone Pisgah-top we catch the sheen,
And faith looks over, piercing the long distance through,
There is a Land, and there when we its heights have reached,
Resting our weary souls, our songs, while peak to peak shall stand,
And, looking back, rejoice o'er all that once hath reached,
But brought us on our journey to the heavenly Land.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 23.—The Methodist Conference in session at San Jose, Cal., voted to-day to say in a note to Bishop Haven, in Minnie and address. Later in the day Grant held a reception at the City Hall and after words received the veterans, Federal and Confederate.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26.—Returns to the department of agriculture show a short cotton crop in the yield of which in New England, but the Middle and South Atlantic States show a decided improvement. The Atlantic slope generally enjoyed a favorable condition of growth.

The improved condition of Alabama and Mississippi was more than counteracted by the heavy decline in Texas, where slugs destroyed two-thirds average. Present indications point to an increase over 1878 in all the Southern States except Texas. The condition of sorghum is good.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 25.—A slight shock of an earthquake was felt here at 1.30 to-night. Its course was from northwest to southeast.

BOSTON, Sept. 26.—Dispatches from various places in this State and other parts of New England report heavy and destructive frosts this morning, with considerable damage to fruit and vegetation.

GREENVILLE, Miss., Sept. 26.—The fever at Concordia is exhausting itself for want of material; only one death in three days and no new cases. The health in that old Eden, an old waste man. All the sick doing well.

DEARWOOD, Sept. 26.—A fire this morning broke out in a bakery on Sherman street, spread rapidly and almost destroyed the business portion of the city. Three-fifths are left houseless and have destitute condition; the fire is still burning. The loss is estimated at from one and a half to two million dollars.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 26.—A special from Dallas, Texas, to the Republican, says: News reached that place last night that a party of young men from Dallas and Fort Worth, while hunting in Pan-Handle country, in that State, were attacked by Indians September 11, and seven of their number killed after a fight of two days.

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 27.—The local Board of Health yesterday passed an order establishing quarantine line ten miles from the city against everything coming from Memphis.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27.—Dispatches from various points in Kansas represent that President Hayes' progress through that State is marked by a continued ovation.

Gen. Grant is still having honors heaped upon him in California. Denis Kearney again sent his card up to him to-day, but the General again refused to see him.

GREENVILLE, Sept. 29.—R. M. Wilson, sheriff of Bolivar county, was stricken with the fever at Concordia on Saturday, the 27th inst. No deaths since last report.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 29.—At a meeting of the Howard Association, held to-night, the secretary submitted a report showing that their daily expenses now aggregate about $600. The funds on hand will, it is estimated, last fifteen days, provided sickness does not continue to spread in the country adjacent to Memphis.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 29.—Nine new cases, four white, five colored, were reported to-day. Hugo London was the only white reported this afternoon. No additional deaths have occurred. Mrs. Caroline Glenn, Wash. Pless, John Merrens and James Rice were supplied with nurses to-day by the Howards. Their cases have not yet been reported to the Board of Health.

Donations to the Howards to-day aggregated $1192 50.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—The grape crop of France is short and of bad quality.

VIENNA, Sept. 23.—Andrassy met Bismarck at the railway station and accompanied him to his hotel. A crowd had begun assembling there some hours awaiting the arrival of the German Chancellor, who was received with cheers.

The Austrian press gives Bismarck a hearty welcome, not only as the great statesman, but as a warm friend of Austria. German newspapers hail the visit as a sure guarantee of European peace.

MADRID, Sept. 24.—Cortes will reopen on the 3d of November.

The government has received a memorial from Cuban slaveholders asking for a suspension of the slavery question. The memorial states that unless steps are speedily taken by the authorities planters must themselves set the slaves free to prevent their property being ruined. The Government replies, expressing the hope that plantation people will act in conformity with the Captain General and Cuban army in a spirit of patriotism.

MONTREAL, Sept. 25.—Two inches of snow fell at Mount Lords, Quebec, to-day.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—The New Paris correspondent learns that Bismarck has submitted a plan to the Emperor of Austria and Alfonso for a general disarmament.

Stanley started on the 30th from Sierra Leone for the Congo River.

The Board of Trade is suspended for six months the certificate of the steamer Byrsil, which recently sank ashore.

LONDON, Sept. 26.—Admiral Pasha had a battle with the general commanding the Abyssinians, which resulted in the withdrawal of the Abyssinian troops from the Egyptian frontier.

CAIRO, Sept. 26.—The Official Moniteur confirms the report of General Gordon Pasha's mission to the King of Abyssinia, and states that he was successful with the cession of part of the territory in dispute. His object is simply to declare the desire of Egypt to live in peace.

HAVANA, Sept. 24.—The Government is receiving testimony of the loyal adhesion of various municipalities and political parties from all parts of the island. The expressions from Puerto Principe are especially enthusiastic. Confidence is daily increasing, the pendency of the two questions of the independent party having greatly to this result. With the exception of the province of Santiago de Cuba, all is quiet.

LONDON, Sept. 26.—A dispatch, dated Cape Town, September 9, says: King Cetewayo left Port Dunford on the 4th, and his arrival here is hourly expected. Quarters have been prepared for him at the fort. All the remaining Usutus chiefs in Zululand have surrendered to the British authorities. Sir Garnet Wolsey arrived at Utrecht, Transvaal, on the 3d.

LONDON, Sept. 26.—A Brussels dispatch to the Pall Mall Gazette says: The Belgian bishops have issued the clergy to refuse absolution to the parents of all children frequenting the public schools, and to the lecturers, and to the pupils of the normal schools.

SIMLA, Sept. 28.—The Viceroy sent the following dispatch to London to-day: U. B. Baker received a letter from the Afghan commander-in-chief, yesterday, at Kuzi, asking whether he would receive him and the Ameer's heir-apparent, Yacoub. Gen. Baker replied in the affirmative. An hour later a message came from Ameer Yakoub Khan himself asking Gen. Baker to receive him.

Gen. Baker responded, saying that he would meet the Ameer's son and then came.

The Ameer, his son and brother-in-law and Gen. Donald Stuart, who was reported killed during the Cabul outbreak, with suite, forty-five persons, an escort of two hundred men, arrived at Kushi on the same day.

Cabul is in a state of anarchy, and the gates of the city are closed.

HAVANA, Sept. 29.—There were twenty-six deaths from yellow fever during last week. The heavy decrease is owing to rooms having been set on fire.

Troops have also been disinfected, the greater part of the mortality has been.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

BROWN'S, ALA., Sept. 15.—We have just closed a protracted meeting at this place, in which there were quite a number of conversions, and six accessions to the church. A deep interest was manifested, and great seriousness pervaded the whole community.

JOS. A. BROWN.

SCOTTSVILLE, ALA., Sept. 16.—Bro. Green, of the Grove Hill circuit, and myself recently closed a meeting at Amity, on this work, resulting in fourteen accessions to the church, and the membership greatly revived. We are building a new church, which will soon be completed. Both corn and cotton crops are short; perhaps three-fourths of a corn and about one-half cotton crop. Health of the country is very good.

R. H. GAYLE.

JONES' VALLEY CIRCUIT, ALA., Sept. 17.—The Birmingham District School, in this circuit, under Prof. Henry, is prosperous. Rev. J. G. Gurley, P. E., has done a noble year's work. Have had some gracious revivals. James A. Bargin, a good man and steward, died recently. We shall miss him greatly. We are now closing up the third, and I suspect the last, year on this work. I shall leave it with regret. The next pastor will find it all right.

W. C. M'COY.

RAMER, ALA., Sept. 18.—Rocky Mount circuit, Union Springs district, Alabama Conference. This work lies in Montgomery, Pike and Crenshaw counties. The first thing done was to buy a parsonage, which has been done, and is being rapidly paid for. We are now in the midst of some gracious revivals. The camp meeting at Hill's Chapel was a grand success. We will begin a meeting at this place (Athens) to-morrow night. Crops very much cut off.

J. L. SKIPPER.

ENON, ALA., Sept. 19.—I am on Loachapoka circuit, Montgomery district. I have a large circuit. Received twenty-one members. It is supposed that rust and caterpillars will cut off half of the cotton crop on this circuit, but we hope to bring up all our assessments.

D. C. COOK, P. C.

VIENNA CIRCUIT, ALA., Sept. 19.—I closed my six protracted meeting last night with good results. In all there has been sixty-one conversions and forty-two have joined the church. I have baptized twenty-seven adults and six infants. Corn will be plenty in this county. Cotton is not so good.

JOHN H. TUCKER.

PUSHMATAHA, ALA., Sept. 20.—I have held four protracted meetings on Gaston circuit since July. These meetings were protracted from four to seven days. Had no ministerial help, except in one of them, in which I was assisted efficiently by Bro. W. H. Wild. They were regarded as successful meetings, as the acreage of the Lord's plantation was increased and brought up to a higher state of cultivation.

ALEX. HOOD.

MAYSVILLE, ALA., Sept. 23.—Have held two protracted meetings; one more in short, gracious revival. At one appointment, twenty-six conversions and twenty-one accessions; at the other, twelve conversions and seven accessions. More to join. Never before witnessed such displays of the gospel power, especially among the married, and advanced in life. This charge has been steadily improving all the year; have one house extended another, and purchased a fine organ for this place. Good prayer meetings, fine Sunday-schools. Have paid for missionary purposes subscribed.

JOHN H. SELSOR.

BIRMINGHAM DIST., ALA., Sept. 21.—Have just closed the third round of quarterly meetings. Have quite a revival influence in most of the charges. The preachers are actively engaged in their work, and with a large measure of success. Truly it has been a prosperous year with us. We have had all over the district good health, except in one fourth of this district—good seasons, and good crops, and everything we need, in order to a good living, is plentiful, except money; that is scarce. Most of the preachers will, we think, be paid in full.

J. O. GURLEY.

ATHENS, ALA., Sept. 21.—The corn crop within the limits of this pastoral charge is very good. The cotton crop is cut short by excessive rains in July and August, and afterward by the worms. Considerable sickness at present. The pastor has been quite sick, over a week. Mrs. Shores confined to bed most of the time.

J. W. SHORES.

ALPOMAS, ALA., Sept. 24.—I have just returned from a visit to Zion Church, Crawford circuit. We had a good meeting. After an address, on the importance of the Woman's Missionary Society, we had an addition of seventeen members. There were several conversions. Bro. Jere Williams is the preacher in charge, good man. They have erected a beautiful monument over their former pastor, Bro. Charles Hart, representing the sacred desk with an open Bible on it. The congregation gave me a beautiful Oxford Bible. Never had a more pleasant time. Home with Bro. William Rosebud.

W. H. RIVERS, Pastor.

FLORENCE, ALA., Sept. 21.—In the past six weeks we have had in the bounds of the Florence district about one hundred and twenty-five conversions and one hundred additions to our beloved church. Finances are low, but I think improving. One parsonage built this year, and another on the way; will be finished by the session of our Annual Conference at Talladega, November 26. Please meet us there; we want to see you.

H. A. TIMMONS, P. E.

LOACHAPOKA, ALA., Sept. 25.—While the brimful of Sougahatchie is saving the corn crops badly injured, first by drought and then by floods; it is short. Cotton has suffered from shedding and rust, and is shorter. It will soon be out and in market. Quarterage is a plant ill adapted to this soil. The entire field has produced only $25 50 in nine months. Our meetings are for the most part cold and fruitless. We have received but five into the church, and lost from various causes, about twenty. The tendency is toward Congregationalism.

P. H. DAVIS.

GEORGIANA, ALA., Sept. 25.—Our camp meeting at Asbury camp ground has just closed. There were over sixty conversions. Many of God's people were blessed, and strengthened in the faith. The health of the country is excellent. Crops are short. The farmers are rapidly gathering and carrying their cotton to market; the price is on the wane. The weather is mild and fine.

MORGAN SMILEY.

PUSHMATAHA, ALA., Sept. 26.—The meeting at Smith camp ground, Gaston circuit, closed on the third instant. This was one of the best meetings held at this place. There were twenty-seven conversions and fourteen additions to the church. The Choctaw camp meeting, Butler circuit, Rev. W. H. Wild, P. C., came off on the fifth instant. Between twenty-five and thirty professed religion, and eleven joined the church.

ALEX. HOOD.

GREENVILLE, ALA., Sept. 26.—The Asbury camp meeting has just closed. There were sixty-five conversions. The sacramental service on Monday night was one of the best I ever witnessed. The main body of the new arbor was ready for the meeting. It will be completed in time for the meeting next year. This camp ground is well located. We are having good meetings all over the Pensacola district.

J. M. HOLAND.

MISSISSIPPI.

DEKALB CIRCUIT, MISS., Sept. 18.—We have just closed a meeting in the town of Wahalak, a station on the Mobile and Ohio railroad. We organized a church, received twenty-seven members. The preacher-in-charge broke down, and had to quit in the midst of success. We have had up to date about one hundred conversions, seventy-five accessions.

A. G. NICHOLSON.

MARSHALL COUNTY, MISS., Sept. 18.—We are having warm days and cool nights. The corn crop is good. The cotton has been injured by the August drought and cold nights. The health of our section is very good, though we are within fifty miles of Memphis, where the yellow fever is raging. It has not spread, except twenty miles east on the M. and C. railroad. Our preachers are all in work on this district, and we are having many revivals and hundreds of conversions. Not much excitement here about politics. Peace and quiet reigns everywhere.

A. W. BONNOLL, P. C.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., Sept. 22.—We have received fifty-two into the church on the Bayou Pierre circuit, and baptized forty-five children up to date. Our meeting at Zion was the first. We held this meeting from the third Sunday in July to the fourth Sunday. The Spirit was present in saving power. Yesterday was the regular day. Dinner was on the ground in the afternoon to have a layman's service. The work goes on. Sunday-school, prayer meetings, and there is a union of work among brethren.

N. B. YOUNG.

VERONA, MISS., Sept. 23.—Crops good. Health of the country fine. Weather beautiful, but too cool for season. Quite a stir over political affairs. Good meetings in all the country churches; a deep interest in the young, but no general move. Tupelo and Verona are alive, strong and full of hope. Finances well up to date. Expect to meet every demand. Preachers are well, busy and full of faith and zeal. Cotton is pouring into market rapidly. We must have Mississippi for Gail.

H. G. PORTER.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., Sept. 23.—Our new church in Wesson has just been painted a stone color without and a cream color within. The money to do the work, over $600, was raised by the ladies, who have been indefatigable in their labors. May the spirit and temple exceed in glory. At Brookhaven there were six applications for members by the last week.

W. C. LEWIS.

FRENCH CAMP, MISS., Sept. 23.—The Liberty camp meeting commenced September 12 and closed on the eighteenth. The Lord was with us in convicting and converting power. There were thirty-five conversions and forty-four accessions to the church. Congregations large and attentive. Revs. K. A. Jones, T. A. S. Adams, A. P. Sage, G. W. Buchanan, J. T. Newsom, D. C. Foust and J. G. Carlisle did some of their best preaching. A revival interest all around the work.

W. S. HAMILTON.

LOUISIANA.

NATCHITOCHES CIRCUIT, LA., Sept. 18.—The revival work is still progressing. Sixty-five persons received into the church to date. The Baptists also are having success. Awakening times in this country. Health is now tolerably good. Corn and cane are short. Cotton and potatoes better. The August storm did not do us much harm.

THOMPSON BOOKER.

INDIAN VILLAGE, LA., Sept. 19.—I have been holding a series of protracted meetings. In all of them a gracious influence has prevailed, and the church has been quickened into more vigorous life. Accessions have not been numerous, but of a stable character. Health good. Weather fine. Drain crop short. Cotton below an average. Finances low.

E. T. WISH.

KEACHIE, LA., Sept. 22.—Bethel camp meeting, on DeSoto circuit, 18 over. A glorious meeting. It was so many. Twenty-one accessions, and from thirty-five to forty conversions. Five or six gave us their hands, agreeing to hold family prayers, and some two or three young men agreed to pray in public when called on. Bethel is an old camp ground. Old members say they never had a better meeting. Our dedication comes off next Sabbath; sermon by James A. Parker.

GEO. W. GIVERMAN.

French Education Bill.

The French Education Bill is still a prominent subject of discussion. The Left party have, through their champions, shown to say, excited a feeling of sympathy even in England, by using the columns of the leading Reviews to affect the public mind. In this country many of the poorly informed journals, both secular and religious, have undertaken, on their own account, to deprecate the attack on the liberties of the Jesuits, because they are excluded from the further control of the youth of France.

It is quite likely that many of those who condemn the bill have never seen it. The text of it is as follows:

ART. I. The examinations and practical competitions which determine the conferring of degrees can only be gone through before the establishments of higher education belonging to the State.

ART. II. The pupils of public and private establishments for higher education are all subjected to the same rules of study, especially as regards the conditions of age, degree, matriculation, practical labors, attendance in the hospitals and laboratories, the compulsory delays between each examination, and the fees to be paid to the public treasury.

ART. III.—The pupils of private establishments for higher education matriculate in the State faculties at dates fixed by the rules.

Matriculation is gratis for the pupils of the State and for free pupils.

The Superior Council of Public Instruction will, after hearing the Minister of Finance, decide on the tariff of the new examination fees.

ART. IV.—Private establishments for higher education cannot assume the title of Faculty or University.

The professor that they can judge it to grant to their pupils cannot bear the designation of Bachelor's degree, Licentiate's degree, or Doctor's degree.

ART. V.—The titles of degree of Fellow, Doctor, Master of Arts, Bachelor of Arts, etc., can only be granted to persons who have obtained them after competition for regular examination before the faculties of the State.

ART. VI. The opening of courses of lectures is subject, without any other restriction, to the rules prescribed by Article 3 of the law of the twelfth of July, 1875.

ART. VII. No person belonging to an unauthorized religious community is allowed to govern a public or private educational establishment of whatsoever order, or to give instruction therein.

ART. VIII. No private establishment for education, no association formed for the purpose of instruction can be recognized as being of public utility, except in virtue of a law.

ART. IX. Every infringement of the prescriptions of Articles 1, 2 and 7 of the present law will be punished by a fine of ten to 1,000 francs, and repetition of the infringement by a fine of 1,000 to 5,000 francs.

As regards Article 7, the infringement will entail the shutting up of the establishment.

ART. X. All repeals the provisions of laws, decrees, ordinances, and rules contrary to the present law, and especially the last paragraph but one of Article 2, and Articles 11, 12, 13 and 22 of the law of the twelfth of July, 1875.

It will be seen that the Roman clergy, as a whole, are not exploited by the provisions of the bill. It is not even the Roman teachers who are at present. It simply excludes members of religious communities unauthorized by law. In the decrees existing in France, if I recollect, to-day. Their original establishment there was in a time of law. They have been repeatedly excluded by law, and they have expelled themselves since the revolution in defiance of law. After a thorough examination of their history, constitution and constitutions, governments declare that their influence is prejudicial to public morality and public safety. A similar conclusion was reached in most Roman States in Europe. The question is one of self-protection. It is designed in the interest of good morals and public safety. The large vote in favor of the bill shows how thoroughly it represents the public sentiment. Although the election of October, 1877, in which the present deputies were chosen, was powerfully influenced by the priestly party, under Marshal McMahon, 307 deputies chosen at that time voted for the bill, and only 150 voted against it. There can be little doubt, therefore, that the bill will stand unrepealed.

Another feature of the bill is the method of gradation and general control. Government assumes control of the whole system. Government requires submission of all schools to the government check. Government confers the degrees, and withdraws the family of conferring them from every one else. By limiting a value is given to literary degrees which they could not otherwise possess; and he present shifting uncertain meaning attached to them is removed. Under such a system they will come to express something definite, and both government and the community be benefited.

It is principally the higher education which is affected. It indicates great progress, and is no doubt the best system that has ever been adopted by France.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

Sunday-School Conferences.

I would respectfully call the attention of the members of the Annual Conferences, clerical and lay, and especially the Sunday-school secretaries, to the expediency of organizing in every Conference a Sunday-School Conference. The reasons for this suggestion may be stated as follows:

1. Superintendents and teachers who realize the magnitude and difficulty of their work feel the necessity for more thorough preparation. This feeling has given rise to conventions, institutes, normal classes, etc. These have done much good, but they cannot and do not fully meet the wants of our people. Our Sunday-school interests are as distinctively and as emphatically denominational as any other part of our work and we cannot, therefore, neglect to keep them under the special supervision of the church.

2. A Sunday-School Conference affords opportunity for the discussion of topics connected with methods of teaching, conducting schools, etc. These discussions in Conference take a specific and practical form, having direct reference to our own schools. They also furnish an opportunity for the Sunday-school workers within the bounds of a Conference to become acquainted with one another, and to interchange views. The Sunday-school secretaries of the Conferences find them a great assistance in their work, in organizing district Sunday-school Conferences, institutes, normal classes, and in promoting the general interests of the cause.

In order to facilitate the organization of such Conferences, where the brethren choose to inaugurate it, we have prepared an outline plan for same, which the book agent has published in a neat pamphlet of thirty-two pages, containing twenty-six pieces of Sunday-school music, and eight hymns without music. These pamphlets are furnished to the Annual Conferences free. To District Conferences, circuits or schools they will be furnished at forty cents a dozen, postage prepaid; and where ten dozen or more are ordered, the names of speakers will be printed in the programme without charge.

Now, brethren, I have ventured to submit the foregoing suggestions to your good judgment after consultation with many of our leading Sunday-school men. I know your deep interest in the work, and believe you will heartily cooperate with any plan which promises to increase the working efficiency of our Sunday-school methods.

I am your fellow laborer,

W. H. D. CUNNINGHAM,
Sunday-School Editor.

An Honor to Methodist Scholarship.

Methodism was born in a university. Her founders were early advocates of college degrees, and were scholars of large attainments. Though we have often been taunted with having an ignorant ministry, in no denomination has there been men of superior culture. Among the great scholars Dr. Adam Clark yet stands the peer of any. More popular and fresher expositions of Scripture have since been given, but none to rank him in Oriental scholarship and general illustrative attainments. An incident which confirms this remark has recently been published in the New York Advocate by the Rev. Marcus D. Hoeff. In an interesting letter, describing many visits in the old study of Dr. Clark, where much of his literary work was done, he says:

"By the way, I doubt if Methodists generally know how highly the British government was compelled to compliment his learning. Oxford and Cambridge had been asked in vain to name one who could fluently read the old Norman French of certain State papers, when the Parliamentary Committee was sent to a Methodist preacher. The success of his six months' work on these documents secured to him a privilege with only [illegible] or two others. To possession of a private key to the British Museum library, and the liberty of coming and going day or night."

This was the victory of persistent effort. When a boy Adam Clark was thought to be incorrigibly stupid. But the basis of his school-days upon his dullness fired his ambition, and made him a student of unwearied diligence. He received the degrees of M. A. and LL. D. from the University of Aberdeen. His literary reputation has filled the world, and millions have been the beneficiaries of his tireless toil and wonderful researches. As I had not seen the above incident in print before I thought it worth a wider circulation in our branch of the Methodist family.

Mississippi Conference Notice.

MR. EDITOR:—The list of the Committees of Examination for the next four years was omitted in the published minutes of the last session of the Mississippi Conference through mistake. Several brethren interested have asked me to have the omission noted in the Advocate. Will you, therefore, oblige all concerned by publishing the list sent herewith? By resolution of Conference the committees and other officials are required to be at the seat of the Conference on Monday before the opening.

JACKSON, TENN., Sept. 24, 1879.

EXAMINING COMMITTEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

For admission on trial, R. Jones, W. B. Lewis, J. W. McLaurin; first year's course, J. W. Atkinson, J. M. Weems, R. S. Woodward; second year, C. G. Andrews, C. H. Galloway, R. J. Jones; third year, T. W. Boyd, W. H. Lamp, P. S. West; fourth year, W. L. Saunders, E. D. Noteworthy, W. E. Ballard.

Here we are at Asbury again, and no less a privilege than before. Every thing on the table and seats as well. At the meeting of the British Association this month Dr. E. B. Tylor, in his opening address, gladdened a period of one hundred years in many of the sciences, and after comparisons in various fields, and their applications he held we were more before the breeze and iron age. Professor Huxley, after traversing other portions of the subject, said, he wished to be autobiographical to a necessary emblem. The question is the exact time to be attached to a flint remains in the Somme valley, where stone implements have been found, could not be settled satisfactorily. Few persons except men of science were aware that there had been enormous changes during the last 200 years in the earth of Europe. The river gravels of Ireland had been continually active, great floods of lava had been poured forth, and the coast had been remarkably changed. Similar causes might have produced enormous changes in the Valley of the Somme, and therefore any arguments based as to the time of the appearances in the valley were not to be trusted."

Enormous changes during the last 500 years. And what can Prof. Huxley's figures of ages then had it been so almost [illegible] years to be realized? Those scientific views remains of what is called the Stone Age have figured largely in the arguments for the human history of tens of thousands of years, and among the evidences of the Antediluvian men. The Christian men who have ventured to suggest that not quite so much was made of the alleged proofs have been sneered down by the scientists, and in some of our more solemn friends are scandalized and vigorous. Now a leader among these gentlemen tells us that the ages are unsettled on a basis on an extremely questionable authority.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE ABIDING FRIEND.

"Lo, I am with you always."

Still year by year our friends depart
To distant worlds or distant lands,
Leaving us with an aching heart
Or hands that long to touch their hands;
For Time and Space hold all things fast,
And Death is with us to the last.

New love may blossom in our path,
Like many a daisy, blushing deep
For the hid treasure that it hath—
With eyes that fain would feign to sleep:
But new love still the old endears,
That grew for us in vanished years.

New friends about our way we meet,
New voices call our presence blest;
But never more down the dull street
Will come the face we love the best.
I do not weep—I only say,
Life's morning time has gone away.

Even while I say it, lo! there stands
One Friend beside me, who will stay.
He takes my hand in His strong hands,
Saying: "I will not go away."
And He has loved me all my life,
Through every joy and care and strife.

His face I have not looked on yet,
For I am mortal, He divine;
But still I know, nor can forget,
That He has given His life for mine.
All distant friends through Him are near,
All dearest ones through Him more dear.

Keeping the Sabbath.

MR. EDITOR: With your permission, I will give a few of the many instances that have occurred in my own little history, to exemplify the fallacy that too often misleads even well-meaning people on the Sabbath.

Once a party of several nice families were arranging for a journey of four or five days' travel over land, and the following Monday morning was proposed as the day for starting; but I objected, that it would necessitate preparations on the Sabbath, and suggested Tuesday morning. But all the balance (being members of the church too) insisted that we must start on Monday, and contended that the necessary preparations would be allowable, under the circumstances. Now the premise assumed that we ought to start on Monday was false, and the inevitable conclusion that the necessary preparations would be excusable, was erroneous, as the sequel proved. For I, rather than appear Pharisaical or obstinate, yielded reluctantly, and desecrated the Sabbath by having my vehicles, harness, and everything put in readiness for Monday; but when the day arrived I was the only one that was ready, and we didn't get off until Tuesday. So the devil insidiously entrapped all of us—me in one snare, and the balance in another. And I verily believe that many a moral coward is routed from his integrity right where I capitulated. Instead of implicitly, unconditionally, determinedly, and uncompromisingly, following the dictates of conscience, he hesitates and wonders what others will think of him for doing this, or not doing that, and where he falters he falls.

I was once connected, in mercantile business, with a very clever gentleman, who is now a member of the Louisiana Conference, and on one occasion, our stock being exhausted of several articles, for which we were having frequent calls, an opportunity seemingly too favorable to be rejected, of procuring them, soon presented itself one bright Sunday morning. My partner (who, in justice to him, I must state here, was not then a member of the church) suggested that we order the goods by that vessel; but I objected on account of the day. But, falling back upon that venerable "ox in the ditch," which has been so often wrested from legitimate repose, and made to do hard service for the devil for more than a thousand years, he made out the order, and sent it off that morning by the schooner; and, no doubt, "that old man of sin" made him believe that "the circumstances justified the deed." But that night I was called up the coast to see the manager on a large plantation, who was very sick, and there I dropped my anchor alongside of the same schooner, which laid there all day Monday, and afforded me ample time to make out a more complete and satisfactory order.

Some two years ago I had some pea vines dragged, by means of a heavy harrow, into small heaps, which I had intended to leave out to cure until Monday, but Sunday morning, rain being imminent, my young man (a clever Creole Catholic) asked me if he must house them as they were hard by the barn. I frankly told him I was in a quandary. We both agreed that it would be a pity to loose the vines; and yet we both felt scruples about doing work on the Sabbath day. And so we were caught on the center. We hesitated until the rain began to fall, and then, deciding, hurried in all we could before the hay became too wet. But what was left out was not damaged as much as we had apprehended, while that which we garnered "turned to ashes," molded literally into dust.

During the drouth this summer our cistern became without water. On one Sunday the clouds were coming over to give us rain, but the gutters were not in proper order (just as is the case with our hearts too often, "when the times of refreshing come from the presence of the Lord,") and, although I doubted seriously the propriety of departing from the letter of the law of the Sabbath, I hitched up the same time-honored "ox," and adjusted the gutters, which required but very little work, it is true. But all the reward I got for my Sunday work was only a little dirty water, for only enough of rain fell to wash off the roof of the house that day, while amply enough fell during the week to have filled the cistern with pure water, and run it over, without the dirty stuff I had carefully worked for on the Sabbath. But I suppose dirty water is about as good commodity as the devil generally pays for the bad work he has done. If he should chance to pay in something apparently better, it always turns out, sooner or later, to be a cheat—the promised gain turns to loss, the pleasure to pain, the joy to grief. "The wages of sin is death."

I might relate many other instances to the same point, but we have enough to illustrate the claims of the Sabbath to strict observance. Whenever there is even the shadow of a doubt as to the propriety of departing from the letter of the law, the benefit of the doubt should always be given to the law: "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." But the simply "not doing any work on the seventh day" is not "keeping the Sabbath day holy." We should be as active, earnest and zealous in discharging the duties incumbent upon us on the Sabbath as we are diligent and energetic and persevering in our business during the week. The command is twofold: We are to "labor six days, and do all our work;" and we are to "rest on the seventh" from our daily labors, and "keep it holy." How many people violate one or the other, or both commandments! Some work, work every day, and some don't work at all. Idleness on the "seventh day," as well as during the "six days," is sinful, and the former will be attended with spiritual poverty, just as the latter will be, with pecuniary loss. And poverty in either case is miserable, in proportion to the idleness.

D. W. FOSTER.

"Our Little Folks."

The religious culture of children is a subject whose importance and magnitude do not yet seem to be measured by the conceptions of the Christian world.

The error of the disciples, who would have driven the lambs from the presence of the Good Shepherd, repeats itself in the conduct of many in the church to-day. They would have us believe that religion is not designed for our little folks, that it is a kind of "toga virilis" a sort of manly garment, not to be worn until they come to riper years; they would have us believe that very small children are old enough to be great sinners, but too young to be the disciples of Jesus; that they can disobey God, but cannot trust Him; that they have suffered the blight of a fallen nature, but have received none of the saving virtue of the blood of Christ.

The duty of attending to the religious culture of children assumes a weighty import, and gathers about it an intensity of interest, when we consider the spiritual state of infants, and the design of their religious training.

Infant children are already subject of the kingdom of heaven, and the design of all our culture in the family and in the Sunday-school should be to keep them ever in this kingdom. They have, it is true, fallen beneath the curse, but, coetaneously with their fall, they have been raised up by the arms of receiving mercy, and placed on the platform of redemption. Here, indeed, is a wonderful paradox! The fall of the infant under the curse, by the first Adam, and its recovery by the intervention of the second Adam, take place at one and the same time. In the order of thinking, it first suffers the effects of the fall, but in the order of time there is no difference; as soon as sin enters, working death, so soon, also, grace enters, working life. Hence every infant comes into being a fallen creature, and yet a creature saved by preventing grace. The virtue of atonement neutralizes the virus of inherent sin, removes its taint and its stain, and the infant, without believing, is justified and saved. It is not saved by "natural goodness," nor by any inherent purity, but by the grace of God applied through the redemptive scheme.

"All human beings dying in an infant state are regenerated by the grace of God, and saved in heaven." So teach our standards. But what of human beings living in an infant state? Without clearly defined opinion, or distinct utterance on a point so vital, we are left to beat about in the fog, or drift into endless controversy. May we not believe that all human beings living in an infant state are regenerated by the same grace that regenerates such as die in an infant state?

Accepting the above as a true statement of the moral condition of infants, we harmonize the doctrine of total depravity with the idea of infant regeneration.

The little child, as Dr. Guthrie suggests, is representative of the kingdom of heaven. For, says he, when Christ would present a pattern of the true disciple, He left Job and Abraham to the slumber of the tomb, left the angels to the ministry of heaven, but called a little, blushing boy from his mother's side, and, placing him in the midst of the assembly, taught that all must become as that little boy in order to enter into the kingdom of heaven. Such, then, is the spiritual state of infants; they are even now saved by virtue of the atonement. Christ has laid His hands upon them, and claims them as a part of His inheritance.

Now, shall we wait for them to wander away and become great sinners before trying to establish them as believers? Is it necessary that they should first tumble off the platform of redemption, so that they may be placed back more securely upon it; that they must fall into actual sin before they can believe and be converted? Nay, it is not necessary that they should fall away from Christ, and become great sinners, before they can believe on Him, be regenerate, and be born again. They are already within Christ's kingdom, and our prayerful, patient and tireless efforts should be so directed as to induce them to look with the first dawning light of intellect to the cross, and to believe on Christ.

The little child readily learns to believe in Christ, the Son of God, as its Saviour. Before, while in the infant state, it was saved without faith, but now, crossing the line of accountability, and looking to Jesus, it is saved by the exercise of an intelligent faith. We believe that where parents and teachers are faithful to their trust children become, in most instances, intelligent Christians at a very early age. Yes, we cherish the belief that there are thousands of child-believers, some of them not more than three or four years old, in godly households, in the Sunday-school, and under the influence of the church all over Christendom. O how many little hearts throb with love to God! How many lisping tongues are ready to speak His praise! What an army of followers has Jesus in these little ones! And yet they are ignored and unrecognized as believers by the church. Our little children, even though imperfect efforts, are led to the very feet of the Saviour. They trust in God. They are converted, and we perceive it not, because skeptical of such result. The fruit matures, ripens, and is lost, while it should have been gathered for the Master's use.

Let the church awake to the full import of her mission to the little children. Recognizing them as a part of God's heritage, let us labor to bring about their acceptance of Christ by the time they are capable of actual transgression, and thus keep them ever within the kingdom. And if they have already begun to stray from the Great Shepherd, let us go forth with loving hearts and gentle hands to win them back to His fold again.

Bible Work.

MR. EDITOR: The Southwestern Bible Society is, and has been for some time, besides operations in other portions of her territory, engaged in canvassing the parishes in lower Louisiana, contiguous to New Orleans. Miss J. P. Moore, assisted by helpers, reports having visited all the families in St. Bernard, St. Charles, Jefferson, Ascension, Assumption, a portion of St. James, St. John the Baptist, Terrebonne and Iberville, and all of Orleans outside of the city. There are 2,503 white families, 1,553, or 62 per cent. of which she found totally destitute of any portion of Scripture; 14,164 colored families, 9,040, or over 66 per cent. of which were destitute. She has supplied 265 white, 3,084 colored families, and 175 individuals.

There has been distributed in this canvass $929 11 worth of Bibles and Testaments, $180 35 of which has been donated to the poor, $724 54 has been paid for colporting and expenses, leaving only $180 20 returned to Depository, and sent on to the Parent Society, which has furnished the books for this work.

Our object in publishing these facts and figures is to direct the attention of the members of the Society, the churches, and the benevolently disposed, to our work. The above are specimens of the destitution in portions of our territory, and of the work we are performing. We need money to carry on these operations. The Parent Society generously proposes to furnish us materials, on condition we would show a disposition to help ourselves by doing what we can. Are we doing this? Nearly all the churches have pledged, by resolutions in their Conferences, presbyteries, etc., to present the claims of the Society, and take collections. And I am satisfied there are numerous persons whose attention only needs to be called to this subject, and an opportunity afforded to contribute. Only consider the above facts, showing that more than half of the families living in our nearest neighboring parishes are totally destitute of the word of life. Is there a church in this city that will fail to help us? I suppose none fail to take missionary collections to send to heathens in other lands, but here are the heathens at our doors. Shall they perish?

From the Work.

DEER CREEK, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: Deer Creek runs almost parallel with the Sunflower river, and, at the point from which I write, the distance between the two is less than four miles. The Sunflower is navigable as high as our landing (Holland's) at all seasons, and during the winter and spring the creek is usually in good boating condition for the smaller craft. Besides these water facilities, we have five mails per week by land—two via Greenville, two via Vicksburg, and one by way of Mayersville. So you see that, though we have no railroads, we are not altogether "out of the world." It is not to be denied, however, that a railroad would add somewhat to our present conveniences, and greatly facilitate the further development of the marvelous resources of Sharkey and adjoining counties. We hope to have one soon, but leave this matter to capitalists, while we return to tell you of some of the attractions of that part of Deer Creek included within the bounds of Rolling Fork circuit.

The stream itself is a "thing of beauty"—waters clear, banks sloping and covered in many places, almost to the water's edge, with a thick green carpet of Bermuda grass; while the cottonwood, the pecan, the willow and the box-elder lend additional beauty and attractiveness in their rich foliage and grateful shade. The "many tribes" are well represented in numbers and size, and, notwithstanding a vast amount of angling and trapping, still afford wholesome food and sport to those who have the leisure and disposition to indulge. Game, I am told, abounds just to the rear of plantations, and we are frequently blessed with incontestable evidences of the fact that an excellent cattle range is somewhere not far away.

The public roads lie along the creek banks, and are, possibly, as fine during the greater part of the year as any in the world. The two villages, McKinneyville and Rolling Fork, constitute my work. Between these two points, six miles apart, scarce a root or other rough place disturbs the "even tenor" of the itinerant's way.

The land at present available is perhaps not more than a mile in depth on either side of the creek; but this is in a high state of cultivation, and wonderfully productive—sixty bushels of corn, or two bales of cotton—without the use of fertilizers, being no unfrequent yield of a good season.

The buildings are mainly along the front, and form, with very little interruption, a continuous village for many miles, the whole scene, here and there, dotted with an Indian mound, or the inevitable steam cotton gin.

Among the people we find intelligence, refinement and abounding hospitality, as also a special regard for the comfort of their pastor and family. Planters who do not themselves reside here seem to have been peculiarly fortunate in procuring the services of some of the very best men as superintendents of their estates—men who feel and manifest a lively interest in the political, social and religious welfare of the people with whom they have cast their lots.

The health record for this year has been remarkably good, and, I have no doubt, will compare favorably with that of any other section. Now and then a chill, but very little other sickness—scarcely any fatal.

The church is prospering, in a measure, but not to that degree we would like and do hope to see it. The membership has been increased, during the present year, about one hundred per cent., but, alas! alas! there is a woeful dearth of spirituality! Oh, for a Pentecostal season, e'er the close of this Conference year!

I would fain speak, in conclusion, of the special kindnesses received by the pastor and family at the hands of some who have not yet attached themselves to any branch of the church. We came to them strangers, we found them friends "in deed and in truth," and shall ever keep them in most grateful remembrance. They are very near to our hearts. May the Lord abundantly reward these, both here and hereafter!

GEORGIANA, ALABAMA.

MR EDITOR: After seven weeks' labor I have had a few days rest. We closed our round of protracted meetings at Georgiana, commencing there on Saturday before the fifth Sunday. With Bro. Boland to assist me, and the church having been moved up to a working point by the meeting, we had to close a month before. Bro. Boland left on Wednesday, after preaching nine sermons, which made twenty-five on this work this year. Bro. Motley came on Thursday, and did some good fighting, and then Bro. Holcombe came in on Sunday, and we closed the battle on Sunday night with a grand victory—thirty-three accessions, about as many conversions, and the church most gloriously blessed. On Sunday we baptized the child of a Mormon, and a missionary Baptist.

The Lord has blessed us at every church on the work. About one hundred have been added to the church during the year. Prayer meetings and class meetings have been revived, and we hope to keep up the revival during the year, and be so filled with the Holy Ghost that we will not have to preach a week at every appointment next year to get the church to work.

We are going to try to put the ADVOCATE in every Methodist family when they sell cotton; but here are the worms and rust, and fall in the price, all of which the preacher and papers have to take.

Yours truly,

MINDEN CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CHURCH DEDICATION.

MR. EDITOR: On the first Sabbath in September we dedicated a very neatly finished, sub-tantial church house, at Pine Grove, Minden circuit, Louisiana Conference. Though crops are short in that neighborhood, and times hard, yet it was all paid for. The pastor (Bro. Bradley), and the friends of religion in that community deserve much credit for the energy, zeal and sacrifice put forth in order to the completion of the work. They had an old church house on the same lot of ground that they might have continued to worship in, but they now have a respectable one, an ornament to the neighborhood.

SEPTEMBER 15 1879.

MARION, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: Old Marion circuit still lives. The spiritual state of the church has improved on the work, and we are now in a healthful condition. We have held a series of protracted meetings at all the churches around the work, and trust much good has been accomplished, though we have not had as many accessions as in some other fields reported from; yet a goodly number have professed faith in Christ, and have been added to the church. The power of the Holy Spirit seems to have been directed mainly to the church, and evidences of a deeper work of grace have been manifest. The membership has been greatly blessed, and God's Spirit has been poured out upon the people. Christians have rejoiced, vows have been paid, and covenants renewed, while much interest has been shown by the large and attentive congregations.

Obituaries.

CHARLES DANA, the subject of this notice, was born in the State of Louisiana, March 6, 1811; was married to Nancy M. Martin, November 6, 1834, and died near Vicksburg, Miss., September 6, 1879, being sixty-eight years and six months old.

Mr. Dana was brought up by strict Presbyterians, but had never formally united with any Christian organization. His family being divided, some of his children being Methodist and some Baptist, and his wife a member of the Presbyterian church, and his predilections being in favor of that church, and no organization near him, he could not get the consent of his mind to join with a part of his family only, yet for the last few years he was evidently changed much. I was in time with him and in the last interview I had with him on the subject of religion, which was but a few days previous to his death, he readily and cheerfully united all the evidences of Christianity to his personal experience. A more honorable and conscientious man, in all his dealings with his fellow man, I never knew.

To the petition of the widow, and cry of the orphan, he always responded with a feeling heart and a liberal hand, and, though not a member of any church, he was ever ready to contribute his means to the support of Christianity, and to see that his children contributed their pro rata to the church of their choice. Faithfully did he serve his family and his generation, and went down to the grave lamented by all who knew him. "But we sorrow not as those who have no hope."

F. M. WILLIAMS.

SISTER M. E. DOUGLAS, daughter of Rev. A. M. L. and Catherine Douglas, was born December 18, 1861; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1876, and professed religion in 1874. She was an obedient child, never known willfully to disobey her parents. Her mother preceded her to the good world. She has left a father and many friends to mourn her loss. She was not permitted to make any dying statement, as she was in a stupor for some time before she died. She died with congestion, in Pike county, Ala., September 1, 1879.

W. B. ADAMS.

SISTER LAURA BISHOP was born June 21, 1859, was a beautiful bride last November, and died July 11, 1879 about eight months after her happy marriage to Charlie Bishop. I was her pastor for four years, during which time to be at Sunday school and church was seldom if ever vacant. I never knew her to utter an unkind word. She had a kind heart for every one, loved the companionship of her young friends, but was never found at the social dance. She was the especial favorite of many dear friends, the sunshine to her brothers, sisters and widowed mother, and was the idol of her young husband. She exhibited in her life a salvation from the moral death, bondage and love of sin to the spiritual resurrection, service and love of righteousness. Her last breath and speech were triumphant praises to God in beautiful Sabbath-school songs.

D. C. CHICK.

MRS MARTHA E. HUGHES, daughter of M. E. and Florida Russell, was born in Charleston district, S. C., February 6, 1811, and died at State Line, Miss., August 8, 1879.

She was a member of the Methodist Church, and, though during the last years of her life she was debarred by affliction from attending church, yet she constantly expressed herself as enjoying peace with God. Her lot seemed a hard and bitter one. In the midst of poverty and toil she slowly wasted away with consumption. Yet she fulfilled with patient resignation the responsible duties of wife and mother, while her heart was burdened with a weight of sorrow that seemed enough to break it. Double and three-fold were her trials and hardships were working out for her "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Her last words expressed entire resignation to the will of God and a hope that took hold upon that within the veil. "May the Holy Spirit lead those she leaves behind to serve the God she trusted, that they may meet her in peace."

J. O. A.

JOHN S. TRUETTE was born February 13, 1858, and died February 26, 1879. A week before his untimely death he was ruddy, large, symmetrical, and surpassing in personal attributes. His force of character led him, when a boundless youth, to seek a life more suited to his enterprising and ambitious spirit, on the western frontier of Texas. Far away from home, friends and kindred, and seldom if ever, if he was thrown upon his own resources, but was master of the situation, having made a handsome living and a host of friends. Three years before his death he was a wild, wicked young man. His faithful mother, however, never ceased to offer fervent daily prayers for the salvation of her son. Like the Syrophenician mother, she prevailed with God. Her son was converted, his spiritual eyes were opened, and the "prairies never looked half so lovely." May his weeping mother, sorrowing brothers and heart-broken sister all meet him in heaven.

D. C. CHICK.

MRS. LORINE JOHNSON was born in Georgia in the year 1810. Her maiden name was Hightbothan. In 1830 she was married to John Johnson. Of 1851 she professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mrs. Johnson was one of our best women. She was true under every and all circumstances of life. I knew her when she was rich, also after the war, when she was comparatively poor; but she never changed. No one of my knowledge has left a better record.

In Yazoo City, February 1, 1879 she celebrated her last, and entered on her reward. Mrs. Lou Gibbs was the only living child of Mrs. Johnson. She, too, was a noble Christian lady. Her death occurred at her home near Yazoo City, July 26, 1879. I was with her, as we called her when she was converted. I shall never forget how happy she seemed when she told me she was married to Hon. W. D. Gibbs, who now survives her.

F. M. FEATHERSTON.

AMANDA H. COOPER died, near Oak Grove, Choctaw county, Ala., July 16, 1879, in the twenty-seventh year of her age. Sister Cooper joined the church at the age of sixteen. When she found that her salvation was near, she called the writer to pray for her. "Kneel by my bed," said she, "and pray now." We knelt and prayed. She also prayed, and was soon leading in prayer in an audible voice, to which the writer could only respond in Amen. She prayed for the witness of the Holy Spirit, the comforts of sanctifying grace. She received all this in a few moments, and she was joy and perfect resignation.

She then, with the most perfect composure, called her husband and exhorted him to meet her in heaven as a Christian ought, and referred particularly to family worship, which they had for some time neglected. Quite a long time, and she, though slightly hoarse and labor-bound, and with composure comforting him and giving directions in the most sensible affairs.

Her father, her sisters, her friends, each in turn, she addressed in the most earnest and affectionate manner that I have ever heard, exhorting to consistency and faith, and preparation now for eternity.

She called her little boy and begged him to be a good child in order that they might one day meet again. Her infant, she said, would soon follow her. "It may live four weeks; do the best you can with it," she said. The babe lived twenty-seven days and died. She lingered three days after this in perfect consciousness, and fell asleep in Jesus.

H. S. GUNN.

MARGGA ELLEN, daughter of S. H. and Elizabeth Bell, died, near Andrews' Chapel, Clarke county, Miss., November 21, 1878 aged nineteen years one month and twenty days.

Sister Ellen was converted and joined the church in the fall of 1874, at the age of fifteen years, and lived an exemplary Christian life till her death. She often praised her God aloud in love and prayer-meetings, and did not fear to own her Lord before men.

She was ill and ill health for nearly twelve months previous to her death, and was cured in spite to death as a source of relief from bodily suffering, which she bore with great patience for one of her years.

At the camp-meeting at Union camp ground in 1877, the Rev. James Shanks requested all those that would promise to meet him in Heaven to give him their hands. Ellen was the first. She frequently spoke of dying in time of her sickness, told her father that she was going home to rest, also to tell her brother in Texas to prepare, and preacher for heaven, with many more words of exhortation to parents and friends. She said, "I am coming me." Thus she passed from earth to heaven.

H. S. GUNN.

WILLIAM MALCOMB, son of Brother Louis and Sister Sarah McKenzie, died, near Kirk's Gin, Choctaw county, Ala., aged fourteen years and fourteen days.

Malcomb was an exemplary little boy. He had felt the necessity of seeking his soul's salvation. He loved his Saviour precious as he said in his own language he found Jesus at the seed-house where he was sent to go to feed the cows. And how he was going home in heaven, and requested brothers and sisters to meet him in heaven, with a parting word by to ma and pa.

"NOT THE SAME OFFICE."

BY EVA TRAVERS.

I could not do the work the reapers did,
Or bind the golden sheaves that thickly fell;
But I could follow by the Master's side,
And watch the marred face I loved so well,
Right in my path lay many a ripened ear,
Which I would stoop and gather joyfully;
I did not know the Master placed them there—
"Handfuls of purpose" that He left for me.

I could not cast the heavy fisher-net,
I had not strength or wisdom for the task;
So on the sun-lit sands, with spray-drops wet,
I sat, and earnest prayers rose thick and fast,
I pleaded for the Master's blessing where
My brethren toiled upon the wide, world sea,
Or ever that I knew, His smile so fair
Came, shedding all its radiancy on me.

I could not join the glorious soldier band,
I never heard the ringing battle-cry;
The work allotted by the Master's hand
Kept me at home, while others went to die.
And yet, when victory crowned the struggle long,
And spoils were homeward brought, both rich and rare,
He let me help to chant the triumph song,
And bade me in the gold and jewels share.

Oh, Master dear! the tiniest work for Thee
Finds recompense beyond our highest thought;
And feeble hands, that worked not troublingly,
The richest colors in the fabric wrought.
We are content to take what Thou shalt give,
To work or suffer as Thy choice shall be;
Forsaking what Thy wisdom bids us leave,
And in the thought that we are pleasing Thee!

The Shakers.

BY DR. THEODORE D. WOOLSEY.

From these abortive attempts to establish communities in the territory of the United States, we turn to others which are more successful. The oldest, the Shakers, were at their origin a society of enthusiasts in humble life, who separated from the Quakers about the middle of the eighteenth century. Ann Lee, one of the members, on account of spiritual manifestations, believed to have been made to her, became an oracle in the body; and in 1773 she declared that a revelation from Heaven instructed her to go to America. The next year she crossed the sea, with eight others, and settled in the woods of Watervliet, near Albany. She preached, and was believed to have performed remarkable cures. From her were derived the rule of celibacy, and for persons seeking admission into the infant society, the obligation to make an oral confession of sin in the presence of an older member of the community. She died in 1784, as the acknowledged head of the church, and had afterward nearly equal honors paid to her with the Saviour. Under the second successor of Ann Lee almost all the societies in New York and New England were founded; and under the third, a woman named Lucy Wright, whose leadership lasted nearly thirty years, those in Ohio and Kentucky. The latter grew up during the remarkable revivals in Kentucky at the beginning of the century, which were attended with involuntary convulsions of the body. After 1830 the Shakers founded no new society.

Dr. Nordhoff gives the leading doctrines of the Shakers, which are to some of them singular enough. They hold that God is a dual person, male and female; that Adam, created in His image, was dual also; that the same is true of all angels and spirits; and that Christ is one of the highest of spirits, who appeared first in the person of Jesus and, afterward in that of Ann Lee. There are four heavens and four hells. Noah went to the first heaven, and the wicked of his time to the first hell. The second heaven was called Paradise, and contained the pious Jews until the appearance of Christ. The third, that into which the Apostle Paul was caught, included all that lived until the time of Ann Lee. The fourth is now being filled up, and "is to supersede all the others."

They hold that the day of judgment, or beginning of Christ's kingdom on earth, began with the establishment of their church, and will go on until it is brought to its completion! The Pentecostal Church, they think, was the standard and true church, from which the Christians fell away; but their community has returned to the true doctrine and practice. Its main principles were common property, celibacy, non-resistance, a separate government (from that of the State) and power over diseases. All these they embody in their system but the last, which they also hope of receiving. They discard the doctrine of the Trinity, the resurrection of the body and the Atonement. They worship neither Christ nor Ann Lee, but pay both love and reverence.

They have a belief that a sinless life is within human reach, and that to this "all their members ought to attain."

In regard to marriage and property, they do not take the position that these are crimes, but only marks of a lower order of society. The world will have a chance to become pure in a future state, as well as here.

They believe in spiritual communication and possession. They themselves have conversed with spirits—even with those that lived before the flood. They claim that inspired gifts have been granted to their churches. In the earlier times of the sect they professed to have the gift of tongues.

The travels of President Dwight make mention of this gift of tongues in a letter of the author written as early as 1799. (Vol. III, p. 161.) I give his words: "The company at whose worship I was present declared that they could speak with tongues; and that both the words and the tune were inspired. I observed to them that the sounds which they made, and which they called language, could not be words, because they were not articulated. One of the women replied: 'How dost thee know but that we speak the Hotmatot language? The language of the Hotmatots is said to be made up of such sort of words.'"

Dr. Dwight in the same place gives statements from the work of one Thomas Brown, once a Quaker, and for a time a member of the Society of Shakers, but afterward dismissed from their body. This book, published in 1798, gives very disparaging accounts of the morality of Ann Lee and her brother, William Lee, and says of the society that they esteem it lawful to lie, to defraud, and quote Scripture falsely, for the good of the church—lawful for the elders, at least, if not for the brethren. Another charge is that they retain the property and refuse to pay for the labor of such as leave them, alleging for it the reason that they will only spend it on their lusts. But these and similar charges against their character eighty years ago must be received with many grains of allowance, if not entirely disbelieved, both because they come from a man who was expelled from the community after living seven years in it, and because in later times no such charges, so far as we know, have been renewed on good evidence.

Dr. Dwight himself seeks to do them justice. Probably, says he, "there never was a stiller enthusiasm than this; yet, by a singular combination of circumstances, it has become to society the most harmless, and, in some respects, the most useless, perhaps, of all the mental extravagances of this nature recorded in history. The doctrines are so gross that they never can spread far, while the industry, manual skill, fair dealing and orderly behavior of the brotherhood render them useful members of society."

The Shakers (leaving out of sight for the present the children from abroad, who are brought up) consist of two orders: novices, or such as are not full members of the community, and full members. The latter are not easily accessible in their houses to strangers. All communication with travelers and others, whose curiosity draws them to the Shaker settlements, takes place at the houses where the novices are lodged. When a person wishes to join the body, his first duty is to make a full confession to an elder of the same sex with the person in question. It would seem that this confession is renewed afterward, from time to time, for one of the elders, cited by Dr. Nordhoff, says that it "often takes years for individuals to complete this work of thorough confession and repentance;" to which he adds that upon this, more than upon aught else, depends their success as permanent and happy members." The effect of such a confession, made to God in the presence "of one of His true witnesses," can bring, they justly think, upon the person making the confession, "a more awful sense of his accountability, both to God and to man, than all his confessions in darkness had ever done."

The candidate for membership brings his property with him, which is held in trust by the community. The use of it goes to the body, and he is maintained, without wages of labor or receipt of interest. When he enters the body he gives up all claim upon his property forever. If this be so, the complaint of Brown, which has been mentioned, is entirely without foundation.

The community of goods is connected with a common life of great plainness and of obligation to work under the authorized foreman. The habits of all the Shaker bodies are exceedingly neat and frugal. This, with their industry, directed by experience to profitable objects, has made them thriving and even wealthy.

Their worship on Sunday consists of singing a hymn, addresses by a male and a female elder, with a kind of shuffling dance, in which all participate. Sometimes silent prayer is called for by an elder. Sometimes the prayers of the assembly are asked for by some person in distress of mind. Sometimes a person sets up a whirl or circular dance, which continues for a considerable time. Their meetings in their public or family hall are partly religious and partly social.

For many particulars of their social life, for their intercourse with spirits, for their family police, and the care taken to prevent anything which would cause scandal, we must refer to Dr. Nordhoff's volume, one-quarter of which is devoted to this form of communistic life. Springing out of the Society of Friends, they have inherited some of the mystical and spiritual elements of the latter, together with their tendency to quietism and to rationalism. Their community of goods is apparently derived from that of the Pentecostal Church; their speaking with tongues is but a repetition of that recorded in the Book of Acts and the First Epistle to the Corinthians—or rather, a copy of an original about which they know little; their confession is suggested by the confession recommended in the Epistle of James; their dances, perhaps, point back to David and Miriam. In some things they bear a resemblance to the Essenes and the Therapeutæ—as in filling up their numbers by means of adopted children they are like the former; in their duties like the latter; in their being a celibatary union like both; and in the living of the sexes together again like the latter. We may add that, like the Therapeutæ, they lead such a life free from ascertained scandal. In shrewdness, economy and prudent management they are surpassed by communities on no other basis.—Independent.

When Oxford University conferred on Longfellow the degree of D. C. L., an undergraduate called out for "three cheers for the red man of the West." Which goes along with a story which the late Thos. Corwin, a member of President Fillmore's Cabinet, used to tell of himself. At an English reception given in his honor, an elegant lady kindly inquired of the rather dark-complexioned American: "Is your tribe at peace with the whites?"

"Good morning; Mr. Brown, you're first at last; you used to be behind before, but I notice you have been getting early of late."

Religious Intelligence.

—The missionaries in Turkey are gaining more and more of the confidence of the people. A new and striking illustration of this is found in the fact that the newly-appointed governor of Zeitoon, for whose people the missionaries have done so great a service, called on a missionary in Marash, on his way to his post, for a letter of recommendation to his people of Zeitoun. The missionary gave the letter, which was sent in advance; and when the governor arrived he was met by a deputation and escorted to his home. The missionary has been surprised by a visit of fourteen Armenians, of Zeitoon, who, grateful for his services in behalf of their town, desired him to preach to them. A congregation gathered to hear the gospel, and they told the missionary the whole town was ready to accept it. The Eastern Turkey Mission has a cheering report to make. New openings have occurred in the Jebul Tour and Mosul regions of the Mardin field, and mission schools, seminaries, and the Armenian College are all doing well. In the Western Turkey Mission the church at Marsovan has found a native pastor, and has added 30 persons to its membership since the beginning of the present year. A missionary society has been formed, whereof 40 persons are members and are pledged to pay $1 50 a year for preaching the gospel to neighboring places. The Armenians and Greeks in Sivas, it is stated, are becoming less and less attached to their religions and are inclining more toward Protestantism.

"It is now quite fashionable with them (the Armenians) to carry their Testaments in our version, wherever they go. We heard of a man recently, making no pretensions to be a Protestant, still reading the whole Bible through by course, looking up all the references. The Greeks of Sivas also; numbering some seventy houses, have this year had a Bible class on the Sabbath, independent of their priest; and one of their number recently told us that there are not twenty families left who still retain faith in the old church. They are not ready, however, to come out and be separate. But frequently we or our Protestant brethren, while walking the busiest streets in market, are beckoned to stop and explain some passage of scripture to some Greek or Armenian who is trying to reform his corrupt church by remaining inside of it."

"The congregation is twice as large as it was a year ago. Last winter a colporteur passing through Euderes left a tract with a young man. When the colporteur returned, some weeks later, he found the young man had read the tract, borrowed and read the New Testament, became a believer, and collected a congregation of 30 persons, to whom he was preaching with zeal and acceptance.—Independent.

—It is just ten years since the Protestant College or University was established at Beyrout, Syria. Quickly through the liberality of American gentlemen, friends of science and the Bible, a splendid site on a promontory jutting out into the Mediterranean was secured, buildings erected and professorships endowed. What has been accomplished during this decade may be learned from a letter written by one of the professors, which will be found on another page. Robert College at Constantinople, the Syrian College at Beyrout, the Central Turkey College at Aintab, and the Armenian College at Harpoot, all American in their origin, and all in successful operation, are accomplishing a great work in behalf of Turkey. Two of these institutions are independent of missionary aid or control, but are working harmoniously with the Boards toward the same great end—the advancement of the kingdom of Christ in the Eastern World.—New York Observer.

—The Rev. B. Danks, Mr. George Brown's co-missionary, writes of the Wesleyan Mission in New Britain, that the natives are quiet, and most of the teachers have gone to their several appointments; also: "We have great influence over the native mind already." Since I have been here, I have endeavored to impress upon the people the importance of keeping the Sabbath-day holy, and I may safely say that there is less work done now on Sunday than when I first came. If they are doing any kind of work on Sunday, and they see me in the distance, they will at once try to hide it. This in itself speaks much for the influence which we are gaining over them. They are not afraid to trust us, for they come about our new house without arms of any description, whereas when we came here every man carried his spear, or club, or tomahawk. They believe our word, and treat us with civility."

—Before the French Chambers adjourned the Radicals introduced a bill to abolish the Concordat after January 1, 1881, from which date no religion is to be "subventioned" by the State. The ground taken is that the Roman Catholic religion has altogether lost the general—the judicially universal and obligatory character which it had for many years, that the French Republic is not the heir of the Eighteenth Brumaire, and not bound by the engagements of Bonaparte; and that while the State gives Catholicism an official stamp, the bishops and clergy are not only disrespectful to it, but actually rebel against its authority. The Chamber of Deputies also made some important changes in the budget. The stipend of each bishop was reduced $1,000, and $20 a year was added to that of each of two thousand aged priests who only receive $180. The item of Cathedral choirs was reduced by $10 000. This change is in the interest of Protestantism.

—At Berne, Switzerland, August 10 a very interesting and significant service was held in the Old Catholic Cathedral. Circumstances had brought together the three leaders of the Catholic Reform movement in Germany, France and Switzerland—Bishop Reinkens, Pere Hyacinthe and Bishop Herzog—and the English Bishop of Edinburgh happened also to be in Berne. At nine o'clock in the morning a union service was held, in which all these clergymen took part. The cathedral was crowded with a mixed congregation of Protestants and Catholics, with a few Greeks to represent the Eastern Church. The service commenced with the familiar hymn, "The Church's one foundation is Jesus Christ the Lord." Pere Hyacinthe preached an eloquent sermon on the "Unity of the Church," the three Bishops sitting within the rails of the sanctuary in the order of their seniority.

—Bishop Colenso, who is now sixty-five years old, is described in the London World as a handsome, stately old man. He has a massive head, crowned with abundant silver locks; a mobile mouth, with strongly marked lines of incessant study and much care about it; deep-set eyes, pathetic almost in their kindly and earnest expression; a stature far beyond the average; and a presence at once dignified. His home at Pietermaritzburg is a long, low, cosey house, planted amid the most beautiful scenery.

—At the Court of England it is no longer a secret that the Prince Imperial was in love with the Princess Beatrice, Queen Victoria's youngest and only unmarried daughter. He hoped that by going to Zululand and winning the Victoria cross by some act of valor, the many difficulties in the way of an alliance might be overcome; but it would have required an Act of Parliament to permit the girl to marry a Catholic.

—The Brahmo-Somaj movement, notwithstanding the difficulties it has had to encounter, has extended itself much more than might have been expected. There are 149 Somajes scattered throughout India, of which 44 have places of worship. Eighteen different periodicals are published in connection with the society, six in the English, the rest in Indian languages. Four schools are kept up by the society, independently of the schools and classes provided by the local Somajes for their own districts.

—The Belgian Bishops have, at a Conference held at Malines, resolved with regard to the new Education Law that absolution is to be refused to all teachers and pupils of the public normal schools; that teaching in public schools being schismatical, all teachers employed in them are excommunicated; that absolution is to be refused to the teachers of all public schools, without any exception; and that the children attending the public schools, being considered as acting without discernment, may be admitted provisionally to first communion.

—Dr. V. M. White, of London, publishes a letter in the Christian World showing that the Roman Catholics are relatively declining in the United Kingdom. In 1841 they were twenty-seven per cent. of the entire population; in 1871 they were only eighteen per cent. He admits that the political influence of the Romish Church has considerably increased, and he attributes this fact to a mistaken idea as to its growth and real strength.

—The seminaries of the American Board in Turkey, east of the Bosphorus, are able to give the natives all needed instruction preparatory to the ministry. Efforts will be made to place the seminary at Samokor, in European Turkey, on a like basis at the earliest day possible. The mission churches, schools, etc., in Eastern Turkey, have had a year of success, notwithstanding the unsettled and impoverished condition of the country.

—When the Irish Methodists united, a small body of Primitives were left who still adhered to the old tradition of membership in the Episcopal Church, and have been taken under special care of the Bishop of Kilmore. They do not seem to have met the approval of all the Episcopalians, for the Irish Church Advocate speaks with decided contempt of their conference of eight preachers as a body of "self-constituted clergy."

—The Rome correspondent of the London Times, referring to the laying of the first stone of a new church, to be dedicated to the Sacred Heart, by Cardinal Monaco, says: "The ceremonial was performed with the full observance of all ritual prescriptions, and may be considered specially noteworthy, inasmuch as this has been the first religious ceremonial since 1870 celebrated with all the publicity of days gone by.

—Rev. J. H. Castle, D. D., of Toronto, Ont., formerly of West Philadelphia, has been elected president of the Canadian Literary and Theological Institute (Baptist,) and Hon. William McMaster, one of his parishioners, has become responsible for $2 000 a year, for three years, toward his support in that position.

—It is thought that the Free Church of Scotland will be represented in the Presbyterian Council Philadelphia next year by the following ministers: Principal Rainey, Rev. Sir Henry Moncrieff, Rev. Dr. Begg, Rev. Dr. Blaikie and Rev. Dr. Adam.

—The First Presbyterian Church in Alaska has been organized at Fort Wrangle by the Rev. S. Hall Young, missionary, assisted by Dr. Sheldon Jackson and others. The church consists of 23 members, of whom 18 are Indians, including four chiefs of the Stickine tribe.

—The Wesleyan Conference declined to accept several candidates for the ministry, who had been recommended by the proper committee. The Conference is becoming more careful to exclude weak men from the ministry.

—At the recent meeting of a Wesleyan Conference in England it was resolved that candidates for ordination should be asked: "Do you take snuff, tobacco or drams?"

—The Prussian Court of Justice has rendered judgment in a suit against a person for printing a parody of the Apostles' Creed, for the complainants. In Prussia no one may offer insult to a religious faith.

WORK AND PLAY.

What did the idle fairies say
To Kitty, sewing her seam one day?
"Kitty you are so tired," they said,
"Drop your needle, and hide your thread,
And come, the gate in the garden swings
To let you pass, and the robin sings
Among the alders about a nest,
And how it is—well, you will know the rest
When you hear it sing by the running brook
And bring your doll and the fairy book."

Naughty fairies! Why need you go
To a little girl with a seam to sew,
To twitch her needle and knot her thread,
And tangle up in her curly head,
Your cob-web fancies, until she dreams
Of ferns and fairies instead of seams;
Until the stitches are all awry,
A knot gets into the needle's eye—
And, like a butterfly down the lane,
Puts careless Kitty at play again.

"Little Piety."

The boys all said that "Little Neil" was the queerest fellow in the regiment. He never said much but he would look unutterable things out of his eyes. They were a deep blue, a sort of pure blue that looked perfectly clean and good.

One day, one of our men was swearing furiously, when Ned came and put his hand on the man's arm, and said, "Please don't speak so." He was looking right into the savage man's eyes. I looked to see him knock Ned down, for he was the worst tempered man I ever knew. But he looked at little Neil, and said: "Beg yer pardon Little Piety, didn't mean to swar."

So I asked an orderly why they called Ned, "Little Piety," and he said, "It's 'cause he's so pious, sir." He prays and sings, kind o' low like, in his tent; and says grace at mess, all to himself; and don't never do nothin' wrong. We used to kind o' run on him at first, and that's the way the "Little Piety" got pitched onto him; but the boys mean it all well enough now. There ain't no man that'll dare to bother him, 'front they're ready to fight Piety's whole company capt'n and all."

I called Ned up, and asked him where he learned to live such a life as he did. He told me of his Sunday-school at home, and of his teacher's prayers. I looked earnestly at the boy to see what kind of stuff he was made of. He was a withy little fellow, some seventeen years old, and with just the eye for a soldier.

One day some of the boys asked if they might have a hospital tent that was not in use, for a Sunday-school. "Why," said I, "is the chaplain going to open a Sunday-school in the camp?"

"No," said they, "it's 'Little Piety.'"

"Will the boys go?" I asked.

"Yes, indeed, sir," they said. "Little Piety is up to it, you see. He's got the real pious, that shows out good every day."

So I gave them the use of the tent, and it would have done any man's heart good to see how he carried on his school. Some twenty of the boys went in, and others were round outside; but nobody made fun.

The boy had a wonderful influence in the regiment. When any duty was to be done he was always on hand; brave, cool, a fearless rider, and with a good wrist for a bridle rein or for a sabre. His sabre and carbine were always bright, and his horse seemed in good condition when the others were looking the worse for hard usage and poor forage. Inspecting officers often asked about him.

One day, as I galloped down the line before we went into a fight, I saw Ned sitting on his horse—his horse was small—in the front rank. I said, "Ned, you'd better go back; you are too small for to day. You may get rode down. It will be all right for you; go back to the rear."

But he begged to stay. "Please don't send me back. I can handle my sabre as well as any of them;" and drawing it he made a neat moulinet, to show how strong and supple his wrist was.

The men, too, begged that he might stay, and promised to see that he wasn't ridden down. So let him stay. But I felt badly about it for he was so valuable a soldier in his influence on the men. Still, I couldn't order him back to the rear, which he wanted to do his duty and distinguish himself.

Then came the sweeping charges of the cavalry across the road and into the field beyond. The bullets whistled and "zipped" by our ears. The air was filled with dust and smoke; and now and then would wake up again the wild yell of our troops.

The enemy broke for the woods, and we chased them some ways; shutting the captured ones behind us, to be hustled back to the rear.

While the howitzers were shelling the woods, and the men were resting for a time, I rode slowly back over the field to see about the noble fellows who had fallen. Some were wounded, and some dear faces that I had learned to love as comrades, were turned up, cold and still, toward the heavens, in the dying light of the early evening.

Just where we had crossed the road, and where quite a number were lying, was one poor boy, flat on his face. He was smaller than the rest, and it seemed as though my heart stopped beating, when I got off my horse to turn him over.

It was little Ned with a hole in his forehead, where the cruel bullet had gone crashing through his brain.

The whole command turned out to follow the dead body of that blue eyed comrade to the grave; and strong men cried that day, men whose eyes had not quailed under a heavy battery fire.

Little Ned was courageous—a hero on the field; but he was more of a hero in the every-day camp life. Every man was brave before the enemy's guns; it was harder to be brave under a comrade's sneer. Why the boys respected him and loved him so much, was because he was the bravest of all, under the fire and sneer.

The Little Traveler.

Maggie Wood's father was an Englishman who came to America to try his fortune but did not find it; for when Maggie was three months old, the great Chicago fire destroyed their home; soon after the mother died; then the father was drowned, and Maggie was left all alone in a strange country.

She had a good aunt in England, however, who took pains to discover the child after the death of the parents, and sent for her to come home and be cared for. It was no easy matter to get a five years child across the Atlantic, for the aunt could not come to fetch her, and no one whom she knew was going over. But Maggie had found friends in Chicago; the American Consul at Manchester was interested in the case, and every one was glad to help the forlorn baby; who was too young to understand the pathos of her story.

After letters had gone to and fro, it was decided to send the child to England in charge of the captain of a steamer, trusting to the kindness of all fellow travelers to help her on her way.

The friends in Chicago bestirred themselves to get her ready, and carefully chose a comfortable outfit for the cold March voyage.

When all was ready, Maggie's small effects were packed in a light basket, so that she could carry it herself if need be. A card briefly telling the story was fastened on the corner, and a similar paper recommending her to the protection of all kind people, was sewed to the bosom of her frock. Then, not in the least realizing what lay before her, the child was consigned to the conductor of the train to be forwarded to persons in New York who would see her safely on board the steamer.

I should dearly like to have seen the little maid and the big basket as they set out on that long trip as tranquilly as if for a day's visit; and it's a comfort to know that before the train started the persons who took her there had interested a motherly lady in the young traveler, who promised to watch over her while their ways were the same.

All went well, and Maggie was safely delivered to the New York friends, who forwarded her to the steamer, well supplied with toys and comforts for the voyage, and placed in charge of the captain and stewardess. She sailed on the third of March, and on the twelfth landed at Liverpool, after a pleasant trip, during which she was the pet of all on board.

The aunt welcomed her joyfully, and the same day the child reached her new home, the Commercial Inn, Compstall, after a journey of over four thousand miles. The Consul and owners of the steamer wanted to see the adventurous young lady who had come so far alone, and neighbors and strangers made quite a lion of her, for all kindly hearts were interested, and the protective charity which had guided and guarded her in two hemispheres and across the wide sea, made all men fathers, and all women mothers, to the little one till she was safe. So ended the journey of the little traveler.—St. Nicholas.

How Games Travel.

Travelers, observing the likeness of children's games, in Europe and Asia, have sometimes explained it on this wise: That the human mind being alike everywhere, the same games are naturally found in different lands, children taking to hocky, tops, kites, stilts, and so on, each at its proper season. But how is it that in outlying barbarous countries one hardly finds a game without finding also that there is a civilized nation within reach from whom it may have been learned? And what is more, how is it that European children knew nothing till a few centuries ago of their now most popular sports? For instance, they had no battledore-and-shuttle-cock, and never flew kites till these games came across from Asia, when they took root at once and became naturalized over Europe. The origin of kite-flying seems to be somewhere in Southeast Asia, where it is sport even of grown-up men, who fight their kites by foaming them cut one another's strings, and fly birds and monsters of the most fantastic shapes and color, especially in China, where old gentlemen may be seen taking their evening stroll, kite-string in hand as though they were leading pet dogs. The English boy's kite appears thus on instance not of spontaneous play-instinct, but of the migration of an artificial game from a distant center. Nor is this all it proves in the history of civilization. Within a century, Europeans becoming acquainted with the South Sea Islanders, found them down to New Zealand adepts at flying kites, which they made of leaves or bark cloth, and called manu, or bird, flying them in solemn form with accompaniment of traditional chants. It looks as though the toy reached Polynesia through the Malay region, thus belonging to that drift of Asiatic culture which is evident in many other points of South Sea Island life. The geography of another of our childish diversions may be noticed as matching with this. Mr. Wallace relates that being one wet day in a Dayack house in Borneo, he thought to amuse the lads by taking a piece of string to show them "cat's cradle," but to his surprise he found that they knew more about it than he did, going off into figures that quite puzzled him. Other Polynesians are skilled in this nursery art, especially the Maories of New Zealand, who call it maui, from the name of their national hero, by whom, according to their tradition, it was invented; its various patterns represent canoes, houses, people, and even episodes in Maui's life, such as his fishing up New Zealand from the bottom of the sea. In the Sandwich Islands and New Zealand it is on record that the natives were found playing a kind of draughts which was not the European game, and which can hardly be accounted for but as another result of the drift of Asiatic civilization down into the Pacific.

The Christian Advocate.

REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

OFFICE.—113 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Loose Notions.

We refer to the views which seem to obtain, to a considerable extent, among members of the church in regard to sundry matters.

The observance of the Sabbath is one of them. It is not uncommon to take advantage of the cheap Sunday excursion trains. A contemplated trip to the country, or return, may be made at one fourth of the ordinary fare. If the cheap trains were run on week days they would take them, but, as they do not, our Christian friends pack up and go on Sunday. There is saving of some money, a country trip that otherwise might not be afforded is gained, but the law of God is violated. Can Christians afford to be economical in this way? Again, it happens that provisions for the Sabbath have not been made on Saturday. It may be the custom, or the housewife has "forgotten to take bread," and so the first thing on Sunday morning is a trip to the market. With some the day is largely devoted to visiting and dining, much more than to home reading and public worship. Some men of business and others not particularly busy, cannot forego a visit to the postoffice, and there are odds and ends of the week that demand a few moments at the store, or a ride in the field.

The relations of Christians to the whisky business ought to be above suspicion. As to its use, the discipline takes the grounds of total abstinence. Besides originating tract societies and Sunday-schools, Mr. Wesley put total abstinence into the organization of his societies. If a man who drinks liquor, except in cases of necessity, may be a good Christian, it is certain he cannot be a good Methodist. In taking the vows of membership in the church he has pledged himself to total abstinence. We doubt whether the habitual drinker of liquor can be a good Christian, but we are sure that the man cannot be who has solemnly vowed to abstain, and yet continues to drink. The wrong of drinking carries with it the wrong of selling or buying liquor as a beverage. No reputable Christian will retail the poison, but do not some, regarded as in good standing, deal in the article in a wholesale way, or in connection with the more general business of groceries and supplies. The liquor business, if it must be tolerated by society, ought to be a specialty, and left altogether to worldlings and sinners. No Christian can touch it, even by wholesale, without defilement. It hurts his influence, and damages his soul. The liquor trade yields large profits, no doubt, but these profits would be much less if all who profess to be Christians were to cease to use, or buy or sell, the miserable stuff. At any rate, the gain of sin is not for them.

Gambling, as indulgence in games of chance, has a common principle in all its ramifications. The lottery, the card table, the horse race, the dice box, and many other forms, come to the same thing. Betting on elections is in the same line, and intended with the most corrupting results in the politics of the country. The chance of getting much for little, or, practically, of something for nothing, is a severe test of principle. Gambling is bad as an amusement, because it becomes a passion. It is bad for the people, because it is unfriendly to industry, honesty and labor, and because it impoverishes thousands where it makes one rich. Business gambling is as pernicious as any. It destroys confidence, unsettles values, and lends to the shipwreck of the most of those who indulge in it. The best business minds regard the inroad of the gambling spirit and methods into commercial affairs, as a great evil. The dealing in futures certainly has about it something of the elements of a game of chance, and its influence in the business world is unwholesome in the extreme. By lottery tickets, by futures, by other chance ventures, now and then, somebody makes a fortune, and the fact is published, and multitudes are drawn into the vortex of ruin. Can a Christian consistently gamble, or touch that which has in it the gambling element?

There is a broad line between the kingdom of Christ and the world. Very loose notions prevail in regard to this distinction. What in general is the difference between a respectable worldling and a rather below average church member? Both may be found making the Sabbath a convenience for business or pleasure. Both may be side by side selling whisky, both risking money on the same wild speculations, or in schemes of chance, both filled with the love of the world, and both found together in the ball-room and the theater. With some sorts of religious people there seems to be no recognition of the principle and fact of a real separation from the world, and that, in these days, self-denial, sacrifice, and even suffering, may be required, in order to Christian fidelity. They accept things as they are, and do as the world does, oblivious of the broad distinction between Christian holiness and worldly-mindedness.

These loose notions concern the vital principles of practical righteousness, and their prevalence indicates a need of reform. The idea that people can gamble, dance, drink, sell whisky, and junket on Sunday, with the world, and as the world does, and yet save their souls, is a delusion that, with all its extravagance, needs to be exposed. Conformity to the world has always been a stumbling-block to the church; and the most ill-at-ease thing in religious practice, as well as one of the clearest tests of religion pure and undefiled, is for the professed believer to keep himself unspotted from the world.

One Advantage of Itinerancy.

The itinerancy comes nearer furnishing the church with the ideal and perfect ministry than any other system. It is hardly possible that one man should possess all the excellencies in their completest development and exercise. By a regular and comparatively frequent change of pastors, each congregation shares the benefits of many and varied gifts. Some men are better pastors than others, some better church-builders and financiers, some have pre-eminently the wisdom and grace of good disciplinarians, and every church has need of these qualities in its pastor from time to time. As they are not usually found in one man, the advantage of them all is secured through the ministry of several. The strong and the brilliant, the solid and the entertaining, the instructive and the popular, are secured only through change and variety in the preachers. One in a thousand may unite all in his single ministry, and some are possessed of more varied resources than others, but generally it takes a great many preachers to make up a full and effective ministry. Paul planted and Apollos watered. It took them both to meet the demand, and to do the husbandry of the house of God.

The doctrinal preacher builds up on the most holy faith. Under his teaching the church is instructed in the articles of religion, in the ordinances, and in the meaning of the atonement, the divinity of Christ, justification, sanctification. In the course of three or four years he has a well-instructed church, well grounded in doctrine, and everybody convinced and settled in religious opinions. Much good has been done, but some classes have not been reached, and among the elect there is desire for a change of spiritual food.

The more eloquent and hortatory man—one who moves on the wings of tropes and figures, and whose sermons swim in illustrations and anecdotes—has done a faithful work in his way, enlisting interest, drawing congregations, attracting the young people, and adding many to the church. But in all his term he has perhaps never clearly and fully stated any one of the leading doctrines of redemption. His hearers cannot give the meaning of justification, nor tell the difference between it and sanctification. General ideas they have of goodness, grace and salvation, but there is lack of clear conceptions, and of the gospel as a system of truths. Some will feel the need of something more solid, and others who do not feel the need are the ones who, for their own good, most require a change.

Let the doctrinal man take the place of the more sprightly, and let the eloquent and hortatory man take the place of the doctrinal. Each is the complement of the other, supplementing, perfecting and completing what the other did not, and perhaps could not do.

Every forcible preacher will, in an average pastoral term, impress himself upon the spiritual and intellectual condition of his people. Their type and degree of spirituality, and their grade of mind and thought, will answer more or less to his. They will reflect what is excellent, but at the same time they will bear the impress of his defects and infirmities. There are few preachers that reach equally well all classes. Some have gifts for the perfecting of the saints, the edification of the church, and others reach with most power the unawakened and unconverted. There are those whose ministry is specially attractive to the poor and illiterate, but they fail in reaching the better educated, and those who move in the middle and higher walks of society. These "gifts differing," indicate the value and necessity of interchange of pastors.

Looking at the matter from this point of view only, the length of pastoral terms should vary greatly. Some men do all they can do profitably in a year, others in four years, others in ten. If the itinerancy requires for its harmony and maintenance a maximum limit, our four years' term is probably about the best that can be fixed. It very nearly strikes the average capacity of highest usefulness. Some preachers might be more effective in a much longer pastorate, and some churches lose something by the change which comes by the limitation, but the majority are benefitted. The rich and diverse gifts of many are so distributed as to work together for the building up of the whole church. The benefits secured to the churches are sufficient to reconcile the itinerant to the discomforts of the system, but he should also consider that while it utilizes him to the greatest advantage of the church it also secures to him better average appointments than a voluntary system of settled pastorates.

Word-Nature.

Words are organic. By tone and cadence, by quiver and groan, by whisper and shriek, they utter their souls. They live forever, because they have immortal souls, quick with thought and feeling. When we talk of word-nature we must forget alphabets, and remember only the beings, which alphabets are used to picture and perpetuate in visible form. Letters do not make words; they only spell them. Words existed long before letters, and, in every man's life, they come first. Indeed, many of our talking race have never known one letter of any alphabet, and yet some of these have uttered words, at the sound of which nations have marched or halted, shouted or trembled. When God said to Adam: "It is not good that the man should be alone. I will make him an help-meet for him," there was not a Hebrew, Arabic or other letter in the world, and yet those words, addressing themselves not only to our sense of meetness, but to our whole poetic and human nature, have trembled along the chord of life, all the way down from Adam's heart to ours.

Words were created when man was created, and very much after the same order. If the first man grew from babyhood or germhood to manhood, I suppose words grew from simplicity to mature wordhood. Word-nature is part of human nature, and has partaken of its history from the beginning, and will share its immortal destiny. If God made the first man full grown, he made him with a word-nature in him. He could think and speak. He knew God, and could address Him in appropriate utterance. When God brought the animals "unto Adam to see what he would call them," Adam named them promptly without any instruction. Some prominent characteristic in each animal found a corresponding meetness in a name. No sooner did the animal-character brush against the thought-nature (or word nature) in Adam, than there was emitted from him a fit designation, as naturally as odorific atoms are breathed from a geranium leaf when pressed.

Different races of men, and sometimes even nations, reared under different skies and varying environments, have different languages—use different words for the same thought. This grows out of the fact that the people themselves are different. A Greek is another sort of man from a Hebrew, and an Englishman varies widely from a Chinaman, and he from a Frenchman or a Spaniard. Their languages vary as the peoples do. Their thoughts offer different presentations for utterance. The word-nature is smitten, so to speak, at different angles. But in all cases the word grows on the thought, and the thought in the man. We think in words, and cannot think without them. A deaf and dumb man thinks in words, though it may be in some respects an individual, rather than a national language or dialect. The word is as necessary to the thought as the shell is to an oyster, and the thought not less necessary to the word. A word that means nothing—that has no thought in it, no soul in it—is not a word. A thought that has no word on it is as impossible as a man without an epidermis. The thought and the word are as natural to each other, and as necessary as the pulp and the rind of an orange. They grow together. The one has no proper life without the other. The rhetoricians talk about the origin of words as if they had a separate life from the life of thought, and some of them suggest that probably God taught Adam and Eve the first language, but fail to say whether it was the divine or the angelic tongue. As well might we suppose, in order to account for the first tree laden with apples, that God made the tree and the apples separately, and then took a basketful of the apples and stuck them on the limbs of the tree. A logical mind cannot believe that there was ever a tree laden with fruit without the precedent blooms, or the antecedent stages, whatever they were, in the process of fruitage. This process may have been quickened, so that a year's glory was achieved in a day, but the law of nature was honored.

Thoughts and words are parts of the same vitality. They inhere in each other, and are bound in nature's bond of indissoluble unity. They probably look alike, if you could see them both, as a man looks like himself. The word is the countenance of the thought. If the thought smiles, the word smiles; if the thought leers, the word leers (note the resemblance between the conception and the word in utterance); if the thought cuts, the word cuts; if the thought laughs, the word laughs; if the thought groans, the word groans. The words love and hate could not exchange places with each other. It would be a great mistake to suppose that because the first man who wished to speak of love in English had called it by that name, therefore it is so named. The word grew upon the sentiment as naturally as the flower upon the stem; and it is perfectly adapted to it, and fits it as nicely and as warmly as the skin upon a maiden's cheek. The poet speaks of "thoughts that breathe and words that burn;" but none so well as the poet knows that thoughts breathe through no other lungs than words, and that, if words burn, they burn with the fire of the incandescent thought within them.

The likeness between words, and the thoughts which they convey, is often very striking, and the most intense sympathy between them runs through all the likeness. Take any words almost at random: Smoothe, it is placid as a moonbeam; harsh, it grates and scratches in the utterance; strength, what muscular power in the union of these brawny consonants; weakness, it is as limp as rose leaves; sharp, what a nice edge it has; dull, how bluntly it thumps; scratch, it has more claws than a cat; yell, only an American Indian or a Confederate soldier can render it adequately; scream, none but a woman who sees a ghost in the night can do justice to the subject.

A celebrated professor of philology puts this conundrum to his class: "If there were no cats in the world, and all the bumble-bees were called cats, would there be any cats in the world?" This seems to be almost a pointless effort at wit; but, in fact, whether the professor intended it or not, there is a serious solution of his conundrum. Cats are cats, and bumble bees are bumble-bees, and the name cat will not suit the bumble-bee, nor the name bumble bee suit the cat. The word cat, in its monosyllabic brevity, conveys a sense of suddenness and swiftness at a single bound which is inevitable. The word bumble-bee hums and sings in the sound, with a song that easily turns into a buzz when confined upon a window-pane. In the case supposed in the conundrum, there would be no cats in the world, but only some flying insects, inappropriately called cats.

Sometimes the thought transfuses itself through the whole word, so that the word stands out as a kind of incarnation of the concept. For example, the word God; there is reverence and worship in the sound. The soul will not divide its passion, but into a single syllable it compresses the whole of its devotional power. The original word for good was god, God is good, and good is God; and, whether this be the true derivation or not, when the English soul would speak of the infinite good; it could find, and did seek, no more ample and natural mould for its thought than the word God. Take the opposite word—devil—representing the essence and impersonation of evil. The word is so saturated with the thought that it drips with gall from every letter. I have seen it suggested that if you cut off the d it is evil; if you cut off the de, it is vil; if you cut off the dev, it is il (l); and if you cut off the devi, it is l, or, as the plain Englishman would say, it is hell.

From these thoughts on word-nature we derive a single inference, which, by way of digression, we propose to discuss very briefly. The inference is that man did not evolve from the lower animals. Brute life has no thought-nature to serve, as the germ of this element in man. Word nature, thought-nature, one and indivisible, is so important a part of man that he would not be man without it. It is essential to humanity, and is essentially human. Brute-nature has no trace of it. The brute does not talk, and therefore we know he does not think. Thinking is not a passive condition of the mind, but an active process. It is passing from one mental station to another, linking them together, remembering both, and their relations to each other. A thought is never simple, but always complex. A thought never resided in, or even flitted through, the mind of a brute. It is true that the bruto has a certain sort of perceptions away down upon the low plane of instinct, simple, separate, unrelated perceptions. God has connected, in the nature of the brute, this class of perceptions with corresponding apprehensions and appetencies, and there is sometimes, in brute conduct, a faint simulation of thought, but always accompanied with incontestable evidences of its want of genuineness. We may safely lay it down as an unchangeable fact that the brute cannot think. It cannot so much as tread upon the fringes of a thought. A dog does not know that he is a dog, nor that a fox is a fox. A cat does not know that he is a cat, nor that a mouse is a mouse. A brute has no proper intellectual consciousness, and therefore no ground or basis for thought-nature. All thought proceeds upon the plane of consciousness, and cannot advance a hair's breadth on any other ground. The total absence of this foundation in brute-nature is fatal to the theory that brutes can think, and is a satisfactory explanation of the universal fact that they cannot talk.

Turning now to man, we find that every one has this element, from the rudest savage to the most enlightened Caucasian. The dumb man is no real exception. He has the word-power within him, but, owing to certain other deficiences, he cannot bring it to the surface. An exception cannot be named.

The case, then, may be briefly summed up. No brute animal has the word-nature, nor even the basis on which it should rest. No man is without this word-nature. There is, then, a chasm between these two grades of being, across which Nature never traveled, and never can travel, from instinct to reason. Instinct is essentially different from reason—different, not in degree mainly, but in kind. There is not so much as a germ in it, out of which thought could be developed. You might as well demand of Nature that she should evolve a flock of birds from a handful of corn. There is nature in both birds and corn; there is law and life in both; but thus far shalt thou go and no farther. They are not the same nature, the same law, nor the same life. When Mr. Darwin or some other naturalist shall find, in the corn-field, a stalk of corn that produces birds, or, somewhere in the wilderness of undiscovered continents, wild animals that think and talk, then, and not until then, shall we concede that mankind may have sprung from the lower animals.

H. F. LARRABEE.

LAFAYETTE, ALA., Sept. 17, 1879.

The Dancing Harvest.

"Riton," in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, makes some strong and rather startling statements. He says:

There are among us some preachers who are complicating this whole question, and producing a harvest of dancing folks in the church. If they do not directly oppose the teaching of the church upon the subject, they look upon dancing with such an approving wink as to greatly encourage it. There needs to be a restatement of ministerial obligation to the church from which a man receives his ordination. Some men glory in the profession that they will not be trammeled by any creed or system of laws other than that of their own construction. Nobody, I am free to say, should seek to fetter our consciences. But if we are independent of the standards of faith and practice in a church we have voluntarily joined, we ought to be independent of her official endorsement, we ought to be independent of the houses and pulpits which she furnishes, not for her foes, but her friends. It is an impolite and mean thing to accept the shelter and hospitality of a man that we may fight him and divide his family.

Now, the position of the Methodist Church on this dancing question, is positive and unmistakable. It is not necessary for this discussion to decide whether that position is right or wrong; it is not necessary to say whether a practice, which for its success needs the cover of night, out of which daylight knocks more than half the charms, to whose liberties men and women need to be incited by strains of voluptuous music; a practice which is dull and unpracticed save in the mingling of the sexes; a practice whose unbridled tendency is, every season, towards more seductive forms; it is unnecessary, I say, to this discussion, to decide whether it is right or wrong. It is enough to say the Methodist Church condemns it, prescribes laws for its cure, or if it will not be cured, demands that the leper, by pastoral citation and ecclesiastical trial, shall be carried without the camp. It is enough that before the Methodist Church ordains a man she pledges him to execute these laws, particularly cautioning him not to "mend her rules but to keep them." Let it be said, then, that no amount of independence can atone for the perjury of violating this obligation. If a preacher can't live in her house according to her usages, he ought to find the outside amply roomy and comfortable for the full play of his own broad and unique convictions. If her doctrines and her practice are too far behind the advanced condition of his progressive mind, her livings and positions are altogether too homely for his acceptance.

The evil has progressed so far that discipline has become next to impossible on these subjects in some of our churches in the cities and towns. It is not a pleasant thing to say, but it deserves to be said that the locality of the evil seems to prove that some of our leading men who occupy the more prominent appointments are responsible, at least, for the breaking down of our discipline. It is high time they had taken the lead in remedying the disease. Some of us who are younger and less prominent are bewildered. Our heads are confused by some knocks which we have received lately by striking them against metallic walls built around these dancing Methodists, paid for by rich parents and cemented by the negligence of preachers who seem to be pillars in the church. Fortunately, we have the sympathy of that lion-hearted man and evangelical preacher, Bishop Geo. F. Pierce. He seems to be in the business of tearing down these walls. He told me yesterday that he thought of carrying the war into several of our cities this winter. Perhaps, before then it would be a judicious thing for certain preachers among us to reform or resign.

Mexico—Toluca.

OUR WORK ADVANCING.

It is gratifying to hear of the progress of our cause in other fields—China, Brazil and Mexican Border. How cheering to see the evidences of the "growing interest in missions," of which we have heard! The brethren in China must be in good spirits, from the manner in which the Lord of the vineyard has recently been opening the way for the progress of their work in that field. Bro. Sutherland and his preachers give us occasionally cheering news from that section. They are circulating the Evangelista Mexicano, and I trust and pray that it may be useful to their people.

Here we have taken fresh courage for the work since the meeting of the board in May. This, I suppose, was expected; and the cause advances. In the beautiful valley of Toluca, for instance, we have added six new appointments, making enough for two good circuits. Besides, we have good, devoted men in charge of these circuits, prosecuting their work with the spirit of true evangelists.

In the city of Toluca, which is the center of that district, our church is in an encouraging condition. We have not been without trying difficulties there. There has been a special necessity for much faith, patience, prayer and work, but the divine blessing has not been wanting. We "sow in tears." As one passes from point to point, looking at the millions of people that lie in darkness, and facing the difficulties many and great which lie in the way of bringing them to the knowledge and worship of the true God, he cannot for the time restrain the heartache, nor keep back the tears. His faith and courage, his mind and body, are sorely tried. He often thinks that if the church could only understand the true situation, there would not be lacking sympathy, prayers and help to advance the work. One of the greatest difficulties in the path of the missionary would be thus removed. In God we trust, and hope for a brighter day.

In my last visit to Toluca I spent several days. On the Sunday I was there we had in the morning a congregation of fifty persons, at four o'clock a Sunday-school, with forty present, and at night the attentive hearers numbered one hundred, filling our little room to its utmost capacity. Each service was of much interest, but especially the one at night. After the sermon we had the Lord's Supper. It was a solemn occasion. There were more than fifty communicants. All present were deeply impressed. For my part, as I had been sowing in tears, I looked upon the scene with a glad heart, even through tears of joy, and I said: For this object has the church sent me hither, for these results she gives her sympathy, her prayers, her means. May the good Lord gather from this field a richer harvest than the church has yet anticipated.

W. M. PATTERSON.

MEXICO, August 21, 1879.

—Bishop Haven, and the Conference over which he was presiding, went in a body to pay their respects to Gen. Grant when he landed at San Francisco. Grant, as is well known, is the standing nominee of Bishop Haven for the presidency, but, of course, the visit to the general was merely a mark of respect for an eminent private citizen of the nation. Recently, at the session of a Conference in the town where Mr. Colfax resides, that distinguished citizen was introduced to the Conference, and made a speech, which the brethren received with applause. We do not know that these incidents have any particular significance, only they seem rather singular to those of us who are familiar with the usages and ways of our Southern Conferences. We cannot, however, help wondering whether a Democrat of national reputation, happening along, would have received a like courtesy.

—As compared with the backward state of sanitary science in other communities, it is manifestly in its infancy in the South. Scarcely any attention whatever is paid to the subject in the rural districts, and very little in the towns. Not until the present season has there been anything like an earnest and vigorous effort to cleanse New Orleans of its abundant filth. Thorough sanitation requires good drainage, the frequent emptying and disinfection of vaults, rigid and regular inspection of all premises, and compulsion brought to bear upon all property-holders to make them duly vigilant and careful. It will cost heavily, but it is cheaper than disease and epidemics. Whether any sanitary measures will give us exemption from yellow fever is not certain, but the superior healthfulness of this city the present season is generally attributed to the energetic measures of the Board of Health and the Citizen's Sanitary Association. Two things are demanded by the sentiment of the whole country: That imported yellow fever be kept out, and that the city be kept clean. The efforts to secure these objects have been measurably successful this year. They will, we hope, be continued vigorously for the future. The temper of the times is to hold each town to accountability for its sanitary condition, and to regard an epidemic visitation as the result of negligence and carelessness. This may be unjust in many cases, but to secure confidence and prosperity we must keep away fever epidemics. It is health or decay, immunity from the scourge, or the loss of millions, in the way of business and agriculture, annually.

—We deeply regret the death of Col. B. M. Johnson, an old and prominent citizen of Shreveport, La. We see, from the papers, that he died in New York City, September 28. He had for many years been engaged in banking, and was a sagacious and successful business man. On receiving our appointment to Shreveport, in 1851, we bore a letter of introduction to him, and have ever since numbered him among our kindest and best friends. Col. Johnson was the soul of integrity and honor, and the uncompromising enemy of laziness and fraud. A good citizen, public spirited and patriotic, he was a tender and devoted husband and father, and a friend and supporter of the Methodist ministry and church. Our State, and Shreveport especially, have sustained a great loss in his death. We tender to the bereaved family our deep sympathy in their bereavement.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—There is scarcely any occasion for the continuance of our weekly reference to this subject. We have during the past three months given the real condition as accurately as we could. We have had a season of remarkably good health. The few cases of fever have not spread, at this writing there are no cases of fever in the city that we can ascertain, and the danger of the prevalence of the disease may be regarded as past.

Eighty miles west of us, at Morgan City, there is considerable yellow fever, but vigilant measures are in operation to prevent its introduction into New Orleans.

—In our patronizing Conferences the presiding elders are on their fourth round—in many respects the most important Quarterly Conferences of the year. The announcement of the fourth round should be a note of attention to the whole church. Trustees should be ready with their reports, the local preachers with theirs, and the stewards should have the funds in hand or in sight, to meet all demands upon them. There is an easy way of paying the preacher by simply not paying him. There is no civil law nor ecclesiastical to compel payment, and, if there were, it would not be appealed to. It is a debt of honor and of conscience, as sacred a debt as can be, and one that involves the honor and conscience of every member of the church. The stewards must work, and everybody must help the stewards.

—Rev. A. E. Clay, pastor of Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Pattersonville and Morgan City, writes us September 21, that he had been confined to the house, and most of the time to his bed, for a month past. There was some yellow fever at Morgan City, and but for his own prostration he would be there to minister to the people in the time of danger and distress.

—It is reported that some Boston men have established a race course from which betting is to be excluded. It is to be hoped that success may crown their effort, but this remains to be seen. About the only use for a race course is to give gamblers an opportunity to win and lose money. Without betting it would be a place without attractions to those who have chiefly patronized it.

—Rev. J. B. Cottrell, D. D., is now associate editor of the Central Methodist published at Catlettsburg, Ky. Dr. Cottrell is a ready and brilliant talker, and also a versatile and wide awake writer. We wish him health, happiness and usefulness in his connection with the Central.

—President Massey informs us that the Alabama Conference Female College, at Tuskegee, Ala., opens with 107 pupils, and 43 boarders in the College Boarding Department.

One of the tricks connected with the lottery business is exposed in the following paragraph from the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist:

Under the convenient cognomen of Smith a Baltimore Episcopal clergyman is represented in some of the secular papers as having drawn a prize of $40,000 in a lottery. Dr. Fitzgerald, of the Nashville Advocate, thinks it a bogus announcement. We are satisfied it is. We know nothing of it here in Baltimore, nor of any Episcopal preacher of that name. It is a tricky device of some swindling dealer in lottery tickets.

We do not know that all lottery companies are guilty of this kind of deception, but there are tricks in this business which ought not to blind the wary.

President Hendrix, of Central College Missouri, writing to the St. Louis Christian Advocate, September 19, 1879, says:

As anticipated, the college opened on Thursday morning, with the largest attendance in its history. The attendance was fully twenty-five per cent. greater than last year, and over ten per cent greater than that of any former year. We hope to reach one hundred and fifty during the year. "Whi's Hall," our new club house, is filled to overflowing, and promises to be a delightful home for students. Bishop Wightman made an admirable address on opening day, and preaches for us on the Sabbath.

Bishop Pierce, says the St. Louis Christian Advocate, reached the city last week, preached in Centenary Church Sunday morning, and expects to open the annual session of the St. Louis Conference, at Fredericktown, to-day (September 24.)

The Rev. Dr. A. W. Wilson, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of September 20, is so far recovered as to be able to travel, and we are pleased to greet him in Nashville. He shows the effects of his late illness, but is regaining his strength.

Rev. James A. Spurgeon, younger brother and assistant of the Spurgeon, of London, England, has arrived at New York for a brief visit to the United States.

COLIER—THOMAS.—At the residence of the bride's parents, on Lake Ditcheon, Belleville parish, La., September 4, 1879, by Rev. Philip Burkett, Rev. R. S. Colier to Miss Sarah F. Thomas.

Publisher's Department.

While we continue to do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements from the ADVOCATE, parties must judge for themselves as to the real value of the goods advertised. In ordering please mention the ADVOCATE.

THE ADVOCATE

FOR TWENTY-FIVE CENTS TO JANUARY, 1880.

The publisher announces to the thousands of our friends that he will send the paper from date to January next on receipt of twenty-five cents in currency or postage stamps. This is done to facilitate securing new subscribers, and, feeling assured that without slight effort on the part of our patrons, thousands of persons could be induced to take advantage of this trial offer many of whom after that time would become permanent subscribers. Will they exert themselves to swell the list? There is no other investment that will supply the same amount of interesting reading matter, from each week, as this liberal offer. Let us hear from you as early as possible.

THE ADVOCATE FREE.

To any person sending us four yearly subscribers with $4 the paper will be sent free for one year. Sample copies will be mailed to parties when advised, to facilitate agents in securing subscribers. Address all communications in connection with above to the publisher.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS of the staff of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, left Wednesday evening, for the West and East, on business connected with the ADVOCATE. We bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—Fruit jars Mason's pints, $1; quarts, $1 25; two quarts, $1 50 per dozen; American china dinner sets, $15 $18. Equal in looks and usefulness to French China. 12

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those in search of economy this popular hotel offers unsurpassed, rarely seldom found at so the highly a first-class house, having reduced its rates to $1 and $2 per day.

KEWANEE WINDMILL.—For particulars respecting this popular windmill see the ad on the sixth page. It is considered to be the best one in use, and those requiring a reliable and at the same time an economical windmill should buy one from the Kewanee Manufacturing Company, 33 Broadway, New York. They invariably take the premium wherever exhibited. Agents wanted.

UNITED STATES FOUR PER CENT. BONDS.—The New Orleans National Bank, of which A. Baldwin, Esq., is the president, furnish to the United States four per cent. bonds the safest investment one can make with his or her money.

BEATTY PIANOS AND ORGANS.—Those who wish to purchase a piano or cabinet organ should not fail to send to Hon. Daniel F. Beatty of Washington, N. J., for his latest circular. See his advertisement.

WE would invite the attention of the public to the live stock of pianos, organs and musical instruments now displayed in Mr. Philip Werlein's establishment. All who wish anything in the musical line will do well to go there. They will, no doubt, find what they wish.

ROSEDALE COOKING STOVE.—This stove gives perfect satisfaction wherever used. Our readers wanting a first-class stove, one that will last for years, should call and see our friend, G. W. W. Goodwin, 94 Camp street, who keeps a full supply of them. See advertisement.

WARRINGTON'S STEEL PENS.—These celebrated pens have been in the market a great many years, and persons who are now using them would use no other. They are extensively sold in the East and West. Theodore L. Warrington, Esq., 103 and 107 North Fifth street, Philadelphia, is the manufacturer, a gentleman of the highest standing in that city, and it is a pleasure for us to recommend him and his pens to the consideration of the Southern people. Messrs. Lathrop & Wilkins, 112 Camp street, will supply you with any quantity. See advertisement.

CHURCH ORGANS.—Wm. M. Wilson's advertisement will be seen on this page. This concern has been in existence since 1821, and it is unnecessary for us to eulogize their instruments as they are well known in the principal cities of the East. In fact, this old establishment has built organs for almost every State in the country. In Dr. Palmer's Church, and Christ's Episcopal Church, New Orleans, the organs were put in by this firm.

CATARRH REMEDIES.—Dr. M. W. Case, 93 Arch street, Philadelphia, whose advertisement will be seen on this page, has been very successful in the treatment of the above unpleasant disease, as his many testimonials attest. He furnishes the public at the lowest possible price, and his facilities for manufacturing and shipping the remedies are now far superior to what they have ever been before, thus enabling the doctor to fill orders and send them out the same day they are received. Beware of imitators, who try to deceive the public with their worthless compounds. From our knowledge of this gentleman, and from information received, he can be relied on.

KEYSTONE IRON BEDSTEAD WITH WOVEN WIRE SPRING MATTRESS.—Robt. Kelso & Co., of 240 Market street, Philadelphia, manufacture these excellent beds with woven wire spring mattresses, which are very popular in the East, and for warm climates they are fast superceding all others. This is regarded as the best off-red to the public, and for hospitals, asylums, and institutions of all kinds where a bedstead combining the qualities of strength, lightness, cleanliness in use are desired, nothing can equal them. Write to the manufacturers for terms.

GIRARD HOUSE, PHILADELPHIA. Our Southern friends visiting Philadelphia for business or pleasure will find the Girard one of the best kept houses in the East, presided over by Mr. J. McKibbin, well known to a large number of our people. Its some of Philadelphia's most respected citizens, and is held in high esteem by them. This old established hotel is situated on one of the principal streets near the leading business houses, and within easy access to all points of interest. A very important feature in connection with this hotel is its reasonable charges, which are lower than any of the first class houses in Philadelphia. When you arrive there remember Mr. McKibbin and the Girard.

Indigestion, Dyspepsia, nervous prostration and all forms of general debility relieved by taking Hensha's Recognized Beef Tonic, the only preparation of beef containing its entire nutritious properties. It is not a mere stimulant like the extracts of beef, but contains blood-making, force-generating and life-sustaining properties invaluable in all enfeebled conditions, whether the result of exhaustion, nervous prostration, overwork or acute disease; particularly if resulting from protracted complaints. FARWELL, HAZARD & CO., Proprietors, New York. Sold by druggists.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, chap, blister or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

NOT A BEVERAGE.

"They are not a beverage but a medicine, with curative properties of the highest degree, containing no poison nor drug. They do not tear down an already debilitated system, but build it up. One bottle contains more drops than is in one real hop strength than a barrel of ordinary beer. Every druggist in Rochester sells them; and the physicians prescribe them."—Rochester Evening Express on Hop Bitters.

THE Russian Court invited Dr. Ayer and his family to the Archduke's wedding in the Royal Palace. This distinction was awarded him not only because he was an American, but also because his name as a physician had become favorably known in Russia on its passage round the world.—Pueblo (Col.) People.

WE congratulate Messrs. Wheelock, Finlay & Co., of New Orleans, La., upon their happy idea of giving to the public information of the contents of Dr. F. Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic, which of late has gained such well deserved popularity among the people. As far as we know, this is the only proprietary remedy for the cure of Chills and Fever, the composition of which is not kept a secret. For sale by all druggists.

Have Confidence

And when Yellow Fever is prevailing take precaution to avoid an attack by making a judicious use of Maguire's Dispharago, which will regulate the liver, remove the bile, cleanse the stomach, purify the blood and revivify the system.

QUERU'S COD LIVER OIL JELLY.

APPROVED by the Academy of Medicine of New York for coughs, colds, bronchial and throat affections, scrofula and general debility. The most rapid blood and nutritious food in which Cod Liver Oil can be used, and with more benefit secured to the patient by a single teaspoonful of this Jelly than by double the quantity of the liquid oil, and the most delicate stomach will not reject it. For sale by all druggists, and E. H. TAFT, N. Y., Lat. 40, New York.

TESTS FOR HONEY.—The following tests for detecting adulterations in honey are given in "Gleanings in Bee Culture," by Mr. H. E. Curry:

"Wheat starch is detected as follows: Dilute a little in water and add a drop of iodine. On placing it on the stage of the microscope the starch grains will be seen colored dark purple. Cane sugar is not easily detected, except by the taste; or if granulated, the difference in the crystals can readily be seen under the microscope, as they are much larger than those of honey. The most common as well as the most dangerous adulteration just now is glucose. As honey itself contains a large proportion of this, some chemists say it is impossible to detect it by any simple means; and so it would be if it could be made strictly pure. Glucose is made by allowing a mixture of starch and water at a temperature of one hundred and thirty degrees to flow into a vat containing water acidulated with one per cent. of sulphuric acid and kept at a boiling point. In half an hour or so the starch is converted into sugar; the liquid is drawn off, and the acid neutralized by the addition of lime. The subsequent minor process depend upon the uses to which it is to be put.

"Those beautiful corn syrups which we see at grocery stores are the finest qualities. Some samples are as clear as crystal. A commoner grade is used by brewers, and is also used to 'doctor' honey. It is very thick—due to a considerable quantity of dextrine contained in it. This can be seen by treating it with alcohol. The alcohol will dissolve the glucose, but leave the dextrine which will resemble a white gum.

"Honey mixed with alcohol will dissolve completely; therefore if dextrine is found in honey it may be pronounced adulterated. To test for sulphuric acid: dissolve a little honey in distilled water in a clear glass vessel; after which pour in a drop of twice chloride of barium. Any manufactured glucose is present a white sediment will be found, but if the honey is pure it will remain as clear as before.

"Every one engaged in making tests should be perfectly clear. Those golden grains which can be seen in honey under the microscope, will show to a close student the source from which the honey came. Extracted honey will contain pollen.

LIME ON POULTRY IN SUMMER.—W. F. P. in the American Stockman, writes thus on this subject: "It is much more difficult to disinfect them when once they have gotten inside the poultry-house than it is to prevent them from getting started.

"By keeping the house cleaned out once a week, and the floor well sprinkled with air-slaked lime, and applying to the sides and ceiling at least twice a year a yellow coating of whitewash, you will not be troubled gerously with lice, especially if you pay strict attention to having new, fresh nests as often as necessary, burning the old ones.

"Use some good plan to dust the fowls and nests with Persian insect powder. The proper way to sprinkle it is to blow it among their feathers and on their nests with a bellows. They are a cheap affair and can be had of any poultry breeder as well as the grocer. Another good way to dislodge the lice in case they get a foothold in your houses is to take a small sprinkling can filled with kerosene and sprinkle the floor, sides and nests with it. I seldom like Persian powder or kerosene.

"There will be a great many who will say, 'There are no lice in my poultry-house.' To them I will say, 'Just make up your mind that you are mistaken and go out to the chicken house with a hammer, knock down your roosts, examine the under side and wherever they lodge at the ends and then see what you can see. In nine cases out of ten you will find little patches of what seem to be little red specks and powdered silver; put on a little powder and see them jump; or, take a fowl, examine it closely under the wings, moving the feathers so as to see the skin, and you will find more or less vermin, especially in summer.

"As the warm weather comes on, it is a good plan to give fowls a tonic of some kind. Tincture of iron is a good thing. It is handy and cheap, and should be constantly on hand. It is strengthening both for fowls and man. The proper way to use it is to put a tablespoonful in a quart of water."

WINTER PROTECTION OF ROSES.—The Western Rural says: "When it is desired to preserve plants over winter without removal, it can be done by either of the following methods, which can be varied at the pleasure and convenience of the operator: In winter protection there are a few observations that should be kept steadily in view. 1. Do not give too much protection: this is worse than not enough. 2. Defer covering for winter as late as possible; undercare freezing is not injurious. 3. Uncover at the proper time in the spring; just when this is, is difficult to direct, as it must depend on the locality, the weather, and the season. It should, of course, not be done until the frost has entirely left the ground, and the growing season is at hand. If the plants have but a slight protection, such as evergreen boughs or straw, a few days earlier or later will not make much difference; but if covered closely they are in a condition to be more easily injured by sudden changes in the temperature, or drying winds, and should, therefore, not be uncovered until there is a prospect of reasonably set let weather, and even then it is well to cut off at least one half of last season's growth, in order to guard against too rapid evaporation."

SUCCOTASH.—Take the cobs and silk from a dozen ears of sweet corn, and with a sharp knife cut the kernels from the cob; scrape gently what remains on the cob with the knife blade; string a quart or more of green beans and cut them in inch lengths, or shorter; wash them, and put them, with the corn, into a stew pan; add half a pint of boiling milk, cover it close and let them boil rather gently for three quarters of an hour; then add a teacup of butter, a teaspoonful of salt, and a salt spoonful of pepper; stir them well together, cover it for ten minutes, take the beans and corn into a dish, with more or less of the liquids as may be liked. This dish may be made without butter, by substituting half a pound of nicely corned fat pork, washed in cold water, and cut in slices as thin as a knife blade. No other salt is required. Lima beans and sweet corn make the finest succotash.

ON THE CARE OF THE FEET.—A clever writer says that the feet should be given as nice care as the hands, beginning with a bath of fifteen minutes in hot soap and water, followed by scraping with an iron knife, and rubbing with a ball of sandstone. The nails may be left to take care of themselves, with constant bathing and well-fitting shoes, unless they have begun to grow into the flesh, when all to be done is to scrape a groove lengthwise in each corner of the nail. The whole foot should be anointed with purified olive oil, or oil of sweet almonds, after such a bath. The oil will soak off the old skin, and wear away the scaly tissue about the nails, while it renders the sole as soft and pliant as those of a young child. Such treatment persisted in will make the foot as supple and elastic as the Arab's, and helps to realize that highbred ideal figure that so few women ever approach.

THE CABBAGE WORM.—An Indiana farmer says: "Last year was a very bad one to get cabbages to head, the drainage was so bad. Below I give a remedy that is sure death to them: For every hundred heads of cabbage take a quarter of a pound of black pepper and put it in a box large enough to sift on well. Go into the patch before the dew is off and pepper them well. Two or three times will be sufficient. The worms go through the leaves and die. I have used salt for the cabbage worm, at the rate of a large teacupful of salt to a pail of water, for the last two years with perfect success; two applications have been all that was needed; it killed the worms, or at least they died, without hurting the cabbage at all.—W. V. Granger, N. Y.

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

707 Octavo pages—Over 200 Illustrations.

Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstration about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be so completed; and, in addition to comprising all it sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

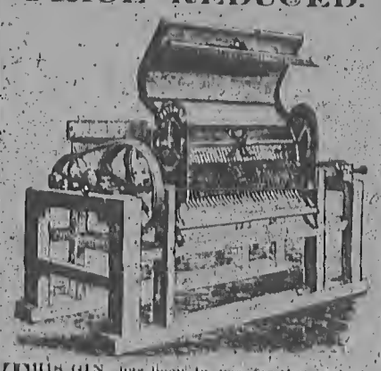
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin,
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.
PRICE REDUCED.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past six seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the end of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same amount of seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work with the same time, while consuming steam of minimal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton, on this account, of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every bale ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

THE NORTH-EAST PASSAGE.—Professor Nordenskjold, gives the following account of his voyage in making the northeast passage: "We crossed Kolinschin Bay September 27th, with comparative ease, but were imprisoned on the 28th near a Tchuktchi settlement (latitude 67 degrees 7 minutes north, longitude 177 degrees 24 minutes west.) We wintered in the pack ice at this point, one mile from land. The entire ship's company maintained the best health and spirits. Not a single case of scurvy occurred on board. During the shortest day the sun was above the horizon less than three hours, and then only the upper limb was visible. At this point much time was devoted to interesting scientific and ethnographic studies. There were four thousand inhabitants in the several villages near by, who subsisted by fishing and reeling. They are called the Tchuktchi and are a very agreeable class of people for an exploring party to meet. They supplied the expedition with bear and reindeer meat. The cold was intense, averaging 36 centigrade (72.2 degrees below Fahrenheit). The game was abundant in the spring, wild fowl being taken in large numbers. We were detained in the ice at this point two hundred and sixty-four days, but were released on July 18th and passed East Cape into Behring Straits on the 28th. Such is the story of our voyage. I fully accomplished the object for which the expedition was sent out by Dr. Dickson—namely, a practical proof of the existence of a northeast passage. Then the Asiatic coast was followed, and St. Lawrence Bay was crossed to Port Clarence, Alaska. Thence we crossed to Koniyan, dredging carefully in order to determine the formation of the bottom of the sea, many specimens of the fauna and flora being obtained. Observation, breadth, velocity and approximate volume of the currents of the Arctic and Pacific Polar currents were carried and calculated. Having reached St. Lawrence Island, we next proceeded to Behring Island, where we received the first news from Europe through the kindness of the agent of the Alaska Trading Company. The total remains on Behring Island are of immense variety. A new marine animal was here discovered, which we named Rhytina stelleri. The Vega left the island on August 19th, and had a pleasant voyage until August 31st, when a severe gale was encountered, accompanied with lightning, during the time of lightning struck and severed the main spar, seriously injuring several men. We arrived off Yokohama at half past eight on the evening of September 2d. All are well, and no deaths have occurred during the voyage. The Vega is the first vessel to make the passage, and I take it the voyage from Europe to Behring Straits is certain and safe, with very little more expense or vexation to the northern seas. From Japan to the mouth of the Lena River there are no different seas in the proper season for experienced sailors. The Lena River empties directly into a large and open sea, which may be passed in a few days. The Vega will remain at Yokohama about three weeks."—Evening Post.

Many attempts have been made, says the Scientific American, to separate the mineral oil smell successfully from petroleum and preserve A new process has recently been patented in England which has, it is said, proved satisfactory. The crude petroleum is treated with a solution of caustic soda, which neutralizes the fatty matters and takes them up, and in many cases they are powerfully detergent and disinfectant, and baths formed by them do not putrify even after use. Such baths have a general influence upon the human organism which is quite peculiar, and may be best explained by a particular example. Assuming the oil to be treated to be rectified crude petroleum and the concentrated lye made use of, the latter is melted in a water bath, and poured into the petroleum, which is in an ordinary temperature, thus set in a state of violent agitation. The petroleum is thus divided into very minute drops, and comes in contact with the lye in a large number of points. After thorough mixture, by stirring for a short time, a complete separation of the former from the latter takes place by weight

"LIEN! BIG LIEN!"

Not so fast my friend; for if you would see the strong, healthy, blooming men, women and children that have been raised from beds of sickness, suffering and almost death, by the use of Hop Bitters, you would say "Truth, glorious truth." See "Truths," in another column.—Adv.

WHEAT CAKES BROWN.—One pint wheat flour; a quart of milk; a little salt; two eggs, or none, as you choose; a tablespoonful molasses to make them brown; and two tablespoonfuls Kellogg's Baking Powder. Bake soon as mixed. No waiting.

—A learned clergyman in the State of Maine was accosted in the following manner by an illiterate preacher, who despised education: "Sir, you have been to college, I suppose?" "Yes, sir," was the reply. "I am thankful," replied the former, "that the Lord has opened my mouth to preach without any learning." "A similar event," replied the clergyman, "took place in Balaam's time, but such things are of rare occurrence in the present day."

VASELINE.

You may hunt the world over and still will not find
A need of the household while looking to the mind
The ices of winter more pleasing be seen
Than petroleum jelly, the famed Vaseline.

If a cut or a sprain, or a wound or a burn
From peace to confusion, the household shall turn.
On the shelf should be found the foe of all pain
And quiet shall reign in the household again.

If our dearest and fairest are seized by the skin,
And the touch of his hand is too rough to be borne,
Kind Vaseline comes as surely be ween
And the cheek takes on velvet it had not else seen.

If the voice it is husky, the throat it is sore,
Take the jelly at once, and the trouble is o'er.
In fact read the circular, and from it glean
All the virtue and claims of the famed Vaseline.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER.

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventive for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE PORUS PLASTERS. They were used during the last season in New Orleans very successfully, the common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach; changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS, and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the circulation and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the miasmal poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventive. Ask your physicians about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a safe preventive and cure for chills, and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

—Two Irishmen, traveling on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad track, came to a mile-post, when one of them said: "Tread aisy, Pat—Here lies a man 108 years old. His name was Miles, from Baltimore."

MISCELLANEOUS.

TUTT'S PILLS

SYMPTOMS OF A
TORPID LIVER.

Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Pain in the Head, with dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder-blade, Fullness after eating, with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering of the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache generally over the right eye, Restlessness with disturbed dreams, highly colored Urine. IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED, SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED.

TUTT'S PILLS are especially adapted to such cases, one dose effects such a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.

CONSTIPATION.

Or by neglecting to keep the bowels in regular health by one of these Pills, large amounts of indigestible matter are allowed to accumulate, and poisons are absorbed into the blood, which should be expelled by these natural channels. Many diseases begin in constipation, and the liver, the great laboratory of the system, is the organ first affected. Dyspepsia, Piles, Fistula, Hemorrhoids, Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Gout, Kidney Troubles, Nervousness, Sick Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Blindness, Dizziness, Neuralgia, Pain in the Side, Back and Limbs, Female Irregularities, Fever and Ague, Chills, Malaria, Impure Blood, Scrofula, Erysipelas, Eruptions of the Skin, Boils, Humors, Tetter, Scald Head, Ringworm, Scurf, Dandruff, Consumption, Scrofulous Humors of the Lungs, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Sore Throat, Ulcers, Abscesses, Diseases of the Blood, Kidneys and Bladder, are the offspring of Constipation.

Dr. F. Guy Lewis, Felton, Ark., says: "After a thorough trial I pronounce TUTT'S PILLS the best anti-bilious medicine sold."

Rev. J. R. Osgood, New York, says: "I have had Dyspepsia Worst Stamp and Nervousness. For a year I could not sleep. Tried many so-called remedies. TUTT'S PILLS, they are as represented, 'par excellence.'"

BEST PIANOS AND ORGANS.

Lowest Prices,

Liberal Terms.

My stock consists of the unrivaled

Chickering Pianos,

The Excellent

Mathushek Pianos,

The Reliable and Fine Toned

Hale Pianos.

These Pianos possess all the desirable musical and mechanical qualities of first-class Pianos, and have reached a point of excellence which it seems scarcely possible to surpass. They are constructed of the very best material throughout, and are of the finest workmanship. Their tone is sonorous and brilliant, and possesses a peculiar singing quality found in no other Piano. All improvements developed in the Art of Piano-making during the last ten years in European or this country have been applied to the above Pianos. As to DURABILITY these Pianos are unsurpassed. Not only will they last during a life time, but their tone will actually IMPROVE by use for many years.

Prices lower than they have ever been, and my terms to suit every purse.

SECOND HAND PIANOS

Which have been rented out during the winter for sale at half their value on payments of from

TESTIMONIALS FROM WELL-KNOWN PERSONS.

From Mrs. General Sherman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 21, 1870.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very much pleased with the Piano you made for me. It is really a fine instrument in every respect and is admired by all who have seen and heard it. For its fine tone, delicacy of touch and beauty of finish. Many good musicians and distinguished persons have called since it has been in our parlor, and all pronounce it a fine instrument. We ourselves are charmed with it. I shall most certainly recommend it to my friends who may wish to purchase.

I am, very truly and respectfully yours.

ELLEN B. E. SHERMAN,
205 I Street.

St. James, December 27, 1873.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very happy to be able to rank your Pianos as one of the very best I ever had and saw. I think the touch and brilliancy of tone required to perform the great pieces of modern and classical masters are equal to any Piano made in this country. Hoping that your Pianos will also stand our climate as well as any other manufactured at the North I shall with much pleasure recommend them wherever I have an opportunity. Very respectfully yours.

ANTHONY WIMMER,
Professor of Music, St. Mary, Jefferson College, St. James, La., (Convent, P. O.)

From the World Renowned Artist, Camilla Urso.

NEW YORK, May 27, 1873.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—After giving your Piano a fair trial I am happy to congratulate you upon the achievements you have made. Your instruments possess rare merits, and it gives me much pleasure to recommend them to the public.

Yours truly, CAMILA URSO.

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be restored to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5 or to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

SHARED.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

I met it in the meadow path,
I saw it on the mountain-side,
Past things and present shared it with me,
And those which every day divides.

The air we breathe, the sky—the ocean,
Daylight without us and within—
Life with its undocked treasuries—
God's riches are for all to win.

The grass is short for my friend,
For me it yields one scented spear;
Some flowers I find, some he may find,
Because he makes the whole world sweet.

Or heavenly loveliness
Welcomed me, Orpheus peaks!
And in each eye I look for it
We secretly spy mystery seeks.

Yet up the radiant prophet way
I go with all the world unknown,
Beyond the highest hill of day
And past the sunset's crimson throne.

Alone I breathe the untried air,
Alone I climb the heights untrod,
But God is with me everywhere,
And Christ is nearer than a friend.

Yet not alone, for in my heart
Forever sings the unbidden bird
Whose song is more than all the rest,
Because my soul has always heard.

—Good Company.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

YORK RIVER, Col., Sept 29.—Yorktown's outpost was attacked on the 27th at Lee's Ford, one mile south of Yorktown, by an unknown force, on an attempt to the Agency, and was defeated in good order to the wagon train. There are low intrenching ourselves.

Thornburgh was killed instantly during the retreat. Capt. Payne was wounded in two places slightly. Lieut. Paddock and Capt. Grimes were also painfully wounded. Ten soldiers and Wagon-master McKenzie were killed and twenty-five men wounded. The command is now very well sheltered. Cannon now and then are heard the guns of the new troops, who have just arrived. Our mules and horses are getting ill all around us. The red devils fired the grass all around us to burn us out.

MOBILE, Sept. 30.—A quarantine restrictions against New Orleans have it is said been removed by the Commissioners of the county, and by the port of Mobile.

NEW YORK, Oct. 2.—At the annual meeting of the trustees of the Peabody education fund, Dr. Sears, general agent, read his report. It states that the necessity for the general Government granting some aid to the Southern States in their efforts to educate the ignorant classes is greater now than ever before, as the evils that grow out of popular ignorance spread a blight over the whole country. With two millions of children still without instruction, the danger of the situation is apparent.

ADRIAN, Mich., Oct 3.—At the county fair yesterday, when two thousand persons assembled on the grand stand to witness the race, when the centre of the stand gave way and a mass of people were precipitated into the river. In the rear and upon the ground in front. Six were killed and a large number more or less severely injured.

NORFOLK, N. Y. Oct. 3.—Forest fires are raging fiercely in this vicinity destroying farm houses, barns and farm property. Many roads are impassable on account of the flames. The loss cannot be estimated, nor can it be known how much damage will be done, as the wind has been blowing strong for the past twenty-four hours. There is no indication of rain, and the loss to the surrounding country will be very heavy.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—The Assistant Attorney-General for the Post Office Department, upon a case recently submitted to him, has given his opinion that under the 226th section of the regulations (which is section 3894 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of July 12th, 1876,) letters addressed to lottery companies, or to individuals, when addressed to them as agents for such companies, are amenable per se, and that postmasters should refuse to register orders when so addressed. A circular has been issued in accordance with its conclusions, instructing all postmasters to refuse to mail or register letters so addressed, or to mail or register circulars in schemes, against which the Postmaster General has issued orders under provisions of sections 871 and 1045 of the postal laws and regulations of 1879. A list of these schemes, nearly 100 in number, may be found in the September and October guide.

LOS PINOS COLORADO, Oct. 5.—A runner just in from the White River agency reports that the agent and employees are killed. There has been a fight with the troops, in which the officers in command were killed.

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—A severe norther set in September 8 on the coast of Tabasco, Mexico, continuing six days, during which twelve foreign vessels were lost. Two sailors were drowned; all others saved.

GREENVILLE, Oct. 6.—Nine new cases and three deaths at Concordia since last report. The new cases are Mrs. Mayson, Mrs. Tape, Joe Zeigler, John Scott, Gordon Norton, Alonzo Atkins, and three deaths—Corn Ray, colored, Mrs. Herndon and Jno. Scott, white.

Sheriff Wilson, Joe Zeigler and Mrs. Mayson are very low.

The relief fund is exhausted and help is needed more than ever. Concordia again appeals to her sister towns for assistance.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 6. Evening.—Sixteen new cases in all—seven white and nine colored—were reported to the Board of Health today. Among those reported this afternoon were Mrs. Anne Werne and Willie Werne.

Three additional deaths have occurred—Robert Rensher, at Wilson Station, three and a half miles southeast of the city.

Donations to the Howards to day aggregated $424 64.

Three more cases of fever have developed at Huntyn Station. The persons stricken are Minnie Foley, Mollie Kennedy and Dudley Wan—the last named colored. The Howards have sent nurses to the sick.

Jim Humphreys, colored, was stricken with fever this afternoon at Huntyn Station, where six people are prostrated with the disease, which seems to be spreading in that locality. Mrs. Thomas Cubbins is dying.

Frank Bannon was arrested this afternoon for violating quarantine rules by bringing shed cotton into the city. His trial is set for to-morrow.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, Sept. 23.—The President's message, delivered to Congress on the 16th, is long and devoted principally to international affairs, but says the foreign relations of Mexico are of the most amicable character. No new embarrassments have arisen to render difficult a complete agreement with the United States. It refers to the general prosperity of the country, and declares against re-election.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 1.—11,854 persons were incarcerated in the central prison at Moscow during the summer, 19,177 of whom were condemned to exhile in Siberia.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—The Standard's Kashgar correspondent learns from officers of the Ameer's followers that the Ameer left Cabul for the interior. His intended departure was kept a strict secret. The Ameer was received by the British with a guard of honor. The appears dejected and care worn.

LONDON, Oct. 2.—A dispatch to the Standard from Vienna says: The disturbance in East Roumelia is exciting a quiet to war. There is a ferment among well-disciplined soldiers in the mountainous district on the west.

SIMLA, Oct. 2.—The British camp at Shirpur Garden was insidiously attacked yesterday by some independent hostile tribes of that district. The enemy was pursued with a loss of twenty killed. The British loss was six wounded. The 5th Regiment of Sikhs and 1st 21st Punjaub native infantry held a strong position in Shirpur Garden Pass.

HAVANA, Oct. 5.—Nineteen deaths from yellow fever occurred in the city last week, being a decrease of ten from the week previous.

SIMLA, Oct. 6.—Rejoicing details of the skirmish of the 5th ult. are received. Reinforcements from Cashmere. There is reason to hope Pass, the worst is now over, but fighting is constantly occurring. The enemy is severely punished by the Mahsuds and has evinced considerable.

CAPE TOWN, Oct. 6.—Colesworth's wife appointed by Cetewayo as regent for Prince Dingaan against the British and hoped the Queen would pardon him and allow him to return home. He declared she was punished and no longer a king.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

RUSSELLVILLE, ALA., Sept. 25.—Our fourth quarterly meeting was held September 13 and 14. The preacher's salary about fourths paid. Bishop's and Conference claims and domestic missions fully met. A deficit of $12 on foreign missions. Received four members by letter at Russellville, making thirty additions this year. A new church is about ready for preaching.

THOS. F. DAVIS.

PRATTVILLE CIRCUIT, ALA., Sept 30. We have held two camp meetings in this district, at Clanton and Cox's Station, in Randolph circuit. They were largely attended, and the results were very satisfactory. About fifty were added to the church. We had a good deal of plain, pointed, spiritual preaching, and good preaching not much reading; but I do not feel called upon to include the names of all these good brethren before the public, much less to proclaim what learned, eloquent sermons they preached. The increase on the district will be respectable. The finances are coming up pretty well. Health generally good. Preachers are well and at their post. Crops pretty fair. Cotton about as last year.

A. D. MITCHELL.

DAYTON, ALA., Sept. 30. Our third Quarterly Conference met at this place September 13 and 14. Rev. J. W. Rush, P. E., was with us. The communion service on Sabbath was a precious season of grace. The meeting was protracted several days, and, though we had no outbursts of revival influence, yet we believe substantial good was done in the church. I am greatly obliged to Bros. Geo. F. Ellis and J. D. Simpson for valuable services rendered. Since the rains ceased crop prospects have improved with us. The doctors are busy with the sick; some deaths among the children.

A. HAWKINS.

JACKSON, ALA., Sept. 30.—The camp meeting at Sims' Chapel, St. Stephens circuit, Alabama Conference, began September 11, and closed September 16. It resulted in fifty-five professed conversions, quite a number of backsliders reclaimed, many Christians made happy in the love of God, twenty-three applications for church membership, several promised to erect the family altar, and a good time generally. Dr. Wadsworth, assisted by three traveling and three local preachers, did the pulpit work. It was good to be there. The good work is still going on in the neighborhoods contiguous to the camp ground.

W. H. MORRIS.

PERRYVILLE, ALA., Sept. 30.—We have held another meeting since our last communication, resulting in twelve accessions to the church; several others are expected to join my next appointment; several converted that will go to the Baptist Church. Two of my churches were greatly revived in this meeting. Some backsliders were reclaimed. Ten or twelve mourners were in the altar when the meeting closed. All promised to seek until relieved. A. J. COUSINS, P. C.

SHEFFIELD, ALA., Oct. 1.—During the year we have had fifty-six conversions, eighty accessions, and baptized seventy-six children, and the good work is still going on. We have raised over $350 for building and repairing churches. We believe all the claims against the circuit will be paid. Rev. A. M. Jones, of the Alabama Conference, now engaged as colporteur, has been with us recently. He is doing a fine work, and should have the prayers, sympathy and co-operation of the brethren.

JOHN L. FERGUSON.

LOOKOFF MOUNTAIN MISSION, ALA., Oct. 1.—I have held four protracted meetings, resulting in over forty conversions, and the same number of accessions. Backsliders were reclaimed, and the membership greatly revived and strengthened. Baptized sixteen infants and twenty adults. I have two other meetings to hold. The mission is in a prosperous condition, and will soon develop into a circuit.

J. A. NEELY, P. C.

GREENVILLE, ALA., Oct. 2.—I returned yesterday from the Rutledge camp meeting, two miles from Rutledge, Crenshaw county. From the beginning to the end God was present to bless. It will never be known till the last day how many were converted. The number was large. Twenty-two joined the church. Several thousand people were present on Sunday. Bro. Owens, the pastor of Rutledge circuit, deserves credit for the establishment of this new camp ground. The Lord will make it blessing.

WM. MOTLEY.

CARROLLTON, ALA., Oct. 3.—My meeting at Emory Chapel resulted in a most gracious revival. Had thirty-seven conversions and twenty-four accessions; church revived. Have since organized two prayer meetings. Closed one, him shop, and still the work goes on. This has been a pleasant and profitable year to me and, I hope, to the church. Health is good. Finances better. Crops fine.

W. M. P. RUFF.

MISSISSIPPI.

EUREKA, MISS., Sept. 23.—Nearing the close of the third round on Grenada district, North Mississippi Conference. Most of the charges are blessed with revivals; some in great power. Solar nearly four hundred have professed religion, 142 most of whom have joined our church. We have in the district a faithful and laborious corps of pastors, and the fruit of their earnest labors is being gathered in; several new churches finished and others repaired. The health of the country is good, and crops average as good as usual. Our Conference seems to be blessed with revivals throughout.

THOS. F. RAMSEY.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., Sept. 25.—Just returned from holding a meeting at Hamilton and Hallum's Mills, three miles west of Beauregard. Preached two days and nights beginning Tuesday night. Fifteen converted and received into the church. Eight children baptized. Went to Union Chapel last night, and received members who were applicants, and baptized eleven children. Gathered nineteen lambs on this trip.—S. B. YOUNG.

DOVER, MISS., Sept. 29.—I am just through with my protracted meetings. Several conversions; twelve accessions; churches revived; assisted by the Rev. W. E. Ballard. I am trying to bring up all claims ordered by the Conference. Cotton crop good. Corn moderate. People are busy. Health good.

RALPH BUXLEY, P. C.

HOLMESVILLE, MISS., Sept. 30.—Just home after an absence of nearly three weeks, traveling and preaching in Amite, Wilkinson, Franklin and Lincoln counties. Have held protracted meetings at all my churches. Results: plenty additions to the church, about the same number of conversions, and the church in places greatly revived. Crops cut very short. The storm did immense damage to crops and water-mills; farmers and merchants are discouraged. Preacher lives in hopes of better times. Much sickness in places. Peace and quiet reign. Not much excitement about elections.

H. P. LEWIS.

CAMDEN, MISS., Oct. 1.—The result of our protracted service at Camden was cheering. Church greatly revived, several conversions and six accessions. Both churches are now in a good condition.

W. D. TOMINICK.

COLD WATER, MISS., Oct. 1.—Crops are fair, both corn and cotton. Fine weather for gathering. Farmers are in pretty good spirits. Preachers throughout the district report fine revivals and large accessions. Conference is approaching, and we are preparing for it. Hope to report collections in full.

T. V. RAMSEY, JR.

ABERDEEN, MISS., Oct. 2.—The Aberdeen district is in a good condition. Some six hundred conversions, many accessions. Finances tolerable. Several new churches built; others repaired. Sunday-school interest encouraging. Preachers are at their posts, and busy. Crops generally good. Weather very warm for this season. Political excitement is high and rising. Bishop Paine is in pretty fair health; leaves in a few days for the Tennessee Conference.

AMOS KENDALL.

WAYNESBORO, MISS., Oct. 4.—I have just closed a pleasant meeting at this place. Twenty-two persons united with the church at Waynesboro. Good congregations, and increased to the last. The church was revived and renewed. How many were converted is not known. We are indebted to Rev. J. O. Andrews, of the Alabama Conference, for valuable services three days, and to Rev. G. M. Gilmore, for four days' valuable service, and also a layman, Bro. Moore, from Mobile, helped us singing, praying and talking. We have received into the church this year over sixty members. We have now instituted class meetings and extra prayer meetings, and striking for higher ground.

W. B. HINES.

LOUISIANA.

WINNSBOROUGH, LA., Sept. 26.—We have just closed a most interesting meeting at Oakley Church. God has visited His people in great power and love. The Holy Ghost came down in converting and sanctifying power. Fifteen accessions to the church. Over thirty-five conversions, and about thirty claimed sanctification. The good work is going on. Bro. Allen and Bro. Chambers assisted us in the meeting. The cotton crop is good. Corn not so good. General health of the country good.

T. S. RANDLE, P. C.

TRENTON, LA., Sept. 29.—Since the fifth Sunday in June we have had eight conversions and fourteen accessions to the church on our work. Our church members, many of them, are lively and active. Our Sunday-schools (two) are doing very well. Our prayer meetings are tolerably well attended, and are pleasant. The preacher is well cared for, and I think our finances will come out all right. Health has been very good. Crops rather short.

JAMES L. WRIGHT, P. C.

WASHINGTON, LA., Sept. 29.—Are building a church on Bayou Boeuf; laid the corner stone last week. Prayer and class meetings prospering in Washington and on Bayou Boeuf. Prospect brightening on Waxha. Six persons have joined the church, and six others have entered into rest from imbred sin within the last two weeks. Corn, cane and cotton crops are very good for the season. Cotton injured some by the storm. Health tolerably good.

J. E. WYNN.

COLUMBIA, LA., Oct. 3.—Our camp meeting at Welcome Home commenced on the twenty-fourth instant, and closed last Tuesday—one of the most glorious ever held here. The work of the Lord commenced at the beginning. Fifty conversions, backsliders reclaimed and eight accessions to the church. Peace was felt throughout the surrounding country. Will begin hereafter annually on Wednesday before the last Sabbath in September. We are attacking all along the line.

ROBT. S. ISBELL, P. C.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MARIANNA, LA., Sept. 25.—Have closed the third round of Quarterly Conferences. Preachers are at their posts, reporting, in the aggregate, additions, fifty-three; adults, baptized, fifty-five; infants, thirty-one; deaths, four. Finances are behind. We enter the fourth quarter to do three-fourths of our work. Hard work; short time. Preachers and people look hopeful; appear determined to meet demands, and report progress at Conference. Health medium. Crops damaged.

The Work in China.

Our China Visitor for July opens with the following address to the Southern Methodists:

MY DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH, U. S. A.:

Thanks be to God, there are living witnesses in this land of spiritual darkness, that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin. But like Nicodemus, they want to be led gently and taught the way of faith. It is a new way to them and they must be taught like little children. I know the hearts of many of our dear Christian friends in America would rejoice to see with what interest they listen to the story of the Saviour's suffering, death and resurrection, even if they do not easily grasp the meaning or comprehend all that is said to them. Theirs has been a life of spiritual death and darkness envelopes their minds, and it is only the blessed influence of God's holy spirit which can bring to them "the true light which lighteneth every man." One of our native preachers told us of Dr. Taylor's preaching in Shanghai twenty-seven or eight years since, on the straight and narrow way that leadeth to life, and as he portrayed to his audience the great difficulty of walking in this way, a countryman in the audience, being accustomed to narrow paths arose and proposed to his friends, that he could be one to go and help repair that narrow way.

Many of these people are incapable of reasoning, and though they often appear to be listening with the utmost attention, their thoughts are wandering, and suddenly, in the midst of your discourse on some interesting subject, you are asked, "What is your name?" What country are you from? What are your clothes made of? Are you cold? But with all these difficulties, the word of God is entering into good ground and many feel that there is a power and a reality in the religion of Jesus. One great need is a trained native ministry, imbued with the spirit of the living God and feeling the power of the gospel in their own hearts. We want to see them thoroughly acquainted with the doctrines of Christianity and above all fully equipped with the sword of the spirit.

We want men, baptized with that power from on high which shall enable them to understand fully the importance of the atonement, and constrain them with love to labor for the salvation of their fellowmen. Good seed is being sown and much is falling in good ground, but we pray for more faith in the seed sown and in the Lord of harvest, and we pray for grace that we may patiently wait for the fruit. For over thirty years in Madagascar, from 1638 to 1863, the good seed sown by holy men, was growing secretly but surely and the whole world was amazed at the wonderful result. The Missionaries there had their trials as they were sowing good seed, for they labored long and patiently with but little fruit. Ten years since there were not ten converts to Christianity in Japan, and to-day there are more than two thousand. The whole island of Japan is feeling the power of Christianity. It has been but 73 years since the first protestant missionary entered China, and to-day there are more than fifteen thousand converts to Christianity. Within the past two years many thousand have renounced idolatry and now profess faith in Christ. Whole villages have burned their idols and are now reading the word of God. In some parts of the empire more than three hundred persons have been received into the church at one time. What a change! Twenty-five years since, we were not allowed to go beyond a radius of 30 miles and to return the same day to our homes at the open ports. To-day we have access to this vast empire of four hundred million souls, and can preach freely the blessed gospel of our divine Redeemer.

Within fifty years, more than three hundred islands of the Polynesian group have renounced idolatry. In the Fiji Islands there are men in pulpits who remember the taste of human flesh. There are some in the church in China who remember the sacrifices they have often made to idols, and worse still, the murders they have committed in the destruction of their own children. The missionary in heathen lands has his trials. He meets with discouragements—the hearts of the heathen are hard. It may be the church members are cold and take but little interest in the salvation of their souls, or the salvation of others; but the grace of God sustains Him in the midst of all these trials. It is by all light to all ty. Many things come up to depress his spirits and he is often tempted to give up in despair. But the house of God, Prayer, prevailing prayer with God, the promises of God, all serve to encourage him in his work. Peace and prayer encircle the world, and he is not forgotten by the people of God in this great Work. Thanks be to God for the promise "The heathen shall be given to Him for his inheritance." To Him "Every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess Him Lord."

Wash Green Fossils.

MR. EDITOR: On the twenty-second instant, in company with Dr. H. E. Johnson, I visited the "Wash Green Fossils." Although descriptions of them have appeared repeatedly in the papers, yet I doubt not that there are many of your readers who have never heard of them. They are on the farm of Mr. Green, four miles south of Vicksburg, and we discovered Mr. Green himself about ten years ago. Mr. Green immediately built a rude hut within a few feet of the pit, and there he has spent his days and his nights ever since, guarding his treasures with ceaseless vigilance. At first he offered them for sale at $10,000, but, as hope deferred maketh the heart sick, he has fallen to $1,000 and I doubt not that a much less sum would buy them.

These fossils are the bones of two gigantic animals of the Post Tertiary Period (mammoths, I suppose). The bones are not all exhumed; most of them are yet to be dug from the earth. Those that are clearly visible are a lower jaw-bone, two pairs of tusks, a femur or thigh-bone, some ribs, several teeth, and many vertebræ and other fragments. The jaw bone has one of its ends broken off, so that its exact dimensions cannot be easily determined, but the distance from the posterior end of one jaw to that of the other, in a straight line through the mouth must have been about five feet. Hence the animal's head, clothed with flesh, could not have been much less than six feet thick. Tusk is the head of the smaller one. Its tusks, when first exhumed, were about seven feet long; at present they are shorter, the ends having decayed and crumbled off. The head of the larger animal is so much broken that it is difficult to determine its size, but, judging from the size of its tusks, it must have been very much larger than the other. The tusks of this larger one are also much decayed at the ends. They were when first discovered, twelve feet long and a foot in diameter at the base. One jaw tooth is eight and a half inches long by four and a quarter inches wide; another is nine inches by five. The thigh-bone is more than three feet long, and about a foot in diameter at the joint. This larger animal, I suppose, was at least twelve feet in height and twenty-five feet in length, including the tusks. What colossal animals "roamed over all the earth abroad" for thousands of years before God said: "Let us make man!"

Query. What liberal soul will purchase these geological treasures, and donate them to one of our Conference schools?

W. C. BLACK.

EDWARDS', MISS., Sept. 24, 1879.

Rev. John F. Lacroix, D. D., died September 22. The Central Christian Advocate, St. Louis, notices his death, says: "We have not the material at hand to write a satisfactory biographical notice of Professor Lacroix. He was forty-seven years old, a native of Southern Ohio, and probably, as his name indicates, descended from one of the large number of French families settled in that part of the State. We knew him first when a student, and our acquaintance grew into something like intimacy after he became a member of the Ohio Conference, to which he was admitted on trial in 1859. He was an enthusiastic student, and his sympathies naturally led him to devote his talents to Christian education and authorship. His attention was early turned to the religious literature of Continental Europe, and after he was appointed to the chair of Modern Languages in the Ohio Wesleyan University in 1864, he spent his vacations generally in France and Germany. He soon became known as a writer for the religious press, and published a number of volumes, chiefly the results of his studies in French and German. But he did not confine himself to this field, for he had a marked aptitude for philosophical and metaphysical questions in their relation to theological enquiry, and wrote largely in this department, sometimes provoking criticism, on account of his method of handling the subjects which interested him. But he was entirely true to his Methodist training and associations, devoting his fine talents and acquisitions to the Church, and was honored as one of her most gifted scholars."

To the Members of the Alabama Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: In most cases the heaviest burdens of the itinerancy fall on the preacher's wife while he lives, and very often after he dies she is left without adequate support, without a home, and is thrown into very great distress. Ought not these distresses to be relieved as far as possible? Is it not our duty to do so if we can without impairing our efficiency in the work?

The Conference collection does not meet the want, nor would it even were it all collected, which is never the case. In view of the distress which so often comes upon the families of our deceased brothers, it has been thought good to form a Family Relief Association, the members of which shall stand pledged to pay a mortuary fee upon the death of a member, which fees, when aggregated and paid over to the widowed and orphaned family, would go far to make it comfortable. Such a fee of $10 could be easily paid it seems. In view of these facts I have been requested to make the following proposition:

All who will join this association will meet Bro. Lovelace at Selma, before the next Conference. The hope is that the names of all the preachers now on that Conference roll of the association may be enrolled and properly collected, and begin operations next year.

Fraternally,

The St. Louis Conference, Methodist Episcopal South, met at Centerville, Mo., Sept. 24. Bishop Pierce presiding. The editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate says:

"The Bishop does not appear so vigorous as when last I saw him. Indeed, I was much grieved by the apparent change, although he still is a good deal of the man he was, and can do a good deal of work for his years. He holds fair to be able to continue. The part of the Conference work will be

HIS JEWELS.

BY ELEANOR KIRK.

When the Lord makes up his jewels,
Choosing gems of every hue,
Pearls and diamonds, rubies, sapphires,
Showing flawless through and through,
Could I be the least among them,
Smallest gem that love could see,
And his eye detect the brightness,
That would be enough for me.

Precious stones are cut and polished
By the lapidary's skill;
Cruel knife and rasping friction
Work on each the Master's will,
Not until the sparkling facets
With an equal luster glow,
Does the artist choose a setting
For the gem perfected so.

Thus I wait the royal pleasure,
And, when trouble comes to me,
Smile, to think he may be working
On the gem, though small it be.
All I ask is strength to bear it,
Faith and patience to be still,
Held by Him, no knife can slay me;
Loving Him, no anguish kill.

Charges Noticed.

MR EDITOR: In his "Note" in the ADVOCATE of September 25 Dr. Abbey brings against me some charges which I feel that I ought to notice. His first charge is that in my article written in reply to his I treat him with disrespect. I wish to say that nothing was farther from my intention. For Dr. Abbey, personally, I have the highest regard, my acquaintance with him, being of several years' duration. His writings I admire for their originality, boldness and independence. After carefully reviewing my article, I find nothing in it which has the appearance of being disrespectful to Dr. Abbey, unless it be this: That I denominate his theory "Abbeyism," and characterize it as "homeopathy in theology." My only object in using the term "Abbeyism" was to avoid circumlocution. I have yet to learn that it is disrespectful to a man to attach his name to a theory of his origination. Does the use of the term Campbellism imply disrespect for Alexander Campbell? Do all who use the term Calvinism show disrespect to Calvin? If the term "Abbeyism" is offensive, I will withdraw it, and say: "The theory advocated by Dr. Abbey." As to characterizing his theory as "homeopathy in theology," I can't see how that can be considered disrespectful. The principle of homeopathy is that "like cures like." To cure fever you must administer a remedy, which given to a well person would produce fever. Now, Dr. Abbey seems to think his theory an antidote to Darwinism; and yet, unless I greatly misunderstand him, his theory is very much like Darwinism. If, however, this expression, "homeopathy in theology," is offensive, I will withdraw it; and if there is any other expression which Dr. Abbey regards as "disrespectful" to him, I will gladly withdraw it, and offer him the "amende honorable."

His declaration that my object in writing "is not the discovery of truth for the benefit of the church, but to make" him "appear ridiculous," I meet by saying that I did not profess to have discovered any new truth. That claim was made by Dr. Abbey himself, and my article was written to show that his so-called new truth was only an old error in a new dress.

As to the charge of "hypercriticism," I am aware that a part of my article would seem to one who had not closely examined Dr. Abbey's article to be hypercritical. But if one will notice the positive statements made by the doctor with regard to the province of history, and the use he makes of those statements, he will see the necessity for my quoting Webster, to show what history is. Many portions of Dr. Abbey's printed books approach hypercriticism, much more nearly than does my article. One who has so mercilessly wielded the lancet of verbal criticism, as has Dr. Abbey, ought not to flinch when it is applied to himself.

As to the charge of dealing in "cant and slang," I am sure my article will compare favorably in that respect with any book or newspaper article Dr. Abbey ever wrote.

If I "misrepresented his meaning at important points," I did so unintentionally, and would be glad to know wherein I did so.

I claim to have written "for a legitimate purpose," viz: The refutation of error. And now that I have withdrawn all disrespectful language, and apologized for its use, I hope Dr. Abbey will consider that I have "the ring of true metal."

RODERICK HASKIN, SR.

Prayer Meeting.

How was it that the prayer meeting had an attendance of 75 to 150 where we used to think 15 a good congregation?

Why, the people all said on going away: "I am going to prayer meeting again," instead of saying "the prayer meeting was dry to-night, I wish our preacher would not talk and pray so long."

1. It was announced from the pulpit, the Sunday before, that the subject for the prayer meeting the following night would be temperance.

The congregation, in consequence, was very large for such an occasion.

2. We had the following order:

1. Song. By the congregation.

2. Lesson from the Scriptures. Short, and touching the subject.

3 Prayer. By the congregation. Specially for the safety of our young men.

4. Song.

5. Selection on temperance, read by a young brother from the congregation. Very short.

6. Short extempore speech—about three minutes—from an older brother, bearing on the selection.

7. Two selections read by another young brother from the congregation, with a few extempore remarks by the same.

8. Song.

9. Prayer. Specially that the church might be saved from intemperate members.

10. Three selections read by a third young brother from the congregation.

11. Short speech—five minutes long—by one of our best temperance speakers.

12. All who would covenant together to lend their influence to the cause of temperance, and pray for the success of this glorious cause continually, were asked to stand up. Nearly everybody in the house arose, and the covenant was offered by the pastor.

13. Concluding song.

14. Benediction.

The secret of the interest was in the large number who took part, which could easily be done by all parts being short.

Any mission field, revival work, or any material interest of the church might afford a subject of equal interest. And, pursuing this plan, I find I reach five, sometimes ten, where, with the old plan, I could reach only one.

I offer my experience to the brethren who are, like I once was, troubled on account of small crowds and inattentive hearers at prayer meetings. All the pastor's remarks were very brief, not including more than five or six minutes.

Your brother,

Z. A. DOWLING.

Birthday of a Superannuate.

REV. ZACCHEUS DOWLING.

MR EDITOR: There are so many things associated with our religious connections here, that give us inexpressible delight, that we love to speak of them, the one to the other; and one of the most pleasurable seasons of our religious intercourse with brethren is to spend hours of converse with the aged, hoary headed Christian minister. I mean our honored and loved superannuates. None of Israel's host have a larger share in our sympathies, love and admiration, than the superannuate.

How delightful to hear these fathers in Israel tell the events of such lives and ministry! Such was the pleasure of the brethren and friends of Forest Home on the twenty-ninth day of July, 1879, when Rev. Z. Dowling met with us to celebrate his eighty-seventh birthday. It was truly a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Father Dowling discoursed for more than an hour. Subject, Genesis v. 25: "And Enoch walked with God; and was not; for God took him." 1. What it is to walk with God. 2. The length of time. 3. The divine companionship. 4. The happy end.

After which we partook of a bounteous feast—a dinner prepared for the occasion, in honor of the old preacher. We then returned home with the conviction of mind that the world was richer, because such men as Father Dowling live in it. The world will be poorer when they die, but heaven will be richer. Bro Dowling has spent sixty-two years of his life as an itinerant in the Methodist Church. He still lingers on the shore. Health and strength good for one of his age and labors. Oh, Lord, bless our old superannuates and mothers in Israel, and may we follow them as they follow Christ.

JOSEPH M. SCOTT.

FOREST HOME, ALA., Sept 18, 1879.

"Wilt Thou Be Made Whole?"

The entire system of gospel truth is embodied in this significant interrogatory.

The new birth is a fundamental doctrine of Christianity. "Marvel not that I said unto thee ye must be born again." The sin-sick soul must be healed. The corrupt nature must be renewed. Wilt thou be made whole?

We are powerless to cleanse ourselves. The Holy Spirit must regenerate our natures, and by applying the precious blood of the atonement—at one-ment—restore us to a state of moral health. Wilt thou be made whole?

Christianity is individual in its obligations and relations. We must have a personal interest in the cross. We can never lose our identity. Wilt thou be made whole?

God graciously condescends to consult our wills in the offers of mercy. The great scriptural principle of gospel science—free moral agency—is clearly shadowed forth in the question propounded by our Saviour to the man at the pool. Wilt thou be made whole?

From the Work.

OAKTUPPA CAMP MEETING, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The good people on this work began in earnest in August to build up a camp ground at Bethel Church, and the meeting began September 19, with an arbor adjoining the church, capable of seating 800. There were thirteen tents and twenty-one tenters. On Sabbath there were about 1,200 persons on the grounds.

Our beloved pastor, Bro. A. J. Briggs, was in charge of the meeting, and was assisted by Revs. D. G. W. Ellis, P. C. Wimbish, H. C. Collins, Hezekiah DuBose, Joseph Lovett and Samuel Jones, of the Mississippi Conference; James O. Andrew, P. F. Stearns, C. W. Moody, David Wright, E. C. Stearns, George W. Fagan, R. C. Gavin and W. H. Hasty, of the Alabama Conference, and three noble laymen, A. G. Moore, J. B. Moody and Henry Weir.

Deep interest was manifest from the first hour's service. The people in this neglected part of the vine yard were eager to hear the word and drink at the fountain of life. The preaching was good, attendance large and attentive, and the order excellent. Not a single thing occurred to disturb the meeting. The services began good, grew better, and ended gloriously. As the fruit of the meeting, 37 were added to the membership, and 74 professed to find pardon. It is known there were other conversions, some of which left without having publicly declared it. It is believed that from 90 to 100 found peace, many of whom were members of the church.

The singing, led by Bro. W. M. McEachern, was excellent throughout. I heard a minister say he never heard better. The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad.

On Wednesday of the meeting the ministers present were invited by our aged brother and sister, P. F. Stearns and wife, to dine at their tent. We went and partook of a sumptuous dinner, prepared on the encampment. This custom, they informed us, prevailed in the early days of Methodism.

Oaktuppa camp ground is now a fixture on the work, will be enlarged, and another meeting held there to begin on Friday evening before the third Sabbath in September, 1880.

Steps looking to the erection of a parsonage at Kelser Hill, the center of the work, are being taken—subscriptions raised and placed in the hands of trustees for that purpose. It will be built for the preacher who may be sent us the next Conference year.

The work is now a mission, but, through the labors of the present year, we hope to be raised to a self sustaining circuit in 1880.

Up to date there have been 143 accessions to the church. Many who came into the church in the early part of the year were converted at the camp meeting—hence the difference in accessions and conversions at the late camp meeting. Baptisms to date, 55.

T. W. MOODY.

SEPTEMBER 6, 1879.

NEW SITE, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: Our camp meeting closed September 17 after a remarkably pleasant, orderly and profitable session.

The attendance, as usual, was very large. All the stationary tents, about thirty, were occupied, besides there was a large number of portable tents pitched. The transient attendants considerably outnumbered the tenters. All seemed to enjoy the meeting, except a certain class of frivolous, vacant minds, who always frequent these places for no good to themselves or anybody else, and who make themselves a disgusting nuisance to all sensible people. This class, however, were not as boisterous and disorderly as they have been heretofore. I heard it remarked by several old tent-holders that there was less disturbance this year than they ever knew at Hillsboro.

We intend to have the camp ground incorporated, so as to be able to curb and control the viciously inclined, and prevent the annoyance that is so common at these religious assemblages. We did not have as many preachers as we were led to expect. We had enough, however. They came from recent successful protracted meetings, and, in consequence, were in good preaching trim.

The meeting resulted in the conversion of about thirty souls. Twenty additions to the church, and the members greatly blessed. Bro T. J. Rutlege, agent American Bible Society for Alabama was with us, preached, and took up a collection, of course. Our efficient presiding elder, John B. Stevenson, was at his post, and had charge of the meeting.

R. N. LEDBETTER.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1879.

TRENTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR EDITOR: I have held six protracted meetings, at each of which the power of God was present to convict and convert. Many backsliders also reclaimed. The church very much stirred. Thirty additions by discipline, and as many professions. The work in good, spiritual condition, in love and harmony. New family altars erected, class and prayer meetings established in many of the churches. Our camp meeting was also a glorious success. Many say, providence favoring, they will be tenters on the ground next year. Crops—i. e., corn, medium, cotton much injured by flood and worms. General health good. Finances in the hands of the people mainly. Thanks to brethren for valuable service rendered.

R. A. SIDLEY, P. C.

SEPTEMBER 24, 1879.

SICILY ISLAND, CATAHOULA PARISH, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: On September 6 and 7 was held our third Quarterly Conference, Bro. C. Keener, presiding. The preaching by Bro. Keener and President C. G. Andrews, D. D., of Centenary College, was accompanied by the power and demonstration of the Spirit. We had seven applications for membership, and quite a number of conversions. Service was also held on Monday night. Bro. T. Randle is now carrying on a protracted meeting at Oakley. He is assisted by Bro. Allen. There have been over twenty confessions, as to the power of Jesus' blood to cleanse from all sin, besides a large number of conversions.

Yours in Christ,

JOHN W. CHAMBERS.

Appreciated Kindness.

MR EDITOR: Allow me, through the ADVOCATE to express my love and high appreciation of the good people with who n our present lot is cast. Having recently recovered from an attack of illness, my heart goes out in love after the kind friends who nursed me and attended to every want, and cared so tenderly for my little ones.

Never were there warmer or more sympathetic hearts than are to be found with the dear people of Lowndesboro. Long may they live to glorify God, and bless humanity with kind deeds.

FIELD NOTES.

LOUISIANA.

PLANTERSVILLE, LA., Sept. 26.—We held a meeting at Lind Grove, Lind Grove circuit, in July, which lasted six days, and resulted in seventeen additions, several conversions, and the church was quickened and much revived. We were aided by Revs. McClendon, Hunt and Galloway. Crop prospects promising. Health good. Finances average good. Politics are beginning to attract much interest.

J. M. MCKEE, P. C.

FLOYD CIRCUIT, LA., Sept. 27.—Our protracted efforts are over for the year. The last meeting of the kind held at Floyd, in many respects, was a good meeting. Seventeen applications and several conversions, though the membership are not all converted yet. In these meetings we had nineteen applications, with a better state of feelings than we anticipated, with the great political troubles we had in the early part of the year. But we have lived to see peace restored between the two previous factions, and a share of hopeful prosperity in both State and Church, with a fair cotton crop, and fine weather, so far, for gathering it, it has been remarkably healthy.

T. B. M'CLENDON.

MISSISSIPPI.

MOUNT CARMEL, MISS., Sept. 21. We have just closed a protracted meeting at Mount Carmel Church of nine days' continuance. Sixteen accessions to the church, and twenty conversions, and the membership greatly revived. Thanks to our presiding elder and others for their excellent labor in this meeting. Health good. Crops injured with the rain and storm. Finances with us.

W. W. SIMMONS, P. C.

MORGAN'S FORK, MISS., Sept. 27. The results of a meeting at Oak Grove were twelve conversions and ten accessions. This church is on Bro. E. A. Flowers's division of the work. The protracted effort at Noxubee was fruitful in six conversions, and six were received. The children's prayer meetings were marked features in these meetings. Health of country very good.

W. W. HARPER.

BYRAM, MISS., Sept. 28.—Byram, so called from the name of the man who once lived here, has a Methodist and Baptist Church and Sunday-school, and is remarkable for its good behavior at church, and its substantial citizens. Extensive shell marl banks on Pearl river, near the railroad depot, now leased out for five years by the principle owner, Bro. Ervin Lewis, and now being worked extensively. One thousand tons will soon be ready for shipment. Rev. John Lusk is the pastor. Eight converts joined our church at his last meeting here. A commodious church for the Methodists will soon be built.

E. R. STRICKLAND.

ALABAMA.

MOUNT HOPE, ALA., Sept. 24.—The fourth Quarterly Conference for Mount Hope circuit is just over. Finances very short, though some of the stewards think the preacher's salary will yet be collected. We are trying to establish a parsonage. We held some good meetings. Sixteen accessions and conversions. A steady improvement in spirituality. Three good Sunday-schools. Crops good. Health very good. Politics quiet.

J. F. RANDALL, P. C.

ROCKY MOUNT CIRCUIT, ALA., Sept. 24.—We are having a gracious revival at this place. Commenced last Friday night, and up to last night have eighteen additions, and, I think, as many conversions. A glorious time at Athens (Ramer). Will close to night or to-morrow night. Have a very stubborn case of bilious remittent fever in my family. Just received the subscription to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE from one of the number who offered last night for membership.

J. L. SKIPPER.

LOUINA, ALA., Sept. 25.—The Louina camp meeting has closed with fifty or sixty conversions. Twenty-seven joined the church and were baptized. The Lord poured the Spirit out upon the people and preachers. This is my fourth year, and we closed with a grand time. May the Lord bless this people, who have been so kind to preacher and family since we came here, four years ago.

R. H. EVANS.

HARTSELL, ALA., Sept. 27.—The protracted meetings (six in all) on the Hartsell circuit, North Alabama Conference, resulted in the erection of several family altars, about sixty conversions and twenty accessions to the church, and some church repairing. We hope to be able to report the finances of the circuit all paid. Crops are much better than former calculations said. The physicians are kept busy. Political meetings are becoming common. The ADVOCATE is a welcome visitor. Sabbath schools are doing very well.

G. F. BOYD.

WHISTLER, ALA., Sept. 29.—We have had another gracious revival—the second this year. About seventeen conversions and ten accessions to our church, and one or two to the Baptist. Out of the ten that desire to unite with the church, nine are young men, all soundly converted. We have a live church. Large congregations. Lively prayer and experience meetings.

Obituaries.

THE writer was unexpectedly called upon to perform the burial services of the new-born babe of the gifted SARAH REBECCA DUNKS was born April 15, and died, at Brewton, Ala., September 23, 1879, aged six years, five months and twenty days.

Here other pressed her to be brave, and it was her to at repeating the hope that she would soon be well again. Her father said he could not consider it as a bereavement, because "God doeth all things well."

O, that we may all be prepared to answer the summons with resignation.

CHAS. B. JORDAN.

MRS. N. Y. TAYLOR, consort of Capt. Taylor, of Tangipahoa, La., died in peace, September 12, 1879. Sister Taylor was one of our most efficient and consistent members in great loss. Her death was very triumphant. Just before she departed she repeated the first and last verses of "On Jordan's stormy banks," and sang the last sweet by and by." While she began to sing she was raised to ecstasy of joy. She called for her husband, and, taking his hand, exclaimed: "O my dear, dear husband, I must leave you. Tell them all that I am willing to go; that I am happy to go." An extraordinary life; and triumphant death. A glorious future.

H. S. HAYNES, Pastor.

THOMAS NATHANIEL, son of Elisha O. and Priscilla Crosier, was born in St. Landry parish, La., May 31st, 1841, and departed this life in Washington, La., September 7, 1879.

Bro. Crosier joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the pastorate of Rev. J. E. Head, in about the year 1858, and for several years was an acceptable member of the church, filling acceptably the office of Sunday-school superintendent a part of the time.

For some cause, unknown to the writer, he withdrew from the church about two years ago, but joined again before the fire has ceased to burn. August 3, 1879. He knelt humbly at God's altar as a penitent, before his receipt in an gave evidence that God had pardoned his sins. He was in [illegible] very soon afterward, and after about six weeks' severe suffering his spirit, as we believe, departed away to its mighty land. We sang and prayed with him often during his illness, and was with him when he died. His testimony was satisfactory; said his trust was in Jesus, and expressed a willingness to die.

JOHN F. WYNN, Pastor.

J. B. LOPER, son of Meshach and Sarah Loper, died at the residence of William Pruitt, his son-in-law, in Jasper county, Miss., on the twenty-ninth day of June, 1879.

Bro. Loper was born in Colleton district, South Carolina, in the year 1801. He was married to Miss Sarah McCormick, daughter of Rev. John McCormick, a local elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1824. He professed religion at a camp meeting in Jones county, Miss., in Mt. Zion Church. His Christian deportment was most exemplary. He maintained the forms of religion in his household morning and evening. His liberality to the church of which he was a member was generally known. He bore a large part in the building of two church houses at Hopewell in Jasper county, Miss. He maintained the most confidence to all his friends and neighbors. To know him was to love him. He was calm and quiet in his general deportment. Always [illegible] and true to his promises, a regular attendant at church while his strength would justify the [illegible]. He died with all the noble dignity of the Christian faith about him. His prospects of future happiness were bright on his death-bed, and among the last words he uttered just before he died was: "There is reality in the Christian religion."

E. J. TAYLOR.

M. KATE CRISLER was born in Louisiana, not far from Vicksburg, Miss., and died in Hinds county, Miss., July 10, 1879.

Her father, Henry Foster moved to Vicksburg when she was very young, and there she was reared and educated. She became an orphan in early life, and engaged in teaching. In Madison county, about 1861. In October, 1865, she attended a protracted meeting, held near Vernon, conducted by C. G. Andrews and James Nelson. Here she was converted from sin, and made happy in the love of God. Previous to this she loved worldly amusements—balls and dancing—but now worldliness gave place to heavenly mindedness, and the love of things seen to the love of the unseen and eternal, and in running the Christian race there appeared no faltering. In December, 1865, she was married to W. C. Crisler, and filled properly the places of wife, mother and Christian citizen. Mrs Crisler was an educated, cultured, Christian woman, who bore faithful testimony to the divinity and power of the gospel. Her experience was clear. Her faith rested in the power of God. And as she did not shrink from duty in health she did not shrink from death in sickness. Husband, son and friends gathered around her bed to hear her last words and witness her triumph. I am ready to depart; "meet me in heaven." In all clear. "Yes, as I have said often during my long sickness so I say now again, that only for leaving you husband and son, I am perfect by willing and ready to die; all is clear before me; grieve not for me when I am so happy; read the fourteenth chapter of John." "How comforting!" "In my Father's house are many mansions."

B. JONES.

MRS SARAH FRANCIS HALL, who was born December 29, 1810, died, at the residence of her husband, Mr. T. W. Hall, near Autaugaville, Ala., August 8, 1879.

Seldom are we called upon to chronicle the death of one whose many amiabilities entwined around the affections of so many friends.

When young life's busy theater opened before her she, like Mary, chose that good part which proved to her a comfort in life, and smoothed the turbid waters of Jordan, when nothing but an abiding faith in Him whom she had chosen as her Deliverer could have dispelled the gloom overshadowing its icy stream.

Connecting herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, she lived within its pale a meek and humble Christian and died, leaving to friends the consoling assurance that He in whom she had trusted had enabled her to triumph over the last enemy.

Her quiet, unassuming disposition was well calculated to secure the esteem and affection of those who knew her, while her kind heart attached them to her by ties that death alone could sever. As a wife she was devoted in her love and always ready to bear the responsibility of her position. As a mother she was kind and enduring, yet not so indulgent as to be unmindful of the obligations she was under to her children. As a neighbor, kindness and hospitality were traits pre-eminently marked in her character.

Her affliction, though protracted, was borne without murmuring or complaint, and her only regret was being separated for a time from the loved ones of her home.

H.

DIED, of intermittent fever, at Tensaw, Mobile county, Ala., September 7, 1879, after an illness of five days, HELEN E., aged ten years, and WILLIE D., aged twelve years, daughters of W. H. and Emily M. Parker.

The little ones were buried in the same grave. Little Helen the day before she died, offered a sweet prayer to God. After closing she said: "Papa I have said my prayers, now put me in the bed, I am so cold." When her little hands and feet were getting cold she said: "Hold my comforter over my feet, quick, quick," and when she began to rest or sleep, "Hold the feet for I am coming." Her father listened, and she fell very soon, she would be with them to help hold the feet. She then said: "I am so glad that Jesus loves me," etc. A little later her soul went to God, who gave it.

While had the impression from the beginning of her sickness that she would not get well. She had a desire to live. She told her brother she saw angels in the room, and said they are waiting to bear me home. At another time she said: "The Lord wants me, and will soon send for me." She sweetly sang: "My latest sun is sinking fast, my race is nearly run," etc. After singing this verse with the chorus she gazed a little on the room to pass over. She called her father to her bedside and said: "Papa, I want you to be a better man. I will soon be in heaven." Her father asked her how she knew she was going to heaven. She explained: "Why, papa, I love Jesus and Jesus loves me." She read her Bible and said she tried to keep God's commands and she knew she was following right after Jesus. She plead with her father to follow Jesus, and told him it would not be long before she would see her in heaven. Little Helen died first; this was kept from Willie. She told her mother: "Helen has died, I thought I would die first." She said she knew she had died, for she saw her pass by with the angel wings.

She often talked of Jesus and angels and spoke of seeing them without fear. She knew every one around her. "I will be where I know Jesus as their friend. May God sustain the bereaved father, mother and sisters. May they follow Jesus as did little Helen and Willie.

A FRIEND.

JAMES WIMBISH was born in Abbeville district, S. C., September 13, 1801, and died near Dixie, Conecuh county, Ala., September 7, 1879.

In 1836 Father Wimbish removed from South Carolina to Elbert county, Ga. He remained there until 1847, when he removed to Clarke county, Ala., where a few years ago he came to the place where he died. He was twice married. His first wife was Miss Mary A. A. McCraney, with whom he married in South Carolina in February, 1823. She was allowed to share with him the sorrows and the joys of life for twenty-seven years, and became the mother of five children, four sons and one daughter. All but one of these have passed away. Two of them died young, and two were killed in the late war. In 1882 he married Mrs. H. P. Cutler, widow of Edwin Cutler, of Clarke county, Ala. She died nearly ten years after they married.

Father Wimbish joined the Methodist Church October 31, 1821, under the ministry of Rev. Tracy Walsh, of South Carolina. He continued a faithful and devoted member of the same until his death. In less than a year after he joined the church he was appointed class-leader and continued to fill this office during most of the remainder of his life. He was also Sunday-school superintendent a good many years. He was ever faithful in the discharge of the duties pertaining to these offices. He was well versed in the Bible and in the doctrines of the Methodist Church. He is said to have been a man of great theory and power in prayer. He tried to be a genuine, humble Christian every day and everywhere. He endeavored to shun [illegible] of evil. He was a solid man; there was nothing light or frivolous about him. I visited him several times after his health became so feeble as to prevent his attending church. He always seemed to be strong in faith. The last two times I visited him he seemed to be full of peace and joy. I felt it a great privilege to be with him. He was not only ready, but anxious "to depart and be with Christ."

About ten years ago he had a spell of paralysis, which seemed to have seriously affected his lungs. This affection continued gradually to increase until it terminated in his death. During the last few hours of his life he suffered very great pain; and this seems to have caused him some trouble of mind. He seemed to think it strange that his heavenly Father should allow him to suffer this, and he was almost constantly engaged in prayer. But when a man lives right he is very apt to die right; and, taking the life of our venerable father as a criterion by which to judge, we feel perfectly assured that, while his body is quietly resting here in the sod, his spirit is rejoicing in the presence of that Saviour whom he loved and served so faithfully for so many years.

A SONG IN THE NIGHT.

I take this pain, Lord Jesus,
From Thine own hand;
The strength to bear it bravely
Thou will command.
I am too weak for effort,
So let me rest,
In high of sweet submission,
On Thine own breast.

I take this pain, Lord Jesus,
As proof of love;
That Thou art watching closely
My truest need;
That Thou, my good Physician,
Art working still;
That all Thine own good pleasure
Thou will fulfill.

I take this pain, Lord Jesus;
What Thou dost choose
The soul that really loves Thee
Will not refuse.
It is of Thy first time
I trust to-day;
For Thee my heart hath never
A trustless "Nay!"

I take this pain, Lord Jesus;
But want beside?
'Tis to my truest portion
Thou dost provide.
In every hour of faintness
My cup runs over,
With faithfulness and mercy,
In love's sweet store.

I take this pain, Lord Jesus,
As Thine own gift;
And trine, though tremulous, praises
I now uplift;
I am too weak to sing them,
But Thou dost hear
The whisper from the pillow—
Though I so dear!

'Tis Thy dear hand, O Saviour,
That presseth sore—
The hand that bears the nail prints
For evermore.
And now, beside its shadow,
Hidden by Thee,
The pressure only tells me
Thou lovest me!

A Morning in a Marble Quarry.

MR. EDITOR: Let me tell you of a pleasant ramble among these limestone hills of Tennessee. To one coming from the flat country of lower Louisiana these hills are fascinating, seeming ever to invite a climb up their steep and rugged sides, which, when once attempted, is found to be no light undertaking, but from their green heights, once attained, distance, indeed, "lends enchantment" to the picturesque scenes spread below.

Green fields, fruitful orchards, and the clear waters of the Tennessee river winding in and out among the hills, with Knoxville, the "Hill City," placed like a fair gem on the green bosom of the country.

A brisk walk through waving fields of millet, among which the wild morning glory twined, covering the whole with delicate blue blossoms of most transient beauty, brought us to the marble quarry of Col. Williams, of Knoxville, which is about two miles from the town. It is a steep, solid hill of marble, cut asunder by the workmen about midway. Huge boulders of red marble are piled about a perpendicular white wall, which is marked across its whole length by the steam drill. This little machine is wonderful for its great power and the simplicity of its mechanism. Upon the brow of the hill stands a boiler and reservoir of water, from which the steam is conducted through small iron pipes to whatever part of the quarry the drill is used, a drill of the desired depth is then fastened into its groove, the steam turned on, and presto. A few quick bobs, up and down, of the pointed steel have made a hole two or three feet, or more, in the wall of solid rock. So on across the whole length of the hill, after which the blocks are blown off, then hoisted by a derrick, weighed and deposited on the ground, where the workmen bestride them and peck away with hammer and chisel.

This quarry was opened only last January, yet they have already wrought a great cavity in the hillside, the hands working in full force of fourteen, one hundred feet, and at present about forty per day. The custom-house of Memphis is to be built from this quarry. We saw the massive doors of the main entrance lying on one side, ready to be shipped when frost shall stay the fever and Memphis can once more open her gates to the busy world. When completed this will probably be the handsomest custom-house building in the whole country, unrivalled for both beauty in material and style of architecture.

The fever, of course, puts a stop to all work for the present, and hinders its more rapid completion; but we believe that within the next few years Memphis, now sad and stricken, will arise out of the ashes of her sorrows, and wear upon her bosom, with fitting grace and prosperity, this fairest pearl of architecture.

We are greatly indebted to Messrs. Harrison, superintendent of the stone work, and Hovey, superintendent of the quarry, for their kindness in giving us many interesting details concerning this work; and last, though far from least, for a beautiful slab of marble presented by them to the writer for a souvenir kneading board.

Mr. Editor, do you know what a treasure this is, with its snowy marble roller, to a housekeeper's soul? What a memorial of that morning's visit from henceforth will be each repast—a pleasant memory renewed each day in beautiful monuments of snowy, artistically piled up biscuit!

Not the least, among things worthy to be remembered, was a fossil rattlesnake which the derrick-man brought to light one day, perfect in every coil of his immense body, even to the rattles. It was a monster. Perfect fishes have also been found embedded in the marble. Poor creatures! They did not bargain for their monuments, and yet here they are, wrought not by the stone cutter, but by Dame Nature herself, and handed down to teach us, not only the histories of past ages, but another glimpse of the wonders and beauties so lavishly bestowed upon thoughtless man by nature's God.

Here in the quarry is every stone cut exactly to fit into its own place in the walls of the building, the quarry-man knowing as well where each particular block will go, as does the stone-mason, who gives the finishing polish and rears it into its place in the walls, while the "wise master builder" points to you on his plan each stone which now lies roughly finished in the quarry, waiting for the fever to lift it into the light and air above. So one man lays the foundation and another "buildeth thereon." We thought of the words of St. Paul, about the worth of every man's work being made manifest in the great final day—"for ye are God's building."

And what a solemn thought is this, to be sure of the foundation, for without that, no matter how fair a show the building makes, it must crumble, sooner or later, in ruin! "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." So we turned on our way, with a prayer in our hearts that this present life may be made up of solid deeds of Christian love, white and pure, fitly framed together into a building which may stand the fiery revelation of that day.

PERDITA.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., Sept. 16, 1879.

The Nude in Art.

When you object to a Venus of Titian as simply indecent, you are met with a very supercilious look and the remark (intended to be very cutting:) "To the pure all things are pure." I have heard the most impure men glibly use that proverb. Under its cover they pursue their immoral course.

These quoters of this Scripture do not know its meaning. They suppose it means, "A pure man will see nothing impure in any object," a sentiment which is absurd—as if vice was not vicious to a pure man's eye. If you put immorality before a pure man he sees it as immorality. Further, if you put a temptation to immorality before a pure man it will be to him a temptation to immorality in spite of his purity.

The quoted text (as the context proves) means this: "Everything that belongs to a pure man is pure." See the contrast that follows—"but nothing that belongs to the defiled and unbelieving is pure, but even their mind and conscience are defiled."

Instead of justifying a man's praise of a Titian's Venus, the Scripture declares that a pure man would not possess such a libidinous picture. It is under such false quotations as this, and under a sickening cant about "high art," that Christians are filling their parlors with statuary and paintings calculated to excite the lowest passions of the young. There is a natural prurience that is charmed with this dilettanteism among indecent things as the polite distance to which refinement can go in licentiousness. It would be apposite to ask how many youth it is unable to restrain within these bounds after having thus far inflamed their desires? God has clearly shown us that the human body is to be covered; Art comes forward and declares in direct opposition to God that the human body shall be stark naked. Christians leave God and follow art. Then when we tell these Christians that they are doing vice they ridicule our verdancy, and call on the world of culture to join them in the laugh.

It is not the question whether it is possible to have a white marble nudity that would be pure to every pure mind. To that all will agree. But the practical question of to-day for Christians to settle, as before God and His word, is whether they can approve of nudities in every degree of color to represent life, and in every attitude of wantonness—whether in the name of art they can meddle with such filthy subjects as Leda and the Swan, Danäe, Venus and Adonis, etc., and not be defiled.

The French school of art has a faculty for putting vice forward in voluptuous and attractive forms to the young, while the moral (if there be any, as in the "Prodigal Son,") is almost hidden in a corner. And this French school is now the fashionable school for American Christians. Besides the seductive influence of these obscenities upon our youth, we are to remember that every nude pictured female presupposes a nude or real female sitting before the artist as his model. The immorality of this nudeness every one who has read the history of art knows.

Has it come to this, that the church of Christ is ready to break down the barriers which separate it from the licentious world, and to adopt Greek culture in the place of Christian ethics? French art and the theaters are doing all they can to promote loose notions of the relations between the sexes, and to steep society in immorality. Easy-going Christians are being caught in this snare. It is fashionable to admire indecencies, and Christians wish to be fashionable. It is now hard to convict our low, obscene theaters before the courts, because the plea is that all the respectable theaters have the same obscenities, and Christian mothers take their daughters to see them.

"May God in His mercy purify His church, if it take the whirlwind and the earthquake to do it!"—Dr. Howard Crosby.

The Charm of True Marriage.

Our advanced theories of divorce and free love making the matrimonial relation merely a partnership to be dissolved at pleasure, whatever else may be said in their favor, strike a deadly blow at an element in it which was meant perhaps to be supreme above all others. What is the sweetest charm of all true marriage, what the greatest advantage, what the most priceless happiness, that life through, which it brings to the human heart? Not the flush and splendor of its early love; not the richer development which it brings to the character; not even the children who are gathered around its shrine. No, but the intimacy and reliability of its companionship; the fact that it gives those who enter in it, each in the other, and through all scenes and changes, a near and blessed stand-by. Marriage in some of its aspects is doubtless the source of an immense amount of unhappiness, crime, injustice, blight and down-dragging, one of the most perplexing institutions society has to deal with—only the blindest sentimentalist will deny that. On the other hand, however, and this is not mere sentiment but sober fact, of all the evidences of God's goodness to be found in this lower world, all the proof that He cares for us not only with the wisdom of a Creator, but with the interest and love of a Father, there is none quite equal to His sending human beings into the arena of life, not to fight its battles, win its victories and endure its sorrows alone but giving them, as they go forth out of their childhood's home, a relation in which each two of them are bound together with the closest of all ties, live together under the same roof, have their labors, their property, their interests, their parental affections all in common, and are moved to stand by each other, hand to hand and heart to heart, in every sorrow, misfortune, trial and enemy they can earth can bring. It is an ideal, if not always realized in full, which is tasted even now, and all that is said about marriage miseries, more widely perhaps than any other happiness.—Sunday Afternoon.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church Council, while in session at Ottawa, Ontario, recently, adopted the following resolution, namely: "That we are satisfied to remain in our present position with regard to the General Council, and under the Presbytery of our present beloved Bishop—W. R. Nicholson, D. D.—and that we deprecate any separation from the Reformed Episcopal Church as it was originally organized by the late Bishop Cummins." It was decided to hold the annual convention of the clergy and lay delegates at Montreal in future.

—Last July 208 Russian Mennonites left Toronto for Manitoba, making a total of 1 325 families and 7 383 persons who have gone to that region. Of the 1325 families, 25 went to northern Dakota, but most of them moved back to Manitoba, and several families settled in Kansas. The colonists in Manitoba live in two settlements. One of them is 25 miles from Winnipeg, and consists of eight townships; the other is 80 miles south of Winnipeg, and has 17 townships which are each six miles square.

—Simultaneously with the revision of the English Bible, a similar revision is going on in Germany. Luther's translation of the Scriptures is in the hands of a critical committee, which has been summoned this autumn to resume its critical labors. "This committee," says an exchange, "consisting partly of evangelical divines and partly of learned laymen, began its labors several years ago, but has not yet succeeded in getting beyond Genesis."

—"Two nights last week," says the London Echo of the fourth, "placards of treasonable contents were again affixed upon the public walls of the town of Nivelles. They ran as follows: 'Let us plunge a dagger into the king, this tyrant over the Belgian people. Let us cut down his whole family with the sword!'—A Clerical." This because of his connection with the enactment of laws depriving the priests of their control over public instruction.

—The London Freeman has been making a comparison between the American and English Baptist missions in Asia, and reaches results which are not very satisfactory to the latter. It says it is rather startling to find that of the 31 915 Baptist members assigned to Asia in the "Baptist Hand Book," the American Baptist Union has 26 281 leaving only three thousand for the English Baptist societies.

—Another new departure in religion has been made in New York, where the Irish Catholic Church has been organized by Fathers McNamara and Quin, two priests who have left the Roman Catholic Church. Last Sunday week they formally excommunicated the Pope and the other "Italian hirelings who have robbed the poor and degraded the Irish people."

—It is said that Mr. Spurgeon's congregation has eighty colporteurs engaged in the work of the church, resulting in visits every month to about 75,000 families. During the past year 162 000 tracts were distributed gratuitously, and over $11 000 was realized from the sale of 927,000 separate publications. The total number of visits for the year was 926 286.

—The missionary work of Henry M. Stanley in the heart of Africa, despite its novel character, is still bringing forth fruit. A letter in the London Times states that King Mtesa, ruling near Victoria Nyanza, Africa, has abolished slavery throughout his dominions. At least half a million of slaves were to be liberated at once.

—An English paper is authority for the statement that a number of Jesuits and Royalists in France, believing that an era of persecution is at hand, have united in a scheme for seeking liberty to uphold the Romish faith by flying to the Island of Papua where they contemplate establishing a monarchy under M. de Breuil, the Marquis du Roys. It is said that a vessel has been purchased and provisioned for the expedition.

CHINA.—An English missionary has recently given an account, before the Royal Geographical Society of London, of a journey through the interior of China. He stated that during his journey, occupying eight months, he never met with an act of incivility. He was never once asked for his passport, and was never refused any assistance or courtesy he required.

—Arrangements are making for holding an "All-World Sunday-school Convention" in London next year, in connection with the Raikes Centenary. The Church of England Sunday-school Institute and the Wesleyan and Old Bailey Sunday-school Unions have the matter in charge. It is intended to hold services in St. Paul's Cathedral, the city road chapel and Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle. Mass meetings will be held in Albert Hall and elsewhere.

—Bishop Gregg announces that henceforth his "Reformed Church of England" will be known as "The Reformed Episcopal Church in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, otherwise called the Reformed Church of England, being free from all foreign interference and under the jurisdiction of the Right Rev. Bishop Gregg, D. D. and the Right Rev. Bishop N. R. Toke, M. A."

—Complaint is made by some churches of a decline in the number of theological students, but among the Wesleyans of Great Britain the number of candidates for the ministry has become so large that the accommodations at the theological colleges has been inadequate. Of the 100 candidates accepted by the recent Conference it is not probable that one can be admitted to a college within a year, all the vacancies being filled.

—The Edinburgh Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church has resolved to "recommend the Synod to declare that, marriage with a deceased wife's sister being a matter in regard to which the law of Christ is the law of liberty such marriages shall no longer be a bar to membership in the United Presbyterian Church." The Presbytery is to consider a motion in favor of shorter and simpler Standards, in March.

—Dr. Philip Schaff in an article in the Princeton Review estimates that in 1878 all branches of Methodism in the United States had: Ministers, 25 562; congregations, 32 000; communicant membership, 3 428,050; nominal membership, 14 000 000; colleges, 52; theological seminaries, 12.

—The Upper House of Convocation has adopted the following resolution after a discussion extending over several hours: "That these words be added to the Ornaments Rubric: 'That every priest or deacon at all times of his ministration, shall wear a surplice with a stole or scarf, with the hood of his degree, and no other ornament.'"

—It is reported that Father Curci is about to publish a new translation of the Bible with prolegomena and annotations. The translation is said to be an improvement on those of Martini and Deodati, while the preliminary matter will treat of many political ecclesiastical matters. The translation revised by Monsignor Salvanor has been approved by the Pope.

—The Sunday-school is rapidly growing in favor in continental countries. It has made great advances in Germany, and in France there are no less than 1 100 schools belonging to the French Sunday-School Society. These schools are found in all parts of the country.

—The General Union of the Swedenborgians has met recently. The entire membership in this country is not over 5 000. The Boston society is the largest and has 640 members. Most of the others are scarcely to number not more than 25 members each.

—The Wesleyan Methodists are about to send a missionary among the Mohammedans. A young man, who has become acquainted with the Persian language, has offered himself for this service and been accepted as a candidate. He will probably be first sent to Fyzabad, India, and ultimately to Persia.

—The Rev. William Impey, the Wesleyan missionary of South Africa who was compelled to resign on account of his views on future punishment, has been received into the Church of England, by Bishop Merriman. A Wesleyan paper says his confession of faith was orthodox.

—Munificent bequests have gone to the Foreign and Home Boards of Missions, and perhaps to other boards and institutions of the United Presbyterian Church, from the late Mr. John McNab, long a well known and active member in that church.

—The priests and members of religious orders in France are unquestionably losing ground so far as popular esteem is concerned. A number of cases have been reported lately in which they have been publicly insulted and maltreated in the streets of Paris.

—During a pilgrimage of sixty thousand Poles to a so-called miracle-working picture at Czenstoken, Poland, recently, fifteen pilgrims were killed in a thunder-storm.

THE MIGNONETTE AND THE OAK.

BY REV. JOHN HALL, D. D.

I mark'd a child—a pretty child,
A gentle, blue-eyed thing;
She sow'd the scented mignonette
One sunny day in spring;
And while the tiny grains she sow'd,
The stream of thought thus sweetly flow'd:

"Oh! in a dear bed the dew shall fall,
And yon bright sun shall shine—
'Twill spring and grow and bloom soon then;
And it will scent mine!"
And the fair thing looked in childish glee,
To think what a harvest hers should be.

I saw a man an acorn plant
Up on the hill-side there—
No spreading branch, no shading oak,
Lent friend'y shelter there.
And thus as o'er the spot he bow'd,
I heard him—for he thought aloud

"Frail thing," exclaim'd he, "leaf shall grace
Thy wide and sturdy bough,
Long be it said might the dead
As low as they art now;
Yet wilt thou rise in rugged strength,
And crown this barren height at length."

Each had a hope: the childish heart
Look'd to a summer's joy;
The manly thought strong aid of nature
Looks to futurity.
Each trusts to nature's genial power—
He wants a forest; she a flower.

Who sows the seed of heavenly faith,
And doubts Almighty power?
Will years to sum up their harvest?
Then soon all things to you seem
God, "in due time," will raise the trees.

Waiting.

Children, you are waiting before you become Christians; but why? You think that it would be a very grand thing to be Christians, and you hope that some time you will be. You really wish that you now were, but you are waiting to get older, because you think that religion is for older people; for people who are older than you are at least. Now, my dear boys and girls, do you think it is necessary that you should so wait before you can become Christians? Do you think that our blessed Saviour would have you wait until you get older before you come to Him and begin to serve Him? Does the Bible teach us this? No, children; it teaches us that Jesus wants every one to come to Him at once. He says in it, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." Now, it may be that you have sometimes thought that some of the older people, your big brothers and sisters, your fathers and mothers, and your friends, did not want you now to be Christians; they only want you now to be pretty good, attend Sabbath-school and church, say your prayers, and read your Bibles, and then when you get older become Christians.

But if your friends did think so, do you think that your Saviour would wish you to do so? If you want to know what Jesus thinks of little children, open your Bibles at the tenth chapter of Mark and read from the thirteenth to the sixteenth verse, and you will see there that when little children were brought to Him, and His disciples would stop them, He did not, but was much displeased with His disciples, and He said:

"Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." "And He took them up in His arms, put His hands upon them and blessed them."

You may expect then that the Saviour will receive you; that He will treat you very kindly and lovingly, if you will only come to Him. Why, then, should you wait before you come to Him?

Let me now, children, tell you a story which I have read, and which was like this. It shows us how one little boy came to the Saviour.

A little boy had been doing a great many naughty things one day, and at night his mamma was telling his papa about it while he was lying on his bed; not yet asleep. Presently the little fellow burst out into weeping, and when they asked him what was the matter, he said he did not want the angels to write down all those bad things against him. His father then told him he could have them blotted out or forgiven if he wished.

"Can I?" said the boy, "how?"

"If you ask God, for the sake of Jesus Christ, to do it, He will."

The little boy then wanted his father to go with him to ask God to forgive him. So they went, and together knelt before the mercy-seat and asked God for what they wanted. Then they returned, and the little boy said:

"Father, is it done? Are my sins really blotted out?"

"Yes," said the father, "if you really asked God, for the sake of Jesus Christ, the Saviour, to blot them out, He will do it."

After a little while again the boy asked, "What did He blot them out with?" and the answer was, "With the precious blood of Christ."

"You know, my dear children, perhaps, what the Bible says about that. It says in the First Epistle of John, first chapter and seventh verse, "The blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin." Then you may come at once. You need not wait till you grow older, but come now; and the blessed Saviour says He will not cast you out. He will forgive your sins for the sake of what Jesus Christ has done for you, if you will by faith take the offer—"Only believe."—Presbyterian.

Out in the Rain.

There is a touching story of the famous Dr. Samuel Johnson, which has had an influence on many a boy who has heard it. Samuel's father, Michael Johnson, was a poor bookseller in Lichfield, England. On market-day he used to carry a package of books to the village of Uttoxeter, and sell them from a stall in the market-place. One day the bookseller was sick, and asked his son to go and sell the books in his place. Samuel, from a silly pride, refused to go.

Fifty years afterwards Johnson became the celebrated author, the compiler of the "English Dictionary," and one of the most distinguished scholars in England, but he never forgot his act of unkindness to his poor, hard toiling father; so, when he visited Uttoxeter, he determined to show his sorrow and repentance.

He went into the market-place at the time of business, uncovered his head, and stood there for an hour in a pouring rain on the very spot where the book-stall used to stand. "This," he says, "was an act of contrition for my disobedience to my kind father."

The spectacle of the great Dr. Johnson, standing bare-headed in the storm to atone for the wrong done by him fifty years before is a grand and touching one. There is a representation of it (in marble) on the doctor's monument.

Many a man in after life has felt something harder and heavier than a storm of rain beating upon his heart when he remembered his acts of unkindness to a good father or mother now in their graves.

Dr. John Todd, of Pittsfield, the eminent writer, never could forget how, when his old father was sick and sent him away for medicine, he (a little lad) had been unwilling to go, and made up a lie "that the druggist had not got any such medicine."

The old man was just dying when little Johnny came in, and said to him, "My boy, your father suffers great pain for want of that medicine."

Johnny started in great distress for the medicine, but it was too late. The father on his return was almost gone. He could only say to the weeping boy, "Love God, and always speak the truth, for the eye of God is always upon you. Now kiss me once more, and farewell."

Through all his after life Dr. Todd often had a heart-ache over that act of falsehood and disobedience to his dying father. It takes more than a shower of rain to wash away the memory of such sins. Dr. Todd repented of that sin a thousand times.

The words, "Honor thy father and thy mother," mean four things—always do what they bid you, always tell them the truth, always treat them lovingly, and take care of them when they are sick or grown old. I never yet knew a boy, who trampled on the wishes of his parents, who turned out well. God never blesses a willfully disobedient son.

When Washington was sixteen years old he determined to leave home and be a midshipman in the colonial navy. After he had sent off his trunk, he went in to bid his mother good bye. She wept so bitterly, because he was going away, that he said to his negro servant, "Bring back my trunk; I am not going to make my mother suffer so by my leaving her."

He remained at home to please his mother. This decision led to his becoming a surveyor, and afterwards a soldier. His whole glorious career in life turned on this one simple act of trying to make his mother happy. And happy, too, will be the child who never has occasion to shed bitter tears for any act of unkindness to his parents. Let us not forget that God has said, "Honor thy father and thy mother."—Youth's Companion.

THE LITTLE GIRL'S GARDEN.—There was a small piece of waste ground where the grass walk ended and the firwood began, close by a pond and some rockwork for plants. A little girl was busily attending to plant some flowers. The sun was hot. She had been long at work, and was sadly tired. She worked hard, but it seemed as if the hoe and rake would never make way. The reason of this was a great stone under the soil. She tried to cover it over, and to stick the roots in soft places, but whatever she did, the bare, ugly stone was always coming through, and the first shower showed that all her work was useless.

The gardener smiled when he came. He took his iron pick and struck deep, deep into the soil. The ground shook when the split rock gave way. She thought her garden was quite spoiled now, nor could she have believed how soon it would all be covered again, and all bare, and the roots planted where they would grow. He brought her more plants, and let her help to plant them, and she daily attended to them.

Do you know what this little girl's garden is like? It is like your hearts. You must ask God to take away your sloppy heart, and to give you a new heart, and to plant therein the fruits of the Spirit; and then you must keep on praying and watching that evil weeds do not grow up in your hearts, but that grace abounds, and that you bring forth the fruits of righteousness.—Advance.

Clinging to the Shadows.

Lately our Jewish fellow-citizens have been celebrating their new year, the day of atonement, and the feast of tabernacles. Paul refers to these holy days "as shadows of things to come." The Christian cannot look upon these observances of a past dispensation without a feeling of sadness. To the worshipers there is as yet no Christ. So long has Messiah's coming been delayed that reformed Judaism begins to interpret predictions, which were supposed to refer to this event, as having other than a personal fulfillment. Even the shadows are being surrendered as to their real significance, and views obtain which strip these shadows of their import as apprehended by the ancient Israel.

Worshiping among the shadows is in gloomy contrast with the faith and experience of those to whom Christ has indeed come. A greater contrast is scarcely conceivable. In the one case is hope deferred until faith has become dead; in the other there is light and joy, and a glorified Redeemer, who is in the heart the hope of glory. In the one there are types of atonement, but no real atonement made; in the other the Lamb of God is seen, and sought, and believed on unto salvation. The Jew is shut into the Old Testament Scriptures, "but even unto this day, when Moses is read, the vell is upon their heart." The testimony of these Scriptures to the character and coming of Christ is not seen by them, and in all their searchings they fail to discover the glad tidings of great joy which the birth of the Saviour brings to thousands and millions of believers. To them there is little promise of a real personal Redeemer in the declarations and types, and no such comfort as the Christian realizes in a crucified and risen Saviour. Their light has come, but they do not see it. The consummation and completion of revelation, as exhibited in the New Testament, are to them a blank. The life and immortality, which Christ has brought to light through the gospel, are to them still in the obscurity and twilight of their shadowy dispensation.

"Without Christ" makes all the difference between a religion of shadows, and that of surpassing glory and consolation. Without Christ God has never been manifested in the flesh, the great and all-sufficient atonement has not been made, and the love of God, as exhibited in the gift of His Son, is unknown. The service of the synagogue, and the spiritual condition of its worshipers, help us to a true appreciation of the blessings of the gospel. In the gospel we have the body and substance, we have a more perfect manifestation of God, and we have a doctrine of salvation that offers pardon to every sinner. And we have in Christ a great High Priest over the house of God, not one that "cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."

The effect upon a Christian is strange, and, as we have said, very sad, to be in a house of worship, and to be among worshipers, where we hear sermons in which there can be no Christ, prayers in which the blessed name is never mentioned, and hymns in which the divine Advocate and Intercessor is wholly unknown. There is in it all a sense of bereavement, as if the Lord had been taken away, and as if the light of the tabernacle had gone out. There is a feeling of incompleteness, and the lack of nearly all that is most vital and inspiring. What a change if Christ were only put into the exposition of the law and the prophets, if His name were in the benediction, if His love and death were in the songs! How the clouds would lift, the shadows fly, before the ringing numbers of

All hail the power of Jesus' name!

or,

There is a fountain filled with blood

or,

Jesus, lover of my soul!

Here is a religion that lacks only Christ. It has everything it can have without Him, and all that inspired authority and divine revelation can give without Him. It has something more, because the Old Testament was preparatory, and the earlier stages of which the gospel is the complete unfolding. Its theism is pure and spiritual, its code of morals perfect, but it is without Christ. Long after its predictions of a coming Saviour are fulfilled, it sees and knows no personal Messiah. Long after the anti-type has appeared, the types are still adhered to. The body is rejected, and it clings to the shadows.

The time will doubtless come when Israel shall turn to the Lord, and when there shall be Christian worship in the temples and synagogues of the dispersed of Judah. There may be no literal restoration of this people to Palestine, but that, some time, they will generally receive Christ as their Saviour and the promised Messiah, there can be little doubt. They cling to the shadows now, but the day of transition is coming when the Sun of Righteousness shall arise upon them with healing in His wings. They are yet to be witnesses for Christ, and to fill an important place in the events which shall close up the history of redemption and of the world. Paul himself, who writes so assuredly of the conversion of his people, was perhaps a type of the great change that is to come upon them. Their conversion may be as sudden and wonderful as his, and they may be, as a race, a chosen vessel to overthrow the unbelief of the last ages. Their conversion may possibly inaugurate a grand Pauline era, and be the means of bringing about the latter-day glory of which their inspired bards have sung. Their conversion is to be for the world, as well as for themselves, "life from the dead." Then shall be brought to pass the declaration of Isaiah: "And He will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vell that is spread over all nations." The conversion of the Jews is too much lost sight of in our prayers. Their condition ought to incite compassion, and inspire the church of Christ with an ardent longing for their salvation. They are groping in darkness, and clinging to the shadows. They are without Christ.

Sunday-School Conferences.

The communication from the Sunday-School Editor on this subject will doubtless be carefully, and, we hope, favorably considered. We suppose the idea is, that the Methodists within the bounds of each Annual Conference organize and hold a Sunday-School Conference once a year. The details are not given, but the Conference might be composed of delegates from the pastoral charges, and the annual meeting held at some central or convenient point. The business of these Conferences would be to review the state and working of the schools in its own field, to discuss measures and methods, and to awaken additional interest in the cause.

One sentence in Dr. Cunnyngham's communication gives a sufficient reason for the movement: "Our Sunday school interests are as distinctively and emphatically denominational as any other part of our work." These are golden words, and their import ought to be deeply impressed upon the church. If Methodism is taught anywhere, it should be in the Sunday school. Whatever is distinctive in our doctrines and polity should form a part of the teaching there. It is important not only that we may keep our children in our own fold, but also that they may become intelligent, stable and exemplary members. The books, periodicals, catechisms and songs should be, as far as possible, from our own press, and by our own authors. If the Uniform Lessons are used, we should, by all means, furnish our schools with the notes and expositions of our own Sunday-School Editor, or of Methodist Commentaries. Other churches are vigilant and careful in regard to the literature of their schools, and so should we be.

Union Sunday-School Conventions may have their mission in promoting Christian fraternity, and in giving the results of the largest observation and experience, but they do not, and cannot, fully reach the needs of any particular church; least of all can they meet all the needs of our church. The Sunday-school interest in Methodism must be shaped and developed in accord with the genius of Methodism, and in no other way can we bring the Sunday-school among us up to its highest capacity of usefulness.

These Conferences, if organized, should have as little machinery about them as possible, and as little of chalk and blackboard as the spirit of the times will permit. How to compass the instruction and conversion of the children, and holding them to the church, are the main objects. We trust that the suggestion of Dr. Cunnyngham will be responded to, and that the plan may be tried. It is a measure that promises much good.

False Expectations.

There are thousands of people who imagine that all the ills they labor under, so far as relates to trade and business, are directly due to the government. If there is small demand for labor, low wages, scant commerce and low prices, the government is made the scapegoat. As if the government could control the elements, prevent drouth or flood, or cause the earth to bring forth the great staples. In order to prosperity, there must be industry, economy and thrift among the people. Without these the best of rulers can do comparatively little for the general welfare.

As long ago as we can remember anything about political campaigns, a popular argument for the election of Gen. Harrison to the presidency was inscribed upon the party banners in these words: "Two dollars a day and roast beef." This was considered good wages and good fare in those days. It was thought by many deluded people that the deliverance from the carpet bag rule would give immediate prosperity to the Southern States. This was about as utopian an idea as the cherished hope of the freedman, that emancipation would secure to each of them forty acres of land and a mule. The latter soon learned that the only road to a livelihood, and to the possession of property, was hard work. And by this time our people ought to have found out that the government and legislation cannot do everything for them. Bad government may help to make times hard, and good government may help to make them good, but neither the hard times nor the good is wholly owing to the government.

The political issues now pending in several States are, no doubt, important, but their bearing upon the individual welfare is not half so great as many think. If all the people would go to work, live soberly and honestly, develop the resources of commerce and agriculture, educate the children, and enforce the laws against crime, they could put a new face upon affairs in a short time. Well directed private enterprise and industry are of far more moment than the success of a party or a faction. We must not underestimate the value of good government, and become indifferent and inactive in our political duties, but let us beware of false and extravagant expectations. A new constitution, a change of governor or president, will not alone make prosperous times. This must be largely the result of virtue, intelligence and energy in the people themselves. That people should sit still and wait for better times to come from the elections, while their hands are folded in idleness, is truly marvelous. Useful and productive industry is the true creed of political economy.

Norman Items—Prayer Answered.

Alderney Isle, four miles long by one broad, belongs to the cluster known as the Channel Islands. Situated on the northwest coast of fair Normandy, and laved by the warm waters of the gulf stream, this rock-bound islet enjoys a climate which, for salubrity, equals that of more Southern latitudes. On it dwell a hardy race, descended, so the story runs, from ancient buccaneers. The legend states that in halcyon days of privateering, when good Queen Bess sat on England's throne, these rovers of the sea made for the hitherto inaccessible rock, and constituted it their sole domain and hiding-place. Toward this ocean refuge hied themselves the outlaws and blacklegs of adjoining France, as also the scum of the high seas till the little band became a thriving Norman-speaking colony.

Time flew apace, with little changes. After many, many years, an unusual event disturbed the public peace. The report went over the island that a youthful stranger, of sedate mien, had landed from a vessel weather-bound. The people flocked to the strand. Then the youth, calling for attention, in their own Norman vernacular, spoke of a God, of man's sinfulness, of judgment, and exhorted them to flee from the wrath to come, by accepting a crucified Saviour. Strange tidings, these! The oldest inhabitant had never heard such sayings! What, if they were true! Then ensued a marvelous scene. No stone throwing, no mud-pelting, no curses invoked on bold Adam Clarke, the preacher. The self-righteous of adjacent and more enlightened Jersey, or Guernsey, might do that, but not these convicted, sinful children of wicked pirates. No, but from that sandy beach, above the noise of roaring billow and surging wave, rose, on the wintry air, the sinner's cry: "What must I do to be saved?" Peace entered the island that day, and the result now is two Methodist Churches, one English, the other French, into which congregate, every Sabbath, many of the Island.

Among the members of the French Wesleyan Chapel of Alderney is a married couple, grandchildren of those who heard Adam Clarke that winter's day. They trained the children in the way they should go. At the Sabbath-school, in the public congregation, around the family altar, even in the old-fashioned but glorious camp meeting, were divine truths inculcated in their minds. Three were converted while young, two of whom have become ministers of the gospel. One resisted all appeals, and, desirous of viewing the world, would go to sea. In vain did loving mother plead and Christian father strive. So he was placed at a navigation school; then, on an East Indiaman, as midshipman, he set sail for the Indies. A year elapsed ere the lad came home. All noticed a change for the worst. Reckless, wicked and profane, he, to all appearances, cared neither for man nor devil. Sailing orders came. This time, however, the mother's glance, the sister's example, and the Sabbath-like quiet of the home circle, were not lost on his heart. The contrast between these, and the unholy association of sea-life, was glaring. And return he must. The thought sickened him. He might have staid had not pride been in the way. The ship weighed anchor, with our middy on board, an altered youth. The arrow of conviction, sped from the bow of family instruction, lodged deep in his soul. It rankled and brought up all the past. No longer, with such a wound, could he be the gay, thoughtless, scapegrace of last voyage. For three weary weeks he struggled on. He assayed to reform. Gloomy and morose, crushed and heavy laden, he became the shadow of his former self. Past iniquity, present despair, and fear of future retribution, cast their pall upon him. As the days dragged on the horror deepened. Although cruising under sunny skies, in the peaceful waters off Madeira Isle, yet to him it seemed as if the darkest tempest of blackest night raged on the face of the deep. Awful season, never to be forgotten! Then the climax came. Losing all confidence in himself, one Friday night, August 10, casting himself on bended knee, in anguish of soul, he cried: "Lord, save. I believe. Help mine unbelief." The Lord had mercy, the load fell, light arose, and such an inward experience of relief was given that, with David of old, he exclaimed: "Thou wast angry, but Thou forgavest mine iniquity."

Arrived at Calcutta, he received a letter from his mother, in which was this surprising announcement: "We are expecting the news of your conversion." He wrote back from an overflowing heart the glad tidings. Six months later, at Demerara, S. A., the mystery was solved. The mother writing again, said: "When you left home our hearts bled at the thought of your non-conversion. Day after day we besieged Heaven on your behalf. At length one Friday in August, day I shall never forget, I was taken seriously ill, and expected to die. I thought of you, and prayed God that if I could not meet you on earth at least to see you in heaven. In the agony of my soul, as I turned on my couch, my oppressed feelings could find no other utterance than: 'O, Lord, convert my Willie.' In a moment peace came. I felt I need no longer pray: I knew you were converted." Wonderful coincidence! The sick mother agonizes for her prodigal, and at once, thousands of miles away on the broad Atlantic, the answer falls from God in blessings on the wayward child.

And where is the son? Called by the Holy Ghost to preach, he left his advantageous position, and is now to be seen far away from mother and home, telling the glad tidings of salvation to perishing sinners. His mother still lives, and by her letters and prayers encourages him onward in his glorious work. Christian mothers, take courage, have faith in God, and "mightier things" than these "will ye see." The promise stands firm, and is sure. Prayer, agonizing prayer, and much faith, will secure their object, and with Monica, of days of old, you also will rejoice in the conversion of your children.

WILLIAM J. PICOT.

Isle aux Cannes, La., Sept. 27, 1879.

Letter from Brazil.

Piracicaba, Prov. de Sao Paulo, Brazil, September 1, 1879.

Mr. Editor: We now receive your paper with a tolerable degree of regularity, and I write this to request you to change my paper from St. Barbara to Piracicaba, Provincia de Sao Paulo.

I find you still have the wrong figures about the expenses of a missionary to be located in this town. In my last letter you print $1,600. I wrote, or intended to write, one thousand dollars to cover expenses for one year.

The bridge across the Piracicaba is 225 yards long, and an intelligent American says the river at the falls here is as large as James river at Richmond, Va., and that its facilities for manufacturing purposes are equal, if not superior, to those of James river. They are certainly very great.

I was in the city of Rio de Janeiro from the sixth to the tenth of July. Bro. Ransom's mission work was getting on well, especially his Sunday-school work among the English-speaking children. The school only numbers about thirty pupils, but the training, in all respects, is excellent. I was never so much pleased with the singing of children. From one or two little three-year-old children, up to sixteen years of age, the singing was well-nigh perfect. There are few men who would undertake to gather together children so much scattered as those children are, and there are fewer still who would have the energy and tact to keep up a Sabbath school under all the circumstances surrounding this work in Rio de Janeiro.

While in the city of Rio I had the pleasure of meeting our American minister, Hon. Mr. Hilliard. I am informed that he is much esteemed at this court. I found him the same courteous and accomplished gentleman that he was thirty years ago, when I knew him in Alabama. I also made the acquaintance of our American Consul General for Brazil, Hon. Mr. Adamson. He made many inquiries about the Americans in Sao Paulo, and seemed much gratified to know that, though we were "Confederates," and had been sojourning in Brazil from ten to twelve years, we were still Americans in heart and soul, and should live and die such.

The Brazilian government seems to desire very much to encourage immigration to the country. But the government has no fixed policy on the subject. About once in two or three years the authorities seem to wake up to the necessity of the case, and for several months they do all they can to encourage emigration, and then they relapse into their former state of apathy. Some three years ago about forty thousand Italians were brought into the country free of expense, and most of them came to this province; and it is hardly an exaggeration to say there was not forty men to the thousand who were not a serious disadvantage to this country. When you meet an Italian here you may be sure he is either a peddler or a tinker. Four-fifths are, or would be, peddlers if they could. Many of them begin their career as peddlers by carrying round on their heads images of the Romish saints for sale. They are usually such images as constitute an important part of the productions of Italy. Other countries export corn, wheat, cotton, tobacco, sugar, etc., to keep up the balance of trade. Italy exports an endless variety of saints in wood and plaster to the rest of the world, in exchange for their productions from the soil or manufactories. And to keep fully even with other countries she annually sends off thousands of her sons as peddlers, who return in from five to ten years well supplied with the precious metals.

In the States our people think the Yankees can beat the world in sharp trading, but the Portuguese can beat the Yankees to death, and the Italians are so far ahead of the Portuguese that they cannot live in competition with them. A man may sometimes think he has seen a full-grown shylock in America, but he must see and know those traveling peddlers from Italy before he can know what a modern shylock is when fully matured.

In the above paragraphs I have made one important omission. Italy does not only send forth annually an army of peddlers, but she likewise sends forth a considerable army of young priests. This annual migration to this country is so numerous that I suppose fully one-half of the priests belonging to the Roman Church in this country are Italians. Generally, this is not very agreeable to Brazilians. They know too well that the Italian priests help the Italian peddlers to drain Brazil of her wealth. Neither party add to the wealth of the country, but are always taking it away.

I will just add that such is the policy of this government that well-nigh all foreigners coming to Brazil remain foreigners, and it is very seldom one becomes naturalized. They are fully protected in their business affairs, and their religious privileges are undisturbed, but they have few inducements to become citizens.

Fraternally yours,

J. E. NEWMAN.

From Dr. Tudor.

Mr. Editor: The St. Louis Conference, just closed, was one of great peace and effectiveness. Nearly all the preachers were present, and the average proportion of lay delegates elect. Bishop Pierce was with us, bright, cheerful, hopeful, notwithstanding on the second day of the session he was scarcely able to speak audibly from the chair, but the disability passed away with the day, and his voice remained firm and competent for all the purposes of the chair to the close of the session. He, however, found it prudent to decline preaching on Sunday, which we all deeply regretted. The whole church has been exercised recently with regard to Bishop Pierce's health; our fears here existed at one time that he would not be able to preside over us; his violent cough at times, and his enfeebled and difficult utterance, perplexed and saddened us all, but all were more sad and perplexed than he was. It was truly delightful and charming not to discover, by the closest observation, the least trace in him of depression of spirits, or dejection, or impatience, or restiveness under his disability, so in contrast with his former vigor and power for all the work of an Annual Conference. Whatever may be said of the doubtful propriety of lauding the sermons of Bishops, or others, the fact above stated ought to be mentioned, in my judgment, as exemplary and admirable, and more to the praise of God's grace and Spirit, than even a fine sermon might be. Moreover, the indications in the Bishop's case do not appear to be desperate, and there are certainly many encouragements to our prayer and hope that, by the diligent use of the means, his life and effective labors may yet long be continued to the church.

The business of the Conference was promptly and yet soberly dispatched. There were no cases of discipline, and no deaths to mourn over. The religious exercises were marked by deep spiritual fervor and enjoyment. Two or three incidents of special interest signalized the session. A debt upon the Board of Missions, in its domestic department, accrued upon drafts of three years' standing, that remained unpaid, and amounting to over $1,000, was provided for and virtually paid. Two liberal laymen of St. Louis proposed to pay one half of the debt, if the Conference might manage the other half, which was done upon the spot by the preachers and by laymen present, citizens of Fredericktown, the seat of the Conference, delegates and visitors. The old debt will not be heard of more, and the raw place upon our backs, under its saddle, is healed. There is nothing like paying a debt to get rid of it.

Dr. D. R. McAnally, by invitation of the Conference, in this the fiftieth year of his ministry, delivered a semi-centennial sermon to a crowded house. The discourse was full of interesting facts and sober views concerning the present condition and needs of the church suggested by the subject as stated: "Now and Then."

We were exceedingly pleased to have the Missionary Secretary, Dr. A. W. Wilson, come in upon us, though at a late moment, on this his first visit to our Conference. We had despaired of his coming through reports of his illness, but he arrived in time to address the Conference and the missionary meeting on Saturday night, to our great entertainment and edification. Surely none can hear Dr. Wilson on his theme and work to which he has given the closest thought and attention, without gaining enlarged and exalted views of "foreign" missions, "among all nations," as a duty and enterprize second in importance to none imposed upon the church.

Dr. R. A. Young was with us, as a man of multitudinous and multifarious interests to look after, and right well did he represent them all, and right well did he do where he was not only abundant in speech and counsel when called off, but also in material aid, or liberal contributions, whenever the inevitable hat was passed round in behalf of objects in which the Conference was concerned.

W. V. TUDOR.

St. Louis, Oct. 3, 1879.

What One Little Society is Doing.

The following communication recently appeared in the Southern Missionary Herald. The writer is mistaken as to the number of members in the St. Charles Avenue Church. It is not about one hundred, but something over two hundred.

New Orleans, August 3, 1879.

Rev. A. R. Rucker.

Dear Sir:—* * It may interest you to hear a little of a missionary effort connected with the St. Charles Avenue Church; a neat and beautiful edifice lately erected in this city, and of which most of the above list of subscribers are members. Shortly after its completion the ladies formed a society; and among its first resolutions it was determined "to take hold of the Mexican Mission," in which the Rev. W. M. Patterson had just been assigned, and with which we had such direct communication through our own resident Bishop. In connection with a sister church we have supported a female teacher and furnished an organ for one of the congregations there.

In answer to an appeal from Mr. Patterson (published in your June number.) "we have just forwarded a considerable sum to aid in printing Mexican books and tracts" from that same "wooden press, built by his own hands," and which has been sending forth monthly the Evangelista Mexicano, to a people hungering after religious knowledge. I have given you these few items, as our little band was formed before the organization of the Woman's Mission society, and as we were pledged to it is particular field we have deemed it advisable to continue the work independently, more so, as our special correspondence with the superintendent has endeared the work to us very much. I would add, that we have not confined ourselves to this one mission, but have sent occasional offerings to China, etc.

The St. Charles Avenue Church now numbers about one hundred members, and it is not quite three years since it was finished, and yet our little Society has forwarded $530, and this independently of the church and Sunday-school collections.

Perhaps this statement may encourage young churches to begin the same work.

Yours in the best of bonds,

C. G. S.

We call that a most admirable report. We thank Sister S. for subscribers sent, and for her kind words of appreciation and promise of more help in the way of subscribers to our Herald. We rejoice that our paper is stirring up our people to good works. Sorry to learn that some of our large list of subscribers in New Orleans have been failing to get our paper. It has been regularly sent.—Editor Missionary Herald.)

The Philadelphia correspondent of the Standard, Chicago, gives the following account of a wise and practical benevolence:

A wealthy member of one of our churches, who will not permit his name to be mentioned, has added another grand deed to an already goodly list, by giving $6,000 to relieve the Fiftieth Church of debt. The same noble brother gave a while since $8,000 to the Grace Church to enable them to finish their meeting-house. A few months later he cancelled the debt of the Centennial Church by the payment of $6,000. And now he adds $6,000 to cancel the indebtedness of the Fiftieth Church, making within the year $20,000, all for the benefit of poor and struggling young churches. His agent in these transactions is Rev. William Parker, of the First Church. Mr. Parker's method is to seek to add to these large benefactions by smaller subscriptions, whatever may be necessary to remove the debts of the churches for which help is offered. The entire encumbrance of the Fiftieth Church was $7,600. This was all secured by Mr. Parker's efforts and the church is therefore entirely free from financial obligations. The practical value of such work as this cannot be estimated. Mr. Parker and his nameless friend form a church extension society worth a half dozen of the ordinary sort. The best of it is, everything is done so quietly and modestly that nobody knows what is going on until the good results are announced. If this is not genuine, practical Christianity, I do not know what is meant by that term. Such men are a blessing to the world. May God multiply them until church debts shall be unknown, and every mission interest be set squarely on its feet.

Transferring to Texas.

A correspondent of the Texas Christian Advocate writes at length on the above topic. We quote some paragraphs:

As a rule, no reputation is worth much in Texas, except what is won on Texas soil. A group of Texans will hear you with the utmost indifference, tell you [illegible] such stations in ——conference. What you call to have is what they would like to know. If you come, do not expect any one to recognize in you any greatness until you show it on this field. Make up your mind to a second probation. It will be long or short, severe or mild, according as you possess aptitudes to "take on" what is characteristically Texan.

Are Texas preachers friendly to transfers? In the abstract they are. But is, they are loyal to the connectional feature of our economy as much so as preachers anywhere. But their feelings to transfers are in the concrete, subject to modification. I will explain. In this commodity, as well as in all others, the law of supply and demand asserts itself. One of our largest conferences considers itself fully supplied, and has given expression to its opinion in the form of a resolution, requesting that bishops presiding in other districts will make no more transfers to their body without consulting their bishop and cabinet. One pushing himself into a body already full to overflowing ought to be moderate in his demands for expressions of welcome.

The writer goes on to say that, old men, preachers with large families, those who have proven themselves failures, or think themselves not appreciated at their full value at home are not wanted. Of the kind of men needed he says:

What kind of men, if any, do you need? Well, just the kind the church needs there—men just as rich in all the elements of ministerial power. Indeed, to conquer this land, to which the vices of every part of the globe are being imported, to become at once aggressive, needs a higher order of ministerial ability, a richer baptism of the spirit that nailed the Crucified to the cross, than is really needed to hold the land conquered to Christ by the fathers of your great conference. Whoever is not so full of love for Christ and his purchased as to be willing to do all and suffer all that is needful to redeem this fair land from the vices incident to the incoming of a heterogeneous population, is one he the transfer or to the manor born—such a preacher as Texas needs. Let no illiterate come, primarily to occupy our rich lands; and secondarily, to attempt the duties of his holy calling. If such are the purposes, let him locate before he comes. Otherwise, he will do us more harm than good.

You now understand the kind of men we need—young men of fair education; if married, men of small families; men willing to do full pastoral and pulpit work on meredeing salaries; men full of zeal and of the Holy Ghost; ambitious to win results that shall be to their praise throughout eternity. If, as your consciousness testifies, you answer to this outline, we have room for you and your sort—come. There is no grander field for ministerial enterprise than this. But if you are to come with the quid pro quo idea underlying all you undertake for the church; if with an eye to bettering your temporal condition, rather than to your greatest possible efficiency as a preacher and pastor, come, if at all, as a local preacher.

E. J. Stanley, writing to the St. Louis Christian Advocate, from Whitehall, Montana, September 15, says:

"Our Conference adjourned last night. We had a pleasant session, a large attendance of our people, several accessions to the church, and a general time of refreshing. At the missionary meeting on Saturday night, Bishop Keener raised a collection of $162 for missions. I consider it a grand success. How many country neighborhoods will do as well. We are not dead yet, Mr. Editor, thanks be to our God, and those who have been waiting to preach our funeral will wait in vain. Both preachers and people were greatly refreshed and encouraged, and go to their homes and fields of labor with a stronger faith and brighter hope of ultimate success. There is a work for us to do here which others cannot do. Bishop Keener leaves in today's coach. He has greatly refreshed us with his presence and counsel."

Calvary congregation, Rev. Dr. Cox, pastor, has bought, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, the Methodist Protestant Church property, on the corner of Lombard and Green streets, Baltimore. There are a band of devoted Southern Methodists, and have held with an unflinching devotion to their principles through many vicissitudes. We hope they are comfortable at home now.

—In a recent article by Bro. Werlein, on "California as a Home," there was a very considerable mistake. The types said: "Skepticism is almost universal, as much free-thinking, or more than in any city or State of Virginia." It should read: "Any city or State in America." A correspondent sends us a vindication of old Virginia from a slander that was not in the manuscript. That venerable commonwealth is, no doubt, as free from skepticism and free-thinking as any State in the Union.

—A sister, writing from Washington, La., October 2, says:

"The Lord is blessing us spiritually here on Bayou Fordoche. I wish you could attend our weekly prayer and class meetings sometimes. Our new church is now in progress. Pray that it may be speedily completed. We lack sufficient funds to build it without debt, yet we expect to finish it by Christmas, no providential hindrance occurring. There is a great deal of sickness around now, fatal in many cases."

—Rev. E. R. Strickland has left on our desk a specimen of the marl which is found in large quantities at Byram, Miss. This marl is represented as something wonderful as a fertilizer—the cheapest and the best to restore impoverished and worn out lands. Its general use by our farmers and planters would greatly increase the productiveness of the soil and be a benefit to the country.

—Rev. C. R. Lynch, writing October 4, says: God has added seventy-two souls to the three churches in the Trinity circuit, North Alabama Conference.

MISSIONS AND MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. By Rev. J. M. Reid, D. D. In two volumes. With maps and illustrations. New York: Phillips & Hunt; Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden, 1879.

The mission work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, especially its foreign mission work, does honor to that branch of the church of Christ. Its missions are in every part of the world, and the results as detailed in these volumes are something wonderful. Besides their domestic missions, the Methodist Episcopal Church has missions in Sweden, Norway, Germany, Bulgaria, Italy, India, China, Japan, Africa, South America and Mexico. The origin, progress and present condition of all the missions are given, the money expended, an account of the missionaries engaged, and much interesting matter connected with the countries occupied, and the history of the planting and development of the work. The maps and illustrations give additional interest and value to the volumes. The frontispiece of Volume I is a portrait of Dr. Nathan Bangs. The work is a valuable contribution to the missionary literature of the day, and will be of interest and service to the missionary cause in all the churches. The volumes are handsome duodecimos, 462-471 pages.

THE ATONEMENT IN CHRIST. By John Miley, D. D. New York: Phillips & Hunt; Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden, 1879.

Dr. Miley is the able Professor of Systematic Theology in Drew Theological Seminary. His views of the atonement are those held by Wesleyan Arminians, and are presented in a very compact and orderly way. His plan and method comprehend the subject thoroughly, and bring opposing systems of doctrine within the scope of discussion. He treats in separate chapters: Reality of atonement; necessity for atonement; schemes without atonement; theories of atonement; theory of moral influence; theory of satisfaction; governmental theory; sufficiency of the atonement; a lesson for all intelligencies; objections to the atonement; universality of the atonement. These points are all discussed with great clearness and power. We commend the work to our brethren of the ministry as worthy of careful study, and to those who are seeking for light and truth. Our own examination of the volume has not been sufficiently thorough to justify us in an unqualified approval, but, so far as we have gone, we are most favorably impressed with it. The volume is a large and well-bound 12mo of 342 pages.

LIFE OF MARTIN LUTHER. By Chevalier Bunsen. With an estimate of Luther's character and genius, by Thomas Carlyle; and an appendix, by Sir William Hamilton. New York: American Book Exchange, 1879.

A little book 16mo, 219 pages, and filled with the estimate of Luther by two very remarkable and gifted men. The reverse side of the picture, by Sir William Hamilton, contains some hard things about the great champion and hero of the Reformation, and things that may be true in part or in whole.

—"California Sketches" is the title of a delightful little volume by O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., published by the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. The sketches are from real life, and give us very graphic pictures of the romantic and adventurous period of California life and society. In them we have glimpses of scenes and characters which could hardly be found outside of California, and only there during the earlier times of its settlement by the miners, and fortune-hunters, who flocked thither from all parts of the world. These sketches are crisp and picturesque in style, moistened with humor, and occasionally toned with pathos and serious practical lessons. A very pleasant and entertaining book, helpful to digestion, and an enemy to the "blues." For sale by the Publishing House at Nashville, and also by Lathrop & Wilkins, New Orleans.

—Foreign Gleanings, No. I, American Book Exchange, New York, gives: The Evangelical Movement, Its Parentage, Progress and Issue, by W. E. Gladstone; The History of the Evangelical Movement, by W. E. H. Lecky; The Religious Condition of Germany, by Friedrich Von Schulte.

DEAR OLD STORIES. By Faith Latimer, issued by the American Tract Society, in six numbers, quarto form, and beautifully illustrated. Contain in all forty stories from the Bible, and make a delightful series for the religious entertainment and instruction of the young people. Each little volume is sold for fifteen cents. Bound in one volume, cloth, $1 25.

A CROWN OF GLORY. By Catharine M. Trowbridge. American Tract Society. The story is well told, and calculated to lead the youthful reader to right views and practice in the endeavor to live religiously. The volume is an elegant 12mo, 209 pages. Price, ninety cents.

—Observations on Yellow Fever, is the title of a pamphlet by Dr. Alcee Chastant, of New Orleans. Dr. Chastant is an old practitioner in the yellow fever region, and has had large experience in its treatment, and the best of opportunities to observe its character. The pamphlet is an interesting one, and contains much curious and useful information about a most mysterious disease.

—The Nineteenth Century for September has: 1. Recreation, by George J. Romanes. 2. A Dialogue on Human Happiness, by W. H. Mallock. 3. Clerical Education in France, by Edmond About. 4. Charles Tennyson Turner, by James Spedding. 5. The God of Israel—a history—by Joseph Jacobs. 6. The Political Novels of Lord Beaconsfield, by B. T. E. Kobbe. 7. Notes by the Way in India: The Land and the People, 3, by James Caird. 8. A Cagliostro of the Second Century, by James Anthony Froude. 9. The Public Interest in Agricultural Reform, concluded, by William E. Bear. Also Splendid Misery, by Miss M. E. Braddon—chapters xii xi. George Munro, publisher, New York. Price, $2 25 per annum.

—The Fortnightly Review for September has: 1. The Coming Land Question, by J. Boyd Kinnear. 2. The New Psychology, by W. L. Courtney. 3. German Politics, by H. Tuttle. 4. Maxims of Wisdom, by G. A. Sinclair. 5. The Present State of China, by Herbert Giles. 6. Two Men of Letters, by George Saintsbury. 7. The Wages Fund Theory, by Henry Sidgwick. 8. Macedonia, by J. Kinnaird Rose. 9. Home and Foreign Affairs. Also Young Mrs. Jardine, by Miss Mulock—chapters 1-x. From Good Words. Published by George Munro, New York. Price, $2 25 per annum.

—The Arkansas Methodist is the title of a new paper published at Dardanelle, Ark., Rev. Jerome Harrolson editor. It is a comely, four page sheet, of a good size, and fair typography.

The first number gives promise of excellence. It is to be published in the interest of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

—The Sanitarian for October has: Disinfection by Heat; The Chemistry of Dirt; Yellow Fever in New Orleans, and other articles.

While we continue to do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements from the ADVOCATE, parties must judge for themselves as to the real value of the goods advertised. In ordering please mention the ADVOCATE.

THE ADVOCATE

FOR TWENTY-FIVE CENTS TO JANUARY, 1880.

The publisher announces to the thousands of our friends that he will send the paper from date to January next on receipt of twenty-five cents in currency or postage stamps. This is done to facilitate securing new subscribers, and, feeling assured that with but slight effort on the part of our patrons, thousands of persons could be induced to take advantage of this trial offer, many of whom after that time would become permanent subscribers. Will they exert themselves to swell the list? There is no other investment that will supply the same amount of interesting reading matter, fresh each week, as this liberal offer. Let us hear from you as early as possible.

THE ADVOCATE FREE.

To any person sending us four yearly subscribers with $1 the paper will be sent free for one year. Sample copies will be mailed to parties when advised, to facilitate agents in securing subscribers. Address all communications in connection with above to the publisher.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS, of the staff of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, left Wednesday evening, for the West and East, on business connected with the ADVOCATE. We bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.—Fruit jars. Mason pints, $1; quarts, $1 25; two quarts, $1 50 per dozen; American China dinner sets, $15-$18. Equal in looks and usefulness as French China. 19

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and homelike comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those about to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so thoroughly a first-class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3 50 per day.

KEWANEE WINDMILL.—For particulars respecting this popular windmill see the ad on the sixth page. It is considered to be the best one in use, and those requiring a reliable and of the same class an economical windmill should buy one from the Kewanee Manufacturing Company, 6 Broadway, New York. They invariably take the premium wherever exhibited. Agents wanted.

THE house of Philip Werlein is so well and favorably known all over the South that we need not attempt to recommend it to those of our readers who may need pianos, organs or other musical instruments. Call on him, and you will be satisfied with quality, price and terms.

PIANOS AND ORGANS.—Our old friend, Horace Waters' advertisement will be seen on this page. He has reduced the prices on all the instruments, and our friends will find him an honorable gentleman to do business with. Remember his place, and send for catalogue.

IT IS with a perfect reliance upon its efficacy that we recommend our readers to use Lapham's Indian Tonic. Pectoral Balm when troubled with coughs, colds or any other affections of the respiratory organs. Thousands of people all over the State who have tried it have found that it is superior to anything they have ever tried. It is a home remedy, and is put up by Mr. B. Lapham, Nos. 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street, New Orleans.

MR. E. H. ADAMS, of the popular drygoods house of E. H. Adams & Bro., has just returned from the North, where he purchased a large line of fresh goods. Mr. Adams is a cheap buyer, and he has a way of knowing just what his lady customers will like, therefore attention is called to their advertisement, and you are invited to call on, if living out of the city, to send to them, with the assurance of being pleased as to quality of goods, at the lowest prices.

COD LIVER OIL JELLY is a product which comparatively recent date, and said to be much more efficacious in many cases than the oil itself, and much pleasanter to take. The popular brand is called Queen's Cod Liver Oil Jelly, and is approved by the Academy of Medicine of New York for coughs, colds, bronchial and tubercular consumption, scrofula and general debility. Read the card of Mr. E. H. Travis, in another column, who is the manufacturer of it, and if your druggist does not keep it in stock be can order it for you. Give it a trial.

THE best preserves put up, and, we believe, the only reliable canned shrimp, fresh okra, pickled veal, etc., are put up by Messrs. Dunbar's Sons, are entitled to full credit for the success of their efforts. We again call the attention of our readers to this fact, and request a careful perusal of their advertisement on the seventh page, that they may be certain to ask for Dunbar's preparations, if they desire something strictly first class. These gentlemen make only goods that are warranted, and all first class grocers feel the necessity of carrying a good stock and assortment of them to insure a retention of their customers. If your grocer does not keep them ask him to order some at once, and you will do him a service.

FACTS ABOUT FURNITURE.—A recent visit paid the mammoth furniture emporium of R. M. & H. J. Montgomery (our opposite neighbors) in the beautiful Mayesville Building, both surprised and pleased us immensely. Having visited their large show rooms frequently in the past, and wondered at the facility with which they turned out the vast amount of furniture seen constantly going from their building to the different dwellings in our city, as well as to the boats and railroad depots for shipment to the country, it was still a matter of surprise to visit the source of supply, and note the immense stock they carry. Mr. Montgomery kindly acted as pilot on the occasion, and, after inspecting on the first floor the magnificent desks, for office use, in a hundred different styles, the elaborate easels, card receivers and French plate mirrors, in massive gilt frames; for parlor decoration, the varied styles of easy chairs for comfort, combined with beauty, with other novelties unnumbered, we indulged in a brief inspection of the second floor. Here we found handsome bed-room sets, in vast array, from the cheapest, at marvelously low prices to the finest one could desire. Parlor suits in silk, satin, tapestry reps, and hair cloth; marble top tables, side boards, hat-racks, and every conceivable article in the furniture line, conveniently arranged for inspection, and making a handsome display. Next we visited the third story, which not only covers its extensive ware-rooms below, but extends over the large store adjoining, and is literally packed from floor to ceiling with all kinds of furniture as displayed below. In addition, there is a fourth story, or loft, not observable from the exterior of the building, used for keeping feathers used in pillows and bolsters, which are made on the premises. The factory for mattresses is in another part of the city, under the management of one of the firm. In fact, this is undoubtedly the most complete furniture house in the South, if not in the United States, and is said to contain more furniture than any other establishment in the country under one roof. Having purchased from them, we confidently recommend them to our friends as reliable and trustworthy, and know they advertise only what they have and can supply on short notice. Try them.

Farm, Garden and Household.

—MAKING PICKLES.—I give the method commonly used by farmers around Boston for pickling cucumbers, beans, onions, cauliflower, etc. Provide good tight casks or barrels. Empty beef or pork barrels are excellent; molasses hogsheads will answer, though more apt to be leaky. Take off one head from each cask, and mount them on the other head upon blocking high enough to admit of drawing off the brine from the hole near the bottom. A light cellar is the best place to mount the casks. Provide also for each cask a loosely fitting head about half an inch smaller than the chime of the cask. When the vegetables are brought in from the field they are assorted, if it is desired to market them separately, or else picked together if to be put up as "mixed pickles." They are then well washed in cold water, and placed in the casks, and immediately covered with a pickle made strong enough to float a potato. The loose head is placed over them and loaded with stones, to keep the pickles under the brine. After a few days a fermentation takes place; the scum which rises to the surface should be removed every day or two, and at the same intervals the brine should be drawn off and the bottom of each cask and pressed over the pickles again. This process will equalize the strength of the brine, and prevent it becoming too fresh at the surface. When the fermentation subsides, the keg will need no further care until opened for use, except to keep them constantly covered with brine. A few days before marketing take them from the brine with a clean net, and place them in fresh cold water, which should be changed three or four times a day, till the pickles are quite fresh. They are then taken out of the water and placed in strong vinegar, spiced to suit the taste (whole pepper, allspice and cloves and alum sparingly) overnight are ready for sale. The old-fashioned style of scalding the vinegar is unnecessary, and the practice of "greening" pickles in a copper kettle is very deservedly growing unpopular. The green color of old pickles is due to the small amount of copper absorbed from the copper kettle, and has nothing whatever to do with their goodness. Pickles prepared as above described are of a mild yellowish-brown color and are sometimes made a little brighter yellow by the harmless addition of turmeric.—Country Gentleman.

TWO WAYS FOR POTATOES.—The English fashion of cooking this vegetable is to put water on the fire with considerable salt in it. At the first boil, drop a quart of washed potatoes in and, boil till done; then take them off, peel, and put them whole in a saucepan, with butter, salt and pepper, and roll the dinner. Set on a roller, sow fire, stirring gently now and then, till they have absorbed all the butter. Serve warm. It takes considerable butter to cook them in this way.

Another way is to put two ounces of butter in a stewpan, and set it on the fire to get hot, add a teaspoonful of parsley chopped fine; and a little salt; fry two minutes after put in a quart of potatoes, prepared, cooked, peeled, and mashed, as directed; then pour on the whole, little by little, stirring continually with a wooden spoon, a pint of good milk; and when the whole is well mixed, and becoming rather thick, take from the fire, place on the dish, then set in a brisk oven for five minutes and serve.

IRON-CLAD ROOFS.—The latest structures of iron is the invention of Lyon shingles. Wooden shingles have begun growing somewhat scarce and expensive, and have often to be renewed. Now it seems that a kind of tile, or plate, nine inches the same size and shape, will rapidly rise their place. The iron tiles are much lighter and more durable than the wooden covering, for a single layer of the iron tiles will last as long as the beams and rafters of the roof beneath. Again, the iron does not expand and contract with every rain storm and dry day, and so much leaking is avoided. A special advantage is that they make the roof practically fire-proof. No ordinary sparks and cinder from an adjacent burning buildings can set an iron shingle on fire and bore a hole large enough to burn through and char the beam beneath can do no damage. These shingles are said to be as cheap and more easily put on than the wooden ones.—Christian Union.

JAPANESE PEARS.—The Bulletin d'Arboriculture for March contains a colored figure of some Pears which were grown in Von Siebold's garden at Leyden, and which are remarkable for their oblong obtuse form, russet-brown skin speckled with yellowish spots, the stalk also is long and thick, the eye shallow. The fruits, for there are two, are said to have a peculiar flavor. The twin varieties figured are named respectively Madame Von Siebold and Siebold's. Our contemporary commends the Pears for Hybridizing purposes. Our attention was drawn to the fruit from the great resemblance between them and the fruit of the Sand Pear, Pyrus sinesis, figured by us on October 9, 1875, p. 457. Can they be forms of the same species?—Gardeners Chronicle.

—Make a strong solution of lime-water, pour it over the cabbage in the evening; if the lime-water be made strong there will be no live worms left in the water. Last fall I had a nice patch of cabbage infested with the worms. After trying all other remedies I could think of, I resorted to the lime-water, and to tell the truth, expected to find my cabbage cooked next morning, but was agreeably disappointed to find the cabbage green and bright, and the worms lying all over the patch killed as a door-nail." A thin mixture of kerosene and sprinkled about cucumber, melon and squash vines are said to drive away the insects enemies that flies. Hemp.—Iowa Farmer.

TO BAKE A HAM.—Time, four hours. Take a medium-sized ham, and place it to soak for ten or twelve hours. Then cut away the rusty part from underneath, wipe it dry, and cover it entirely with a paste of flour and water. Put it into an earthen dish, and set it into a moderately-heated oven for four hours. When done, take off the crust carefully and peel off the skin. Put a frill of cut paper round the knuckle, and raspings grated over the fat of the ham, or serve it glazed, and garnished with cut vegetables. Some persons decidedly prefer a baked ham to a boiled one; but we think it better boiled or steamed.

KEEPING THE HEAD CLEAN.—Many persons find speedy relief for nervous headache by washing the body thoroughly in weak soda water. I have known severe cases almost wholly cured in ten minutes by this simple remedy. A friend finds it the greatest relief in case of fever and inflammation of the brain. Cut off the hair close to the head, wash the head thoroughly in soda water, and apply a cloth wet with the same. Change frequently. Use the soda water freely in bathing the body. Many cases of fever have been entirely broken up by this treatment.

A NICE PUDDING.—Yolks of three eggs and teacup of sugar, one quart of sweet milk; one pint of bread crumbs; butter the size of an egg; one-half cup of raisins (in the summer season, cherries, strawberries, etc., are just as good); bake one-half hour. Take the whites of the eggs and beat to a stiff froth; add one-half cup of sugar, and the juice of one lemon for lemon essence; return to the oven and bake slightly. To be eaten cold."

—The beet-sugar enterprise in Maine seems in a promising way, but the farmers can receive little coming season, I expect, from the attempt. The company intends to encourage the growing of beets by the uniform price of $5.75 a ton for the beet, when delivered at any depot in the State, and this price makes the growing of beets the most profitable of farm crops, provided the culture be understood, and attention be given to the conditions for success.

BLACK CAKE.—Twelve eggs; one pound of butter; one pound of sugar; three pounds of currants, two pounds of raisins; one tablespoonful of cloves and flour to make quite stiff. Put the fruit in last.

THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
OR BILIOUSNESS.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, sometimes on pressure extending across the body to the left side, the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt in the shoulder blade, and often mistaken for rheumatism. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite, sour eructations, bowels general costive, sometimes alternating with diarrhœa, headache, dizziness, loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been performed, a dull, heavy, stupefying pain in the head, indicating congestion of the brain, with occasional vertigo, or swimming of the head, although actual fainting rarely occurs, the whole train of nervous symptoms attend the disease in its various forms. The color of the skin and eyes is frequently, but not always, affected, sometimes assuming a dark or muddy appearance, sometimes a clear yellow, like the color of gamboge or rhubarb. In many cases the whole surface of the body, even the whites of the eyes, are of a bright yellow color, the kidneys are affected, and the patient makes water frequently, and large quantities pale and clear, like water. In all cases of Liver Complaint the bowels are more or less constipated, sometimes very much so, at other times the patient is troubled with diarrhœa, and frequently exchanges from one to the other in quick succession, but the constipation is more frequently the case. In fact, the whole catalogue of nervous diseases are apt to put in an appearance, and the patient may complain of all the ills that flesh is heir to.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

There are many imitations of the genuine DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS prepared by parties in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., the word McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation, and initials of the name the same, have been adopted, and variety of shapes of bottles, in order to induce the unwary to purchase the imitation for the genuine. Examine well the wrappers.

DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin,
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.
PRICE REDUCED.

THIS GIN has been in use for the past six seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the end of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same amount of seed than any other gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work with the same time, while consolidating steam or animal power, than any other gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 50 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

JUPITER'S SPOT.—There is trouble in the great planet Jupiter, which is shining so brilliantly these cool August nights. A great spot, estimated to be 18,000 miles in diameter, is conspicuous on the planet's disc. It has been visible for two years, says M. Trouvelot, of Cambridge, Mass., although its appearance has not been generally known until recently. It is probable that on the first discovery of the spot the color was not strongly pronounced, or it would have been more generally observed. Dr. Swift, of Rochester, saw the spot for the first time only a few weeks ago. The only explanation thus far given is that there is a rent in the cloud covering of Jupiter, revealing the reddish body of the planet. This explanation hardly explains, although it is now generally conceded that Jupiter is a glowing mass, and shines partly by his own light. Many remarkable changes have recently taken place in the appearance of Jupiter. Those who search for the red spot cannot fail to notice the white, cloud-like spots between the great copper-colored equatorial belts. The great central belt seems to be broken up into white cloud masses lying at intervals along the Jovian equator. The copper color of the outer belt extends in some places across the equatorial regions, usually occupied by a bright belt of creamy white. North and south of the great equatorial belts, and about half way to the poles, are narrow, irregular, salmon-colored belts, that present a very beautiful appearance. The blue coloring about the poles seems less pronounced than usual. It is more than probable that in the mighty changes going on in Jupiter, we are witnessing the phenomena of world growth, and that the giant planet is slowly undergoing, under our very eyes, those modifications necessary to fit it for habitation.

FLAX SILK.—According to a German paper, a discovery has just been made at Lyons whereby a silken appearance may be given to flax fibres. After chemical treatment of flax yarn it is dipped into a liquid prepared from silk waste, which leaves a silken coating upon it, and in regard to fineness, elasticity, and gloss, the material is said to be perfect as a substitute for silk. The new textile material no longer resembles flax, but has a bright, highly glossy silken thread. It is less than a short time ago a Lyons gentleman went to Lyons, and for the sum of 2,000 francs offered to communicate to the silk manufacturers a process by which a texture could be produced from flax yarn at the rate of 9 francs per kilogramme, which would be equal, if not superior, to the silk produced at thirty-five francs per kilogramme. As the manufacturers hesitated to accept the offer, the prepared samples on the spot, which were so successful that within many hours fourteen meters were given, on receiving payment the specimens ceased. A limited company, with a capital of 6,000,000 francs, high license for 3,000,000 francs, is now to be formed to work the process. Should the process prove a success, it will cause a revolution not only in the silk industry, but in all the textile branches, and especially in the flax culture.

—Mr. Shirley Hibberd, an associate of the London Linnæan Society, has recently published a paper, showing the remarkable way in which plants which rarely or never bear seed find their way to all parts of the world. He likes the illustration of the "Lord Columbine" (Aquilegia Vulgaris). It is a pretty perennial, but it hardly ever ripens its seed in England. Mr. Hibberd says he has yet failed to find the first bud in which the seed-vessels are not imperfect. The rose has been cited as one of the cases of floral structure and mystery that has been worked out, but Mr. Hibberd thinks much remains to be done. Arguments in support of the theory of the development of species by natural selection are not wanting, but Mr. Hibberd wants to know what is the use of millions of flowers annually produced, but the seeds of which never come to maturity? In the case of this Ranunculus, Mr. Hibberd shows how remarkably it makes its way through the world, though producing no seed. He illustrates his point by the fact of the opening of a "fine" lake in Essex Park, in England. He does not say how large an incision leaves an impression on the water, but it is several acres, and in five years the original lake was "one sheet of yellow flowers" from this plant. Similar facts are well known to botanists, though the same inferences may not be drawn from them. The Tiger Lily, the Horse Radish, the Yellow Flag, and many others flower, seed, and rarely seed; but they are forever travelers, notwithstanding.

A copper coin, dated 1787, and inscribed "Auctoritate Congressus—Independency and Liberty," and upon the reverse, "Republic of Connecticut," (Connecticut,) was unearthed upon the bank of the Merrimack River, near the Lawrence corporation, some days since. It was in a good state of preservation. Sergt. Kelly of the Boat Force, unearthed a penny of the reign of George III, and dated 1797, in his garden on Hamilton street, one day last week. It had become quite rusty, and had evidently been part of quite a number of years.

Cathartic Pills

Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately suited to their varying activity, to secure uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy ever discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. AYER'S PILLS are speedily applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel, or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these Pills are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

CATARRH

Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects are enough to make one shudder to think of. Weak eyes, blindness, loss of sense of smell, disgusting nasal deformities, and finally consumption. These are but a few of the horrors it entails. Hoffman's treatments are worse than useless. Hundreds of cases pronounced incurable by the most eminent physicians have been cured by this remedy. While a cure is possible it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is
Dr. M. W. CASE'S CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANT
FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness.
It does not require days or weeks to demonstrate the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most powerful agent known to science. Diseases and Catarrh of the most loathsome and revolting character succumb with the first inhaling and soothing influence accompanied with Pure Fresh Tar, that the mere breathing relieves the most distressing symptoms. This is effected taken right to the diseased part. No Drug, no Nauseating Stomach Medicine, simply inhaling of the healing, balmy air of Pure Fresh Tar. It is recommended by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by the wealthy, who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT—Circulars, etc., Sent Free—Until Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address DR. M. W. CASE, 833 Arch St., Philadelphia Pa.

WE BELIEVE

That if everyone would use Hop Bitters freely, there would be much less sickness and misery in the world; and people are fast finding this out; whole families keeping well at a trifling cost by its use. We advise all to try it.—U. & A., Rochester, N. Y.—Adv.

BISCUIT.—To a quart flour and two teaspoonfuls Kellogg's Baking Powder, sifted together dry; a teaspoonful salt; half a cup of shortening; and, milk or water to make soft dough. Bake very quick.

A young woman who had never learned the art of cookery, being desirous of impressing her husband with her knowledge and diligence, manages to have the kitchen door ajar on the day after their return from the bridal trip, and, just as her lord comes in from the table, exclaims, loudly: "Hurry up, Eliza, do! Haven't you washed the lettuce yet? Here, give it to me. Where's the soap?"

VASELINE.

You may hunt the world over and still will find
A need of the household which brings to the mind
The idea of value, pure, pliable to seven
That is the cum jelly, the famed Vaseline.

If a cut or a sprain, or a wound or a burn
From peace to confusion, the household shall turn,
On the shelf should be found the foe of all pain
And quiet shall reign in the household again.

If our dearest and fairest are kissed by the sun
And the touch of his lips is too rough to be borne,
Kind Vaseline comes as an ally he ween,
And the cheek takes on velvet it had not else seen.

If the voice it is husky, the throat it is sore,
Take the jelly at once, and the trouble is o'er.
In fact read the circular, and from it glean
All the virtue and claims of the famed Vaseline.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
NEW ORLEANS, Monday, Oct. 6, 1879.

COTTON.

The market opened with more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, most of whom were unwilling to sell at less than ⅛c. advance, which has checked the movement, and, although there is a good demand, the reported sales thus far do not exceed 1,000 bales. There is some demand for middling at 9⅞c., which is held steadily at 9⅞.

The following is the official closing of the Cotton Exchange:

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER.

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effectual preventive for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPSINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during the last season in New Orleans very successfully, the common method of using them was to apply the two over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS, and seem to destroy the germ from which Fevers of special virulence that they assimilate the disease and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the material germ. They are cheap and almost as generally prevalent. Ask your physicians about them. Benson's Capsine Plaster are a sure preventive and cure for chills and fever, if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

—A gentleman was one day relating to a Quakeress a tale of deep distress, and concluded very pathetically by saying, "I could not but feel for him." "Verily, friend," replied the Quaker, "thou didst do right in that thou didst feel for thy neighbor; but didst thou feel in the right place—didst thou feel in thy pocket?"

—In these days, when the temperance question absorbs so much of public attention, it may not be out of place to quote the saying of an eccentric English gentleman, a candidate for Parliament, at a recent meeting of his constituents. A man in the crowd called out: "What ah u' the Liquor bill?" "Well," said the candidate, "mine was uncommonly high last year. How was yours?"

TESTIMONIALS FROM WELL-KNOWN PERSONS.

From Mrs. General Sherman

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 21, 1870.

MESSRS. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very much pleased with the Piano you made for me. It is really a fine instrument in every respect and is admired by all who have seen and heard it, for its fine tone, delicacy of touch, and beauty of finish. Many good instruments and distinguished persons have called since it has been in my parlor, and all pronounce it a fine instrument. We are always accustomed with it. I shall most certainly recommend it to my friends who may wish to purchase.

I am, very truly and respectfully yours,
ELLEN B. E. SHERMAN,
245 I Street.

St. James, December 27, 1873.

MESSRS. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very happy to be able to rank your Pianos as one of the very best I ever had, and saw. I think the tone and brilliancy of tone required to perform the great pieces of modern and classic masters are equal to any Piano made in this country. Hoping that your Pianos will all stand our climate as well as my old manufactured at the North I shall with much pleasure recommend them wherever I have an opportunity. Very respectfully yours,

ANTHONY WIMMER,
Professor of Music, St. Mary Jefferson College St. James, La., (Convent, P. O.)

From the World Renowned Artist, Camilla Urso.

NEW YORK, May 27, 1873.

MESSRS. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—After giving your Pianos a fair trial I am happy to congratulate you upon the achievements you have made. Your instruments possess rare merits, and it gives me much pleasure to recommend them to the public.

Yours truly, CAMILA URSO.

Extract of Letter from H. H. Abbott, Esq., Austin, Tex.

DISCOVERY By which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5; $1 to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

SEPTEMBER.

BY INVALID.

How calm is this September day!
The air is like the breath of May:
And from the peaceful vale below,
A silvery cadence seems to flow,
From tinkling bells of gentle herds,
And woodlands echo songs of birds.

The golden sunlight floods the plain,
Made verdant by "the latter rain;"
The forest leaves like censers burn—
From emeralds to rubies turn—
The bright eyed "children of the wood,"
Seem softly whispering "God is good!"

All Nature's voice seems raised to Him,
In one sweet universal hymn;
I feel the influence of this hour,
I, too, own my Creator's power,
The language of this heart of mine,
Is that "all praise and power be Thine!"

Lift my eyes from scenes below,
From wild nos these cheerful voices flow;
Up where the birds on light wings soar,
Their glad songs reach another shore;
The clouds like ships at anchor lie,
In yonder sea of sapphire sky.

Out with these ships in dreams I soar
Toward a fair, eternal shore!
Bright argosies these cloud-ships seem,
Their snowy sails in sunlight gleam:
Freighted with hopes and earnest prayer,
And other jewels bright and rare.

Faith spreads the sails—oh! how they glide!
O'er the bright waves and foaming tide,
Hope's star these ships will safely guide,
Until they reach the other side,
No tempest can my ships o'erwhelm,
For Love is sitting at the helm.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 8.—Advices from Hong Kong say there is a rumor among the Chinese that some great calamity has happened within the walls of the Imperial Palace at Pekin. Some say the Emperor and others one of the Empresses is dead.

By a great fire in the French concession of Shanghai 600 houses were burned. No lives were lost.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 8.—Lieut. Farrow telegraphs from Notre Idaho that the band of hostiles who committed the murders at Raine's ranch, and have been depredating in that section of country, have surrendered unconditionally. They number thirty, while he is bringing them in.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 8.—The Chicago and Alton train, which left this city last night, was robbed of $8 express money at Glendale, 15 miles east of this city. The train was stopped by about twenty masked men, who kept up a continual firing, while the messenger's safe was robbed. The messenger was knocked down but not seriously hurt. Fifty thousand dollars is the estimated loss. The agent at Glendale is missing.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 10.—Two more cases of fever have developed at Oak Grove, Marshall county, Miss. The sick persons being brothers, named Cantrell.

DETROIT, Oct. 10.—The Pacific Express, which left on the Michigan Central Railroad, forty minutes late, collided with a switch engine on the main track, at Jackson, at 1 o'clock this morning, telescoping the baggage and express cars, and piling eleven coaches on top of each other. The first coach was filled with emigrants, most of whom were killed or severely injured. Many occupants of the other coaches were either killed or injured. It is supposed twenty-five were killed, and thirty wounded, the majority being emigrants. Physicians and others are doing everything they can to alleviate the sufferings of the wounded.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 11.—Twelve cases were reported to the Board of Health to-day, four of whom were colored. Total cases reported for the week 74; whites, 40; colored, 34. Total cases to-date 1412. Total deaths from yellow fever for the week 22; total to date 425. The Howards have received $51 to-day. They have 107 nurses on duty, attending 58 white and 24 colored families. Tennessee has given notice that, commencing Monday, quarantine will be rigidly enforced against Memphis. The running of trains carrying mails will not be interfered with.

GREENVILLE, Oct. 11.—Two new cases at Concordia—both colored—and two deaths—Sheriff Wilson and Mrs. Mayson, the former dying a few hours after his physician had announced that with prudence he would recover. Among the sick at Carson is J. W. Perry, a clergyman; Alonzo Atkins, very low. At Concordia, forty eight cases and sixteen deaths to date.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 13.—Twelve cases in all—seven white and five colored—were reported to-day. The following whites were reported this afternoon: Con Rawlins (returned refugee.) G. W. McCormick, Mrs. Mary Maloney, Jas. A. Moss and Ed. Schnabel. Three more deaths have occurred—J. M. Shaw, Mrs. Mary Maleney and A. Raines, the last named colored. Of the sick, Rev. J. J. Peres is in a critical condition.

RAWLINS, Oct. 13.—Lieuts. Bourke and Schuyler arrived here to-day, and an authentic report is had of the doings of Gen. Merritt and command since the march to the front. On the afternoon of the day on which he reached Capt. Payne's camp he had a fight with the Indians, and had to move his camp about a mile from Payne's old position that night on account of the stench created by dead animals. Merritt moved upon the agency and reached there on Saturday. The Indians are retreating southward, and it is expected that in small bands they will drop into the various agencies, and, this covering up themselves, it will never be known who are the warriors who opened battle on Major Thornburgh. The dismounted companies and the wounded will be here in seven days.

FOREIGN.

SIMLA, Oct. 8.—Chancellor Turner confirms the sale of the Selma and Gulf Road to D. T. Sullivan, and orders the property delivered to the purchaser.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—Sir Frederick Roberts telegraphs from Charasiab on the 6th inst. at 8 o'clock, P. M. that the Afghans advanced from Cabul in force and there was heavy fighting all day. The Afghan position was carried and twelve guns captured. The British loss was about eighty killed and wounded. Gen. Roberts hoped to be able to march close to Cabul to-day. Tuesday.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—A dispatch to Reuter's, dated Valparaiso, 8th, says the Chilian fleet has captured the Peruvian ram Huascar, off Mejillones.

Two hundred and sixty-seven farmers and their wives leave Liverpool for Texas to-day.

LONDON, Oct. 11.—A dispatch to the Daily News from the British camp before Cabul, dated Oct. 8, says: Baker's brigade is engaging the enemy on the hills to the southwest of the city and an obstinate stand is expected on the 9th. The enemy expects a reinforcement of three regiments from Ghuznui.

SIMLA, Oct. 12.—Gen. Roberts telegraphs on the 10th inst., from Serah Singh, thirteen hundred yards from the citadel of Bala Hissar, that during the night of Wednesday the enemy, confronting General Baker, fled abandoning twelve guns.

The British cavalry pursued for several miles, but the enemy dispersed in so many directions that only small parties were overtaken. Gen. Roberts intended to make a public entry into Cabul and take possession of Bala Hissar on the 11th or 12th inst.

HAVANA, Oct. 13.—The reweremen fourteen deaths from yellow fever last week.

A severe storm prevails throughout the whole island, and telegraphic communication is interrupted. A hurrican is feared at this point.

SIMLA, Oct. 13.—Gen. Roberts's public entry to Cabul took place at noon yesterday. He was accompanied by the Ameer and his suite. British troops of all arms lined the road, and the artillery fired a salute while the British standard was hoisted at the entrance of the city. The 67th Regiment and the 5th Gurkhas subsequently occupied the Bala Hissar.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—Sir Frederick Roberts telegraphs that the Afghan troops have been completely routed, and that the tribes that were assembled to fight have retreated home. The heavy artillery which is coming up with the Khyber column, he says, may go back to India as the heavy guns and howitzers originally presented by the British Government to the Ameer are now in our possession complete. Gen. Roberts visited Bala Hissar on the 11th inst., and was to make public entrance into Cabul on the 13th inst. Most of the influential men of the city have paid their respects to Gen. Roberts.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

CLIFTON CIRCUIT, ALA., Oct. 1.—We have just closed a meeting of great interest at Arlington. A number of conversions—not definitely known. Eight accessions; of that number six young men of intelligence and promise. The church was greatly blessed. This is a new church in the midst of a most excellent community. I am indebted to Rev. George Fontaine and H. M. Jones for valuable assistance. Church collections good. Crops good.

O. F. ELLIS.

TRIANA, ALA., Oct. 4.—We have just closed a series of meetings at Lebanon. There were seven accessions to the church, and about the same number of conversions. The congregations were unusually large, the interest profound and general. Cotton is turning out moderately well and corn very well. The health of the country is generally very good for this season of the year. We are needing rain badly, both for stock and people.

WM. MCQUEEN, P. C.

GROVE HILL CIRCUIT, ALA., Oct. 8.—We have had several revivals on our circuit, which have resulted in several conversions and additions to the church. Our camp meeting at Union Church camp ground commenced September 26, and closed on the thirtieth. There were seventeen sermons preached, thirteen conversions that were made known unto us, and seven accessions to the church. Everything passed off very well, considering our surroundings. We trust lasting good has been accomplished.

JOHN A. GREEN.

FRANKFORT, ALA., Oct. 9.—We are having some fine rains. Crops are good. Health good. The Baptist brethren have had some fine meetings in this part of the vineyard. One of these lasted ten days; powerful revival. Our people are doing very well. All of our meetings have been profitable to the church. Eighteen accessions up to date. The collections are about half up.

C. C. ONEAL, P. C.

BREWTON, ALA., Oct. 9.—The dedication of the new church here last Sunday was an occasion of interest. Bro. J. C. Johnson, P. C., deserves great credit for the way in which he has carried this enterprise forward to completion. The new church here starts off with an organized society of twenty-two members. A promising meeting was broken up by continued rain. I have cheering news from nearly every part of the Pensacola district. The revival fire continues to burn.

J. M. BOLAND, P. E.

CHEPULTEPEC, ALA., Oct. 10.—Murphreesvalley circuit has been greatly refreshed of late. Thirty souls were converted and added to the church. Eighteen infants and eighteen adults were baptized. Finances are looking up. Ebenezer Church is being celled and refitted, and there is to be a new and comfortable house at Bethlehem. Crops are generally good, but some are damaged by drought. Our people are healthful and hopeful.

B. F. LEA, P. C.

TALLASSEE, ALA., Oct. 10.—Our Quarterly Conferences have all been held for this year. The condition of the church is good. We have received into the church this year, at Tallassee and Tabitha Chapel, 114 members. As we have two churches, so we have two prayer meetings and two Sunday-schools. Prayer meetings are well attended, and the Sunday-schools are in a moderately good condition. Class meetings occasionally. Finances tolerably good. Had a good deal of sickness recently; some deaths. Church edifices are in good condition. Tabitha Chapel is comparatively new. We have spent about $350 on the church at Tallassee in repairing, remodeling and repainting.

JOHN R. PEAVY.

MISSISSIPPI.

GRENADA DISTRICT, MISS., Oct. 7.—Just completed the third round. The district is in a prosperous condition. As far as heard from continually over five hundred conversions. I have never known so many old people converted. In many cases whole families have been brought in. This seems to be the case throughout our Conference. We have good health, and a fine season for saving the crop, and the people are making good use of the time. Cotton is going to market much earlier than usual.

THOS. Y. RAMSEY.

SARDIS, MISS., Oct. 8.—The second Sunday of September, 1879, was made somewhat remarkable to us in Sardis. On that day Mr Anthony Neal, a man eighty three years old, walked alone up the aisle of the church, was baptized and received into our number on profession of faith in the blessed Redeemer. Few come at so late an hour. He gives evidence of genuine conversion. No frost yet. Weather rather warm. Cotton short, but good. The people are, in general, cheerful.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., Oct. 11.—We had our new church in Wesson dedicated last Sunday. Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, D. D., preached the dedicatory sermon. Rev. J. T. Heard, the former pastor, was present, and took part in the dedicatory service. Rev. H. F. Johnson, D. D., of Whitworth College, was also present, and lifted a fine collection to put blinds on the house. The services were protracted several nights with encouraging results. The congregation was very large every night, and attentive and serious, and the altar crowded with penitents.

W. H. LEWIS.

LOUISIANA.

PLANTERSVILLE, LA., Oct. 7.—We held a meeting at Bartholemew Church, Lloyd Grove circuit, which lasted ten days, resulting in twenty-two additions, thirty-three conversions, and the church graciously revived. Revs. McClendon, Cornell and Hunt rendered efficient aid. Crops as were unplanted some time since, are good. Farmers are making considerable progress in gathering. Health comparatively good, though some fatal sickness. Religious condition of my work encouraging.

J. M. MCKEE, P. C.

KEACHIE, LA., Oct. 8.—We had our new church dedicated September 28, by James A. Parker, of Homer. The house could not hold all the people. Our expectations were more than met. Everybody was satisfied, and enough was raised to meet all demands against the church. After the services, and the house turned over to the Lord, the ladies served one of the most sumptuous dinners I ever saw. The meeting has been going on ever since. Eighteen have joined to date, twelve at the Methodist and six the Presbyterian Church. Five children were baptized. Bro. Harrington, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, assisted several days. Bro. Borden, of Mansfield, and J. M. Johnson, of Caddo, aided good work.

G. M. LIVERMAN.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ALBANY, ORE., Oct. 1.—Conference is over. Delightful session. Nearly all the preachers were present. Bishop Keener was present and in good health, and his able presidency won all. Thoroughness, dispatch and fidelity to all the details of Conference business. He was a blessing to us. Quite an increase reported. You will get the appointments soon. It was refreshing to have the Bishop domiciled with us. How our hearts burned within us as we communed of dear friends and things! My work is heavy.

T. H. WHITE.

The Catholics and the Schools in Belgium.

This fall the new law enacted in Belgium, which removes the State schools from under the authority of the Roman Catholic Church, will be put in operation. The summer vacation has been occupied in the making of preparations for the changes involved, which are highly important. The schools open under such different circumstances and in the face of such obvious difficulties, that it will be a matter of world-wide interest to know how the government succeeds in administering the new system. It is yet to be seen how large a proportion of the children of school age will attend what the priests call "godless" schools, and whether a sufficient number of qualified teachers can be engaged. The uncompromising hostility of the Roman Catholic Episcopate to the new system creates the only difficulties the government has to meet. The Bishops have resolved to obstruct the administration of the new law in every possible way. They have instructed the priests to refuse absolution to all who patronize or countenance the State schools. The children, the parents of the children, and the teachers who disobey, are to be put under the ban, and the latter are to be required to resign, under pain of excommunication. It is intimated, however, that those teachers who would be entitled to pensions in three or four years will not be disciplined for continuing in the service of the State. If this be true, the Catholic conscience that compels a hostile attitude is a thing of elasticity that may be stretched when important ends are to be gained.

The government has had to provide a large number of temporary houses until permanent ones can be built. Many of those heretofore used belonged to the church, and were "adopted" by the government, and must now be restored. All the nuns and Christian brothers who acted as teachers will, of course, no longer serve, and some laymen were also expected to resign their positions. There are, therefore, many vacancies to fill. Many of the teachers who are merely laymen will, doubtless, brave the displeasure of the priests, and continue in their positions, because they afford a certain income, and confer a pension after so many years' service. Teachers in the State schools are also exempt from military service. The church schools are to be supported by voluntary contributions, which will never be adequate, and which will probably grow less and less year by year. There is a limit to what the poor peasants can contribute, and the demands upon them are already large. They give liberally toward "Peter's Pence," and it would seem that new objects of liberality must be supported, if at all, at the expense of those already established.

Though the schools are to be no longer religious, they will not be anti-religious. The main object of the law, writes the Belgian correspondent of the London Times, is to withdraw the direction of the schools from the hands of the clergy, and to place it exclusively in those of the State. Every inducement is held out to the clergy of all communions to give religious instruction to the children, before or after school hours, and in the school itself. If they refuse the teachers must fill their places as best they can. The teachers are not allowed to make any irreverent remarks, and the Catholic symbols, the crucifix and the image of the Virgin are not to be removed from the schoolrooms. The teachers, however, need not be religious. The priest will no longer have the right of censorship over the books used.

The cry of the Liberals is: "The clergy out of the schools," which is answered by the Roman Catholic party with the cry: "The State out of the schools." The issue is now fairly joined; the church has already many schools. The Bishops have been for many years working with unremitting energy, with this idea in view, and with what success is evidenced by the vast number of communes, especially in Flanders, in which either their own schools have been adopted and placed on the footing of government schools, or rival schools have been established to compete with those of the commune. "One must have lived," says the correspondent whom we have quoted, "in a country village to know how the power of the church has been employed to compel parents to send their children to the schools patronized by the clergy. The confessional; the first communion; the apprehensions of the sick and dying; the threat of loss of work; the fear of becoming a marked man, whom respectable persons ought to shun; the pious traditions handed down among the peasantry; the influence of wives, mothers and daughters; combined with the natural wish to lead a quiet life—every means is resorted to, and a man must have great faith in his own opinions to resist such a variety of arguments."

The regulations for admission to the schools are very liberal. According to the royal decree: "Are admitted to the benefit of gratuitous instruction: (1) the children of persons receiving assistance from the Bureau de Bienfaisance, or local poor boards; (2) the children of workingmen having no other income than the produce of their daily wages; (3) all the children inhabiting the commune, concerning whom it shall be acknowledged that the persons in whose charge they are are not in easy circumstances." Attendance at school is not obligatory; but the local committees have to ascertain that all children between the ages of six and fifteen frequent it regularly, and to employ every means of persuasion to induce the parents to send them. They also have to report the children unable from extreme poverty to go to school to the Bureau de Bienfaisance or the Communal Council, whose duty it is to provide means to enable them to do so. Anybody—Roman Catholic, Protestant or Jew—is at liberty to open a private school; but none such can receive any grants from government or the commune. Independent.

Bishop Pierce Among the Indians.

Bishop Pierce writes to the Wesleyan Christian Advocate concerning the Indian Mission Conference. We give an extract:

On Monday evening, in a nice one-horse carriage and a spring wagon, we moved on to New Hope Academy, in the Choctaw Nation. Found a hearty welcome from Rev. E. R. Shapard, the superintendent. This school is doing a great work for the rising generation. It is a school for girls only. The "Council" appropriates annually $5,000 for its support. The Board of Missions, by contract, is bound to board, clothe and teach eighty pupils, and to supplement the appropriation as may be necessary. It costs the church about $650 a year. The investment pays and will pay more, as the tribe sees and feels the elevation of their people. In social life the influence must be salutary. The girls are taught cleanliness of person, neatness in apparel, propriety of manners, learned to cut and sew and cook, and keep house in order. These are high qualifications in any "color," and will lift the low to the higher plane. Soap and self dependence, and educated taste and social ambition, are wonderful "elevators," especially among the sex. They help a man exceedingly, they redeem a woman, and make her a safe-guard against the deterioration to which humanity is prone.

It was vacation; the rooms of the establishment were empty and the cribs were full, and free "entertainment for man and beast" rallied a crowd of preachers, white and red, and we had a social time. Reading the Scriptures, prayer and songs, in several tongues, prefaced our retirement for the night. The Lord made us to rest in peace and safety.

"What sort of a place is Double Springs?" said I to a brother. "It is no place at all," said he; "no one lives there. You will have abundance of room on the ground, and for twenty miles around. You will find one old dilapidated church, and no more." On Tuesday our little caravan moved on to take charge of this "vacant place" for a Conference and a camp meeting. To avoid dust we traveled as far apart as possible. The horseback men, led by one who knew the paths, arrived in good time. Those of us who were on wheels missed the way and wandered for miles, passing in a few hundred yards of the place. Late in the afternoon we were hailed by the information that we must return five miles, to a certain "fork," and take the left hand road. We had taken the right by direction, too, but it was wrong. Before sundown we arrived, and found the brethren wondering what had become of us. Well, here we are, at Double Springs. The drought had dried up one spring and greatly enfeebled the other. The supply was scanty and muddy. Next day the people began to come in freely, and continued to come to the last day. On Sabbath the estimate was two thousand—a mixed multitude. This camp meeting was of the primitive type. An antiquarian would have considered it a relic of ages long gone. A geologist would have thought that "evolution" had gone back to the "pithecanus." We did not feel much. The people lodged in wagons and under them. Forks and poles and bed-quilts were common. Trees with good heavy tops were popular. There was one tall pen, two plank tents, and two cloth ones. There was the frame of a new church without doors or windows; in this we held service three times a day. Several of us lodged in the old house of worship. This was my bed-chamber. Conference room and office for cabinet meetings. Walter and I were honored with a mattress on the floor—the rest spread their blankets on the floor—and we all slept soundly, sweetly. We had a good time. The services were spiritual. We had several conversions. Twelve joined the church. The crowd behaved well. I saw no impropriety by day or night. I was able to supply the work better than ever before. Provided for some waste, unoccupied territory, and I look for great results the coming year. The Conference is advancing. The statistics show an increase of members, of Sunday-schools, and the missionary collection more than doubled the assessment. Let the white Conferences hand over the banner, or do likewise.

The labor and money of the church are not wasted on this Indian Territory. I see signs of improvement on every visit—material, intellectual and religious. Schools, churches, increasing contact with a higher civilization through railroads, trade, new towns and the stimulus they afford to productive industry, will prepare them for an inevitable destiny—an open country, territorial government, and in time a State in the American Union. The Indians resent this idea now—deprecate it and legislate against it. I hope the government will protect them in all their treaty rights, but in the meantime natural causes will work a revolution of ideas and interests that will change by consent the condition and policy of the past.

Louisville Conference.

The thirty-fourth annual session of the Louisville Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened at the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Madisonville, at nine o'clock on Wednesday morning, October 1, Bishop Doggett presiding. The following items are taken from the proceedings, as reported in the Southern Methodist:

The report of the Book Committee of the church was then received, and, on motion, referred to the Committee on Publishing Interest without being read.

The reply of Dr. A. H. Redford to the Book Committee was then offered and asked to be submitted. Bishop Doggett then arose and stated some important points of law in regard to this vexed question. He said that his relations with Dr. Redford were of the most friendly kind, and it was, therefore, without any prejudice that he made a few remarks, but he felt that it was due the Conference that he should do so. He went on to define the law as he understood it, and said that a Bishop of an Annual Conference is amenable to the General Conference, which reviews all his decisions and passes on his administration. No Annual Conference can do so. The acts of the Bishop are quadrennially reviewed. The General Conference is a supreme authority, and an Annual Conference an executive body—the features and spheres of the two bodies are distinct as to their prerogatives. He here read from the manual in reference to this distinction and the functions of a Bishop. The General Conference, at its last session, saw fit to pass an enactment, and to appoint a special committee for the purpose of settling certain matters with this agent and future agents. That committee is clothed with extraordinary power. That Conference ordered a certain committee to do certain things, and to report to all the Annual Conferences, so that it goes the rounds. The document that is before you comes as an official document, and it reports what the committee, together with the business manager, profess to have done. The form and manner of that report does not alter this position. It may in some respects appear objectionable to some, but it is an official document as a report made for information. This the committee has done according to its instruction. It is not competent for a presiding officer, or a Conference, to refuse the reception of a report. It may be optional as to its reference. When it comes before the body that function is ended. It does not follow from the reception that the Conference endorses it. The committee [illegible] to its source of creation, with [illegible] the power to revise its action. [illegible] Burkett went on to say that any [illegible] moral character could not [illegible] any standing committee; that [illegible] acter of a member could [illegible] ence at the proper time, and [illegible] ference refused to say that [illegible] guilty of wrong, who else [illegible] He said that he did not think [illegible] ford's reply could be legally [illegible] received in the way proposed, [illegible] his construction of the law, and [illegible] was ruled out of order.

Dr. Lee, presiding elder of the Louisville district, was reported as unable to attend Conference.

Deficiencies were reported by all the ministers in regard to collections for missions and Bible cause.

Committees on Memoirs reported the death of C. D. Donaldson, J. C. Norman and T. J. Richardson.

A. H. Redford stated that in consequence of severe headache, which was almost constant, he is not able to take pastoral work, and yet can preach as often as most of the preachers, but must be allowed to choose his own time to do so. He therefore requested a supernumerary relation, which was granted.

Dr. N. H. Lee was granted a superannuated relation.

D. J. Hartman, transferred to Indiana Conference; J. W. Price, transferred to Mississippi Conference.

Kentucky Conference.

The fifty-ninth session of the Kentucky Conference began in Richmond, Ky., September 17, with Bishop Doggett in the chair.

We take the following items from the Central Methodist:

The attendance was so large that often standing room in the large hall was in demand. They came from far and near, and the deep interest in the proceedings was everywhere manifested.

From the report of the statistical secretary we make the following comparative statement of results: White members, 21,967—last year, 21,662; colored members, 90—last year, 81; added by baptism, 1,105—last year, 1,200; Indian baptisms, 213—last year, 282; local preachers, 282—last year, 96; Sunday-schools, 188—last year, 192; officers and teachers, 1,312—last year, 1,320; scholars, 9,118—last year, 9,811; churches, 245½—last year, 227½; value, $502,995—last year, $534,—100; parsonages, 39—last year, 41; value, $62,850—last year, $61,900.

At this writing we have not the report of the Board of Missions before us, but the contributions to foreign missions are more than double that of any former year. At this all were gratified.

An interesting and important feature was the annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society. This new enterprise, under the presidency of Mrs. S. C. Trueheart, has succeeded beyond the highest expectations of even its friends.

The names of two men, formerly members of the Louisiana Conference, appear on the roll of the Kentucky Conference—Richard Deering, who sustains a supernumerary relation this year, and S. W. Speer, appointed to Warsaw. Dr. H. A. M. Henderson is transferred to the Pacific Conference.

—The Pacific Methodist, Sept. 19, says: "Last Saturday the Rev. C. F. Reid and wife, and Miss Dora Rankin, left the shores of America for their work in heathen lands by the British steamer, Oceanica. The prayers and good wishes of hundreds of anxious friends follow them. Brother Reid preached at St. Paul's Church during his stay here, and after the sermon an impromtu but pleasant missionary meeting was held. Miss Dora Rankin is sister to our Brother Rankin (of the Pacific Conference,) and Miss Lochie, who is already in China. God bless these young women who have given the beautiful season of their lives to a work which exiles them from home and friends. May they have recompense both here and hereafter."

—A contemplative life has more the appearance of a life of piety than any other; but it is the divine plan to bring faith into activity and exercise.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1879.

SHADOWED.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

The robins in the maple build
Their dwelling, as of old;
Again the breaking dawn is thrilled
With love in music told,
And sunny fields, by no man tilled,
Are brave in cloth of gold.

The summer wears her former grace,
Her sweet winds wander by;
We miss no beauty from her face,
No glory from her sky;
And yet—ah! yet—each pleasant place
In shadow seems to lie.

The rapture of the blue bird's note
Hath now its minor strain;
The very robin's tuneful throat
For us hath edge of pain;
The perfumed zephyrs o'er us float,
And sigh a sad refrain.

Last year—ah! some were with us then
To breathe soft summer air,
Now passed beyond our utmost ken—
Beyond our loftiest prayer;
Our hearts were well-nigh broken when
God took them to His care.

Lift us, O Father, ever kind!
To summits more divine;
Let us no more be deaf and blind
To look and voice of Thine;
In darkest ways still may we find
Thy beams of light to shine.

So shall we hear these summer days,
Nor deem our griefs they mock;
So shall our tears be changed to praise,
Our souls, 'mid sudden shock,
Or slowly-pressing troubles raise
Their psalms to Christ, the Rock.

A Living Dog or a Dead Lion:—Which?

"For a living dog is better than a dead lion."—Ecclesiastes ix, 4.

The only reason for this is: In one organization there is life; the other is without it. The lion is the bold, the majestic, the grand monarch of the forest, while he is invested with life; without it he sinks below the level of a dog. While possessed of life, his roar sent an indescribable and paralyzing terror through his brother animals; when dead, the most insignificant of them are his equals, if not his superiors. Natural life, with the merely animal creation, is the one element that constitutes its greatness, according to Solomon's estimate. The most perfect human organization, without life, is but little, if any, superior to so much unorganized clay.

Spiritual life, in works for religion, is the one great consideration that clothes those works with power and grandeur, and gives them success. A sermon formed by the latest and most approved rules of the art, by an intellect of the highest order, and delivered according to the most rigid demands of oratory, if delivered without the Spirit's influence, would fall powerless on the audience. Its form and structure as a sermon might be as perfect as the organization of the lion, and yet be only a dead lion. On the other hand, a sermon with but little, if anything to recommend it, as a literary production, and still less as an argumentative composition, yet, if studied and delivered under the inspiration of a deathless love for sinners, it will be productive of much more good than the perfect sermon without that. "A living dog is better, than a dead lion." There seems to be a tacit impression with some that the times and age through which we are passing demand studied and intellectual sermons, if they are not so very spiritual. An unspiritual age will not only accept, but commend in the most eulogistic terms sermons that have no tendency to convict or convert sinners; if otherwise they have a good deal of the lion in them. The great demand for big sermons is certainly a temptation for ministers to preach such—a temptation to intense study, even until a large per cent. of the life and power and usefulness are studied out of their sermons, and, as a result, they present to their congregations a dead lion rather than a living dog—an unpretending, spiritual, useful sermon.

It is said the masses desire a higher style of preaching than that of the past age. I do not suppose a sermon could have too much of the magnificent and grand in it to suit an ordinary congregation, if at the same time it was full of spiritual life, but if the Holy Ghost is swapped off for style and ornament, for finely-rounded periods and ponderous sentences, for startling ideas and theological novelties, the congregation would be sure to think the preacher had made a poor swap, and, in consequence, had given them a dead lion instead of a living dog.

There never was a time when direct, pointed, personal appeal to men's consciences was more needed than now. I am inclined to think there is a scarcity of that sort. It is not the kind to give a preacher a great reputation either with the world or a hackslidden church. The dead lion sort are better for that—big sermons without the Holy Ghost.

No man would deny that a large massive sermon, full of divine power, would be superior to a small specimen of a sermon if it should be accompanied by the same element. A living lion would be better than a living dog. I do not suppose there is any sort of necessity that a sermon filled with studied and intellectual excellencies should be destitute of spiritual life. The demand for great sermons is urgent and almost universal. Preachers understand this. The danger is, that in our solicitude to meet this demand we crowd so much of self into our sermons, there is no room left for Jesus, and our congregations soon discover in their delivery that what we thought a powerful sermon, from the amount of intellectual labor we bestowed upon it, is only a dead lion.

With all the lukewarmness there is in the church, there is quite a respectable number of the best men and women in this land that believe, with Solomon, that "a live dog is better than a dead lion"—or, in other words, a sermon without intellectual excellence or argumentative power, but filled with spiritual life, is better than the dead lion sermon—a powerful sermon in every respect, so far as man is concerned; but without the Holy Ghost—without divine power—a "sounding brass, a tinkling cymbal."

I am not opposed to form, or beauty, or system in sermonizing; but the difficulty in this department is that we become so enamored by style and strength, and ornamentation, we forget that God's blessing is an absolute necessity for effectiveness, and trust to the force of our own composition to give it success, and are surprised that it does not succeed. It is a dead lion. If the ministry always prepared and delivered sermons under the influence of the following scripture, there would be but few, if any, dead lion sermons. "Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."—Zechariah iv, 6.

Home Missions.

MR. EDITOR: My topic is home missions. One that receives but little attention. We seem to have almost lost sight of those fields of gross error and debasing superstition that mar our otherwise beautiful country. My friends, send all the light and gospel truth you can to China, Brazil, Mexico and India. Yes, even do more this year than you did last, for in so doing you will do your duty. But let us also see if we cannot do a little more in behalf of home; and we should begin this work at once, because, in the first place, it will pay us. There are a great many people in the church who imagine that it is almost impossible to lead Roman Catholics from their errors, therefore they have concentrated all their efforts in behalf of those fields that lie in the distance. This is a great mistake, for in the space of four months we have taken five who were once very bigoted in their belief into our church, and from Bro. Picot's report we see that since January twenty-seven have renounced the power of the Pope, and taken upon themselves the yoke of pure Christianity, and last month the Rev. Christian Keener licensed another converted Catholic to preach the truth as it is in Jesus. We are doing a great work in Louisiana, but how much greater a work might still be done if our people would only help? What a work might be done if we could induce 1 000 or even 500 to act like Mr. L. M. Dantzler, of Moss Point, Miss.? Five dollars from a thousand people, and their united prayers with it, would cause a sweeping revolution to take place in Louisiana. Brethren, think about it. Can we not organize a society of men and women who will undertake this great work of spiritual amelioration? Shall thousands be afraid to do what Luther did? All he required was the Bible and the grace of God. He had both. Now turn the eye, and behold! the fruits of this one man's work. If the present crops be so large, who can tell what the future harvest will be?

Again, look what wonders the small lump of Methodist leaven has performed for our free country. But, how can we reach them? In diverse ways. Enable the church, through a liberal contribution of your money, to send out men where they are needed. And let them be men full of the Holy Ghost, well adapted for their work, men not afraid of roughing it, men who will not run from trifles. Then let them be supplied with Bibles, tracts and religious books for gratuitous distribution. All this will take money, but the interest will be great. Pure light will cheer the homes that are now in darkness, and the holy truth of a pure Christianity will break asunder the chains that now bind the heart to the papal monstrosity.

Read, Know and Do.

DEAR READER: On taking charge of the Silver Creek circuit, nearly two years ago, I was requested by the out-going presiding elder, Rev. W. B. Hines, to add to my list of appointments one in Washington county, about ten miles above here. I visited the neighborhood soon after my arrival on the circuit, but, finding that a Baptist preacher had commenced preaching there, I left the field to him. In July I was informed by one of the citizens that our Baptist brother had not visited them for five months, and did not intend to do so again. Whereupon I sent up an appointment, preached once, organized a Sunday-school, and appointed a three day's meeting for next month. Our meeting was begun on Friday before the fourth Sabbath in August, and closed on Sunday, resulting in the organization of a society with fourteen members. Since that time we have been steadily advancing, so that now we have a membership of nearly thirty, and the brethren conduct two Sabbath-schools and three prayer meetings. More earnest workers I never saw anywhere. We have no house of worship, services being held out of doors. The people would build a house, but are not able; they are poor, generally quite poor. They have, however, secured a lot, and are raising a subscription, determined to do what they can. It is evident that they will not succeed without help. They deserve a house, commodious and comfortable, and they shall have one before Conference, if you, dear reader, will do a very little thing: If you are a man, please inclose in an envelope, directed to myself, twenty-five cents, and if a woman or child, I ask only ten cents. This proposition being complied with, the work is done. A pious and willing people will be encouraged, and a poor, but which, I trust, will one day be a rich neighborhood, will be furnished with gospel privileges. Do not lay aside your paper, and forget this proposition, thinking that your mite will not be missed, but attend to it at once, before you read any further, for I assure you that on your giving or withholding your dime or quarter may depend the success of this enterprise. Yours truly,

W. C. ANDREWS.

Prohibition.

MR EDITOR: Experience and observation convince me that the only mode of arresting and putting down the vice of drunkenness is not to allow intoxicating liquors to be brought into the State. That the evil is so great as to demand the subordination of all political questions, I am satisfied; and, therefore, if I am spared until after the next November election in this State, I shall make the effort to organize a Prohibition Party, the object of which will be to consolidate all the anti-whisky sentiment in favor of prohibiting liquors being brought into, sold, or given away, in the State. To attain that, each member will take a solemn pledge to vote for no man for any office whatever unless he is in favor of such prohibitory law.

I have conversed with a great many men on the subject, and am pleased to hear the proposition will receive favor and support from many from whom such was not expected.

What say the Christian men of Mississippi to this movement? Let us organize in each and every county, if we have only a few to begin with. Let us make the effort, and stand by it, whatever may be said and done against us.

Labor Appreciated.

MR. EDITOR: Did you ever have the good fortune to be pounded? There is one sort of pounding that is not very pleasant, I suppose. But the pounding I received the other day afforded me very great pleasure. The good people of Fannin and community got up a handsome pound party, in which they contributed sundry articles—meal, corn, oats, rice, soap, starch, molasses, coffee, sugar and candies—and other articles too numerous to mention. It is certainly a very pleasant thing to preach to a congregation when we feel that our labors are appreciated. May the good people of Fannin live a thousand years, and their shadows never grow less.

From the Work.

CLINTON, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: Have just returned from a short visit to Woodville, where Bro. Drake, of the Methodist, and Bro. Sheperson, of the Presbyterian Church, are carrying on a joint meeting. Very little visible success during the first week. Congregations good, and prospects encouraging.

During my visit I met the venerable patriarch of our church in that section, Judge E. McGehee. He will celebrate his ninety-fourth birthday in a few weeks. Like King David, his limbs are growing weary, his strength is abating, his activity is gradually declining. Cannot walk much now; rides out occasionally. He is only "waiting by the river." While he looks upon the Israel here, by faith, like Moses of old he views the land of promise.

My own work is alive, at least. Good congregations on Sundays and at prayer meetings. Organized a class meeting a few weeks ago, with an average attendance of six to eight. Missionary circulars being returned with very good success. A continuance of such returns will bring up the assessments. A good deal of cotton is being brought to our town. Merchants busy. The ever-dreaded steward will soon begin his crusade. The year is rapidly drawing to a close, and all seem to feel the necessity of energetic action. Not quite half of the claims met to present.

Our Baptist brethren are waging a war against the wicked one. Rev. H. M. Golland, Evangelist, is trying to wake the people up. This is the thirteenth day. Congregations very good. No visible results yet.

Bro. Godfrey, our presiding elder, who is always "on the wing," passed through our town, stopping with us last night, on his way to finish up the business of the year. The last quarter is zealously attended to.

Fraternally,

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

COLUMBUS DISTRICT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Although the locality from which your correspondent now writes is outside of the patronizing Conferences of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, it may not be uninteresting to you, and your numerous readers, to know what the Lord is doing in Columbus district, North Mississippi Conference. Your correspondent has been visiting several appointments in this district for the past three months; and in a conversation with Bro. Dye, the presiding elder, a few days ago, was informed by him that every appointment in the district had been greatly blessed. That over six hundred had been added to the church this year; and the prospect flattering for many more.

At Starkeville, the county seat of Oaktibbeha county, a small town of fifteen hundred inhabitants, there have been over seventy additions. The church under the pastoral care of Rev. J. W. Lowrance now has a membership of over one hundred and forty. In addition to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, there is a Presbyterian and a Baptist Church, both in a flourishing condition. The place, though small, bids fair to become famous for churches and schools. Besides a select male school, there are two female schools—one by Mrs. Tate, a Methodist lady, the other by Rev. T. G. Selfer (Baptist,) each numbering over one hundred pupils. A few small boys, however, are received in these schools.

On the twenty second ultimo the corner-stone of the Agricultural and Mechanical College was laid, in accordance with the Masonic ritual, by the Grand Master, Frank Burkett, of Mississippi, assisted by other grand officers. Your correspondent had the pleasure of uniting in the impressive ceremony, and of listening to an elaborate address by Gen. George, on the importance of education. The college is situated one mile east of Starkeville, near the branch railroad. So you see Starkeville is in a fair way to become the Athens of East Mississippi.

BRANDON DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The District Conference for Brandon district was held at Brandon camp ground, September 18-20, Wm. H. Leith, P. E., presiding, W. M. Thornton and Rev. Irvin Miller, secretaries. The attendance was quite small. The reports of the spiritual condition of the church were encouraging. The financial reports were not so favorable as could be desired, though the preachers were hopeful that all would be paid after awhile. The Sunday-school work is going forward satisfactorily, and with increasing interest. The Conference was favored with the presence and counsels of Rev. H. F. Johnson, D. D., president of Whitworth Female College. W. M. Thornton, Rev. Irvin Miller, R. A. Tibbs and A. G. Mayers were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. Reserves: Iddo Lewis, Jared Watts and J. L. Fusten.

Brandon was selected as the place for holding the next session of this District Conference.

FIELD NOTES.

MISSISSIPPI.

BRANDON, MISS., Oct. 3.—I have held on this circuit (Farmin) three protracted meetings, and have received into the church thirty-nine; number of conversions not known; but we are satisfied that there must have been at least fifty-five conversions. The church was abundantly blessed. Truly, we may say, the Lord was with us. The cotton crop was considerably damaged here by the heavy rains.

J. B. HAYS.

PHILADELPHIA, MISS., Oct. 4.—The Philadelphia circuit camp meeting, held at Pilgrim's Rest, commenced September 12, and closed on the seventeenth, resulting in thirty-seven conversions and sixteen accessions to the church. Several churches were blessed, and numbers reclaimed.

J. C. BROGAN.

DEKALB, MISS., Oct. 4.—We have just closed a good meeting at Spring Hill Church, DeKalb circuit. Twenty-nine conversions and ten accessions to the church. A very large percentage of our membership in this country have never been converted. The best thing we can do is to get our members religious. That we have been trying to do, and to some extent succeeded.

A. B. NICHOLSON.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., Oct. 6.—Some painting, papering and repairs on parsonage. A pound party of many pounds; comfortable, temporally. The preacher's salary will be paid, say the stewards. Disciplinary collections in full thinks the pastor. Good attendance and attention. Old members quit drinking, except in cases of necessity (one excepted.) Young members quit dancing. Three accessions last Sunday by profession. One received that had formally withdrawn. Two protracted meetings now in progress—Baptist and Presbyterian. I have received one or two members every Sunday, for a month.

T. S. WEST.

MACON, MISS., Oct. 6.—I closed my meeting September 21, having had two sermons a day for two weeks. Twenty-six were added to the church, and the membership much improved, spiritually. It rains to-day for the first time in five weeks. Health good. Come to the North Mississippi Conference.

THOS. J. NEWELL.

BATESVILLE, MISS., Oct. 7.—Just returned from Water Valley camp meeting. Twenty-seven professions and the church built up. Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, our presiding elder, had charge. The meeting opened on the twenty-sixth of September and closed October 1. Rev. J. M. Boone commenced a meeting at Wood's station, West Valley, with a fair prospect of success. Water Valley is an enterprising city, boasting a foundry, a variety shop, besides the railroad company shops. There has been some sickness in my charge, and it has proved very fatal. Several grown persons have died in my charge in the last three months. Hope it will become healthy, yet it is not to say sickly now, only the sickness has been fatal.

J. RITCHEY.

ALABAMA.

PAINT ROCK CIRCUIT, ALA., Sept. 29.—We have held six protracted meetings on this work, at the following appointments: Price's Chapel, a good revival and six professions; Gray's Chapel, a very cold meeting, without any professions; the church somewhat revived; Thomson's camp ground, a very interesting meeting; but nothing at present accomplished, there were some very able sermons by William Thomson; good seed sown; Clear Creek, a very interesting meeting; two professions and two additions; Beech Grove, a very good meeting; nothing visible accomplished; Bostick Hill Church, a very good meeting; the church generally revived. From visible tokens, there was some good accomplished. We are having dry, cool weather now. Times very dull here. Crops moderate.

D. N. PATTERSON, P. C.

SMITH STATION, ALA., Oct. 7.—Revivals at Dickinson, Mount Zion and Crawford, on Crawford circuit, Alabama Conference. Accessions, fifteen; conversions more. Members greatly blessed. Dr. R. H. Rivers was with us, as published, at Mount Zion. He was in unction of the Spirit. His address doubled the membership of the Woman's Missionary Society. This society was organized the past summer, and is thirty-Thirty-two members, all in the country. Dickinson house of worship thoroughly repaired and painted, without and within. Crawford and Wesley have money sufficient to buy the old brick court house of Russell county, at Crawford. Will soon buy and fit it up for a church, and consolidate in it. Bro. Hurt's monument is a perfect beauty.

JERE B. WILLIAMS.

LOUISIANA.

PLANTERSVILLE, LA., Oct. 1.—Our third quarterly meeting was held at Bunkie Church, Lind Grove circuit, on the second and third of August, and continued until the seventh, resulting in eighteen additions and ten conversions. Our congregations were attentive, orderly, and very much affected and impressed with the services of the sanctuary. The presiding elder was there in the Spirit of the Master, seemed to have the weight of souls upon him, and preached with power. He was well received, his quarterly claim being fully met. Our people were in great need of the services of a presiding elder. Crops better than last year, and being gathered. Some sickness; not alarming. Politics getting to be the order of the day.

J. M. MCKEE, P. C.

EAST FELICIANA, LA., Oct. 7.—Our fourth quarterly meeting embraced the fourth Sabbath in September. It was held at Olive Branch. James A. Godfrey, P. E., was there, as usual. He had the Spirit of the Divine Master. We continued through the following week, preaching every evening. Immediate results were: Twenty-five conversions, eight accessions, and six more family altars erected, also several new subscribers for the ADVOCATE. We are hopeful of being able to report all our collections, up to the assessments, by the meeting of our Conference.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MRS. E. E. MINTER departed this life October 3, 1879, at the residence of her niece, in Osyka, Miss., in the seventy eighth year of her age. She had been a consistent Christian for more than thirty years; having united herself with the Methodist Church, rather late in life, but she gave evidence, by her godly walk and conversation and diligent use of the means of grace, that her repentance was sincere, and her acceptance with God beyond a doubt. She was sorely afflicted for many years of her life and often debarred from attendance at church, which was always a disappointment to her, and for several years, preceding her death, was almost entirely confined to her house. Yet she bore her sufferings with great patience and was never heard to complain or murmur at the dispensations of God to her. In June last she was carried from the home of her grand niece in Amite City, La., with whom she had resided for more than twenty years, to visit her niece in Osyka, Miss., expecting that change of scene and place might benefit her, but she continued to decline, and it soon became evident that she could never return to her home. Her grand niece visited her frequently, and was with her during her last days on earth, and comforted by the ministrations of loving relatives, and sympathizing friends, she died in great peace, and in glorious hope of a blessed immortality.

A. EVANS.

MARIA LOUISE WILSON, died, at Whistler, Ala., August 5, 1879. Although "Jeffie," (as she was better known) was thirteen years of age; yet, in her artlessness and simplicity, she was "a little child, free as a bird, joyous and bright.

Last April, during a protracted meeting, she was converted to God. I talked with her very freely, and found she had made up her mind to "be a good Christian."

Jeffie was true in her word. She loved the Sunday-school and was always at her post. She was among the first to join the Sunday-School Missionary Society, and worked for the money she contributed to it.

She was a missionary on her death-bed. The day before she died; when all else seemed to be forgotten she called for her missionary money, and gave it to her pastor, to be contributed at the next meeting.

She was the youngest of eight children—the light of the household, and a ray of sunshine wherever she went.

HER PASTOR.

MINNIE OLIVE SULLIVAN, only daughter of James and Martha Sullivan, Dayton, Ala., was born September 25, 1875, and died of congestion September 18, 1879. Olive had commenced to learn, and took great pleasure in setting her mother to teach her the catechism. She was a bright, lovely, beautiful child, of four summers, too pure for earth. He who said, "Suffer the little children and forbid them not to come unto Me," has taken her to Himself, to live with Him and the angels in heaven.

G. HAWKINS.

SISTER CORDENIA BOYKIN was born in Burke county, Ga., in 1803, and died in Smith county, Miss., August 19, 1879, aged seventy-six years. When she was three years old her father, William Bowling, removed to Alabama, where she was married to John Boykin, for surviving but much afflicted husband, October 8, 1823. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church and was converted at the Nusapalo camp ground, in Simpson county, Ala., in 1830, and ever afterward lived a very consistent life. She was not very demonstrative, but lived in sight of the cross daily. Sister Boykin was conscious during her illness, and often spoke of going home to be with Christ. She bore her affliction with patience and resignation. The way-worn pilgrim rested found a hearty welcome in her hospitable home. The writer, her pastor, was absent, holding a protracted meeting at that one of her sickness and death, consequently was not allowed the much coveted privilege of visiting her at that time. Sister Boykin was beloved by all who knew her, especially those who knew her more intimately. May her in Israel rest in peace at home. We shall soon meet again on the eternal shore.

E. A. SIBLEY

ELIZABETH H. STEWART, daughter of J. W. and Jane Shines, was born February 3, 1856, in Oakystreak, Butler county, Ala.; was married to Robert W. Stewart, January 31, 1866, and died in south Butler, Ala., September 16, 1879. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when a little girl, and was converted at a protracted meeting that I held at Oakystreak, in 1861. I never knew a more devoted and zealous Christian worker. She loved her pastor, and always tried to make him feel at home when in her house. In every department of life she was a model Christian woman. When death came she was ready, and during her last illness she testified to the truth of religion, saying: "I am now ready to depart and be with Christ." We miss her much. We weep and mourn, but hope and expect to meet her on the bright shores of eternal bliss, where parting is no more.

W. H. MORRIS.

SUSAN JANE CORDELIA ECHOLS, daughter of W. W. and Serena Palmer, was born in Chambers county, Ala., July 10 1847; was married to E. T. Echols, December 13, 1868, and died at her home in south Butler, September 3, 1879. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when about nine years old, and was most happily converted during a protracted meeting that I held at Wesley Chapel, in 1863, from which time until the day of her death she lived a most devoted and faithful Christian, "always abounding in the work of the Lord." She left a husband and two little children, several brothers and sisters, with a large circle of devoted friends, to mourn her loss, and joined her sainted parent and loved ones in the sunbright clime.

W. H. MORRIS.

LITTLE CARRIE ALMA was born May 8, 1877, and died October 30, 1878, aged one year, five months and twenty five days.

Little MARY ALICE was born August 24, 1878, and died June 13, 1879, aged ten months and eleven days.

These two little angels were born to the spirit land from the household of Bro. George W. and Harriet A. Wilson, near Rocky Mount, Montgomery county, Ala. They were sweet and interesting little children, admired by all, especially in the endeared family circle, which now seems almost cheerless.

JAMES M. HOFF.

ARTHUR GREY, son of Frank and Elizabeth Carter, was born August 16, 1875, and died at his father's residence, on Bayou Bœuf, September 27, 1879, aged four years, one month and eleven days. Little Arthur was a bright, intelligent child, his father's idol, his mother's pride, but God has taken their darling boy from the evils of this life to dwell with Him in paradise, where sickness and death are no more.

OUR BABY.

BY PHOEBE CARY.

When the morning, half in shadow,
Ran along the hill and meadow,
And with milk-white fingers parted
Crimson roses, golden-hearted;
Open'ng over ruins hoary
Every purple morning-glory,
And out-shaking from the bushes
Sing'ng larks and merry thrushes:
That's the time our little baby,
Strayed from Paradise, it may be,
Came with eyes like heaven above her,
Oh, we could not choose but love her!

Not enough of earth for sinning,
Always gentle, always winning,
Never needing our reproving,
Ever lively, ever loving;
Starry eyes, and sunset tresses,
White arms, made for white caresses,
Lips that knew no word of doubting,
Often kissing, never pouting;
Beauty even in completeness,
Overfull of childish sweetness;
That's the way our little baby,
Far too pure for earth, it may be,
Seemed to us, who, while about her,
Deemed we could not do without her.

When the morning, half in shadow,
Ran along the hill and meadow,
And with milk-white fingers parted
Crimson roses, golden-hearted;
Opening over ruins hoary
Every purple morning-glory,
And out-shaking from the bushes
Singing larks and merry thrushes;
That's the time our little baby,
Pining here for heaven, it may be,
Turning from our bitter weeping,
Closed her eyes as when in sleeping,
And her white hands on her bosom
Folded like a summer blossom.

Now the lifter she doth lie on,
Strewn with roses, bear to Zion;
Go, as past a pleasant meadow,
Through the valley of the shadow.
Take her softly, holy angels,
Past the ranks of God's evangels,
Past the saints and martyrs holy,
To the earth-born, meek and lowly.
We would have our precious blossom
Softly laid in Jesus' bosom.

"Some Questions."

A respected correspondent asks some questions, "not in the spirit of disputation, but with an earnest desire and hope for more light." Answers to questions, most of which have been long asked and often answered, cannot claim the merit of much originality. We shall make the best answers we can with our preoccupied time, and the brief space which can be spared will allow. The first question, which is immeasureably the most important, will claim most of our attention.

Ques. I. "Is the doctrine of the 'vicarious suffering and death of Jesus' clearly and unequivocally taught in the Bible? If so, where?" Now to "thus saith the Lord." There are three sets of phrases which to our mind, "clearly and unequivocally," teach the vicarious sufferings and death of Christ.

1. Christ was made a curse for us. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us."—Gal. iii. 13. "For He made Him to be a sin (or sin offering) for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him."—II Cor. v. 21.

2. He gave Himself as a sacrifice for our sins. "For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures."—I Cor. xv. 3. "And walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given Himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor."—Eph. iii. "Who gave Himself for our sins, that He might deliver us from this present evil world according to the will of God and our Father."—Gal. i. 4. "Who gave Himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time."—I Tim. ii. 6. "Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for His own sins, and for the sins of the people; for this He did once when He offered Himself."—Heb. vii. 27. "For every high priest, taken from among men, is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may both offer gifts and sacrifices for sins."—Heb. v. 1. "But this man, after He had offered one sacrifice for sins, forever sat down on the right hand of God."—Heb. x. 12. "For when we were without strength in due time Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one dare to die, yet peradventure for a good man would some even dare to die. But God commendeth His love toward us in that, while we were yet sinners Christ died for us."—Rom. v. 6-8. "Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?"—I Cor. i. 13. "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us."—I Cor. v. 7. "And when He had given thanks He brake it, and said take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you."—I Cor. xi. 24. "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."—I Peter iii. 18. "For as much then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind."

3. Christ gave His life for our life, or we live by His death. "And the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me."—Gal. ii. 20. "Destroy not Him with thy meat, for whom Christ died."—Rom. xiv. 15. "And that He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them and rose again."—II Cor. v. 15.

These texts and their parallels have, for eighteen hundred years past, convinced the overwhelming majority of Bible readers that the death and suffering of Christ were vicarious, the just for the unjust. The idea of substitution is in all these passages, and the phrase, though not Scriptural, is a convenient summary of them all. It may be further stated that the sacrifices of the Old Testament were (at least many of them) expiatory, and the terms used by Christ and His apostles (as ransom, sacrifice, offering, etc.,) were necessarily understood by their hearers in the sense which they had for ages been taught to attach to them. Says Watson: "If this be so, then nothing could be more misleading, and even absurd, than to employ those terms which, both among Jews and Gentiles, were in use to express the various processes and means of atonement and placular propitiation, if the apostles and Christ Himself did not intend to represent His death strictly as an expiation for sin; misleading because such would be the natural and necessary inference from the terms themselves which had this as their established meaning; and absurd because if, as the Socinians say they used them in a metaphorical sense, there was not even an ideal resemblance between the figures and that which it was intended to illustrate. If Christ was a metaphorical priest, then His offering was metaphorical, and the redemption was metaphorical, or no redemption at all."

Ques. II. "When was this doctrine (the vicarious sufferings and death of Christ) first promulgated or taught as a part of the Christian theory or plan of salvation?"

As the question asks when was this doctrine first taught as a part of the "Christian theory," we shall begin with the New Testament, although the law and the prophets amply teach the same concerning this doctrine. Immediately upon the first public manifestation of Christ, John the Baptist cries out: "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world!" It is obvious that when John called Christ a "Lamb" he spoke of Him (and educated as he was, and speaking to the people as he did—he only could have so spoken of Him) under a sacrificial character, and of the effect of that sacrifice as an atonement for the sins of mankind. Christ Himself said He gave His life for the sheep—that His blood was shed for His disciples. St. Peter, in his first epistle, taught that we are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish. So Stephen in his sermon, Acts vii, chapter —. So Peter and Paul in their sermons and epistles, as we have sufficiently quoted to prove.

The earliest Christian writers, as Barnabus, Ignatius, Polycarp, Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Augustine and Gregory the Great, taught the vicarious death of Christ. Their statements are before us, but we have not room for the quotations. So in the scholastic period, centuries before the Reformation, and now in all creeds—Greek, Roman and Protestant. Ninety-nine hundredths of all Bible readers, learned and unlearned, have reached one conclusion—that is: Christ's sufferings were vicarious.

Ques. III. "Is not sin often used in the Bible as the equivalent of evil?"

In examining the Bible, and some of the ablest theological works which treat on this subject, we find no reason to think that sin is used as synonymous with evil. It is no doubt the greatest of evils, and the cause of evil, but it is not used interchangeably with evil.

Ques. IV. "Is not the word 'death' used in the Bible in three senses, physical, spiritual and eternal?"

Death means and may be briefly expressed by the term "separation." The death visited on man as a penalty for sin produces or operates these three results. The soul that sinneth shall die, in the day that it sins, but under the redemptive and probationary system the body is often spared a number of years before it dies by the soul being separated from it. Unless sin is repented of and pardoned, the death of the soul, by its separation from God, will continue forever; it is eternal death.

Ques. V. "Apart from David's poetical expression does the Bible anywhere teach that children are conceived in sin, and brought forth in iniquity?"

This is not a charge of blameworthiness against David's mother, but it is a statement and confession that he had derived a depraved nature from a depraved nature. We have a similar statement—Job xv. 14: "What is man that he should be born clean; and which is born of a woman that he should be righteous?" St. Paul—Eph. ii. 3—says: "We were by nature children of wrath, even as others." We understand this to teach that we inherit from depraved parents a depraved nature, as this depraved nature, called "the carnal mind," is enmity against God, it naturally inevitably leads to sin, and therefore makes us the subjects of "wrath." Children are not born sinners, because sin is a conscious voluntary transgression of the law; of this infants are incapable, but they inherit as all observation and intelligent experience proves, a morbid appetite for the wrong, and a morbid repulsion against the right, meaning, of course, by wrong and right, sin and holiness.

Ques. VI. "Was the death of Jesus essential to the salvation of those who die in infancy?"

We answer not only essential to their salvation, but to their existence as well. If the redemptive provision had not intervened immediately on transgression, the original offenders would have suffered immediately the threatened penalty. The human race would have been restricted to, and numbered by two. We should never have come into being at all. Children now come into being under a gracious constitution, but as we have seen inheriting a depraved nature. If spared to years of accountability they are required to avail themselves of the pardoning and sanctifying grace of God in Christ. If they die in infancy they are not required to be co-workers with God, but the Holy Spirit doubtless does for them, and in them all the blood of Christ has purchased for them, and all that their spiritual necessities demand to fit them for the purity of heaven.

Ques. VII. "Is there Scriptural authority for the use of the word 'Deicide?' If so, where?"

We should never use the word, because it seems liable to abuse, misinterpretation. It is Scripturally true that God was manifested in the flesh, that He took on Him our nature, and that the two natures constituted the one person, the God man, and it is true that the church was "purchased with the blood of God." It was the blood of God in a higher sense than the blood of any other creature. It was "the blood of Christ," of the whole and undivided Christ, who was both God and man. For though a Divine nature could not bleed and die, a Divine person could. We suppose some from these Scriptures have felt authorized to use the word "Deicide." We cannot approve of it, neither can we approve some of the expressions in some of the hymns—as "The mighty Maker died;" "God died Himself that ye might live."

Religious Intelligence.

—The Rev. Mr. Ashton, Secretary of the Evangelical Continental Society has recently made a public statement of his observations of the Protestant Evangelistic work that is going on in France and Belgium. The Parisians, he thinks, take hold readily of what is new, but their levity and frivolity militate against their being the subjects of lastingly good effects. In the Provincial cities of Lyons and Marseilles, there are the crowds who look on and the smaller numbers who become regular hearers; but in both towns the weekly attendance is quite as large as the accommodation afforded, and new stations are already called for. At Lyons, one of the stations is in the aristocratic quarter and another among the workingmen. Both classes are reached, but the workingmen in the more marked manner. In Belgium, the ministers, notwithstanding the opposition the priests offer, succeed in getting parcels of ground, and find the magistrates ready to deal justly with them, while the farmers and their men take kindly to the meetings. Difficulty arises in Flanders, because the Belgian agents speaking French, are not applicable, while the Flemings will not listen to Dutch preachers for dislike's sake, though they have no difficulty in understanding them. A house is, however, to be got at Ostend, and acceptable teachers provided.—New York Methodist.

—A Presbyterian woman missionary from West Africa writes home this bit from real life, which tells more than whole sheets of speeches of one of the ways that woman's work may be made available: "The missionary ladies often accompany their husbands in their preaching tours, thereby increasing his comfort and usefulness, and also meeting a number of women who might otherwise never meet a follower of Jesus of their own sex. We are often asked: 'Do you really walk beside your husband, do you eat with him, dare you call him by his own name? Oh, would that we had been born in such a land!' That gives us an opportunity to tell them what makes us to differ, and that the same blessed gospel can bring them like blessings. They always come gladly to our meetings for prayer, and thus seed is often sown which God can water and bless. In this way also we often secure girls from the different tribes for education and training in our schools."—Methodist.

—The Rev. Dr. Joseph Mullens, foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, died at Mpuapua, on his way to Tanganyika, Africa. No man's name is better known to the mission world. Dr. Mullens has spent his whole manly life in the missionary work, going out to India in 1843 when twenty-three years old, and staying there twenty-three years. When he returned to England he entered the foreign secretary's office of the London Society, became its chief in two years, and remained in the office till he died—in the harness. He had started for Africa in the interest of the new mission on Lake Tanganyika, in hopes, by his presence, to give it a more effective organization and a good new start.

—Bishop Tirrell, who lately died in Austinlia, left $1,200,000 to the Episcopal Church Missionary Society, under which he labored thirty years in that country. He had not returned to his native land during all that period. How he came by so large an amount of money is not told, but it is a well-known fact that many of the very wealthy in the Church of England are becoming more and more interested in the cause of missions. The gift meets the pressing needs of the Society, as it ran in debt last year $105,000, making its entire deficit the large sum of $134,000.

—The establishment of a mission in Central Africa has turned out to be no small undertaking. The long, wearisome and dangerous journey on foot from the coast to the great central lakes is no mean undertaking, as the London Missionary Society has learned. Dr. Mullens, the secretary of the society, recently died at Mpuapua, on his way to Lake Tanganyika, and the latest news from that region is the announcement of the death of Rev. Arthur Dodgshun, at the missionary station on the shores of the lake.

—There are in Great Britain eight societies laboring for the conversion of the Jews, and on the Continent of Europe a dozen more. These societies have incomes amounting altogether to about $500,000, and employ now, probably, about 250 agents, Christian and Christianized Jews. The oldest and most prominent British Society is the London Society for the Propagation of Christianity among the Jews, which occupies 34 stations, embracing the principal Jewish centers in Europe and all around the Mediterranean Sea and in Abyssinia employs 30 agents, and enjoys an income of $200,000.

—The spread of Christianity in Japan during the last seven years has been remarkable. There are now forty-three Protestant Churches in that country, with a membership of 1,500. There are fifty-four Sunday-schools, with 2,000 scholars; three theological schools, with 175 students; eighty-one missionaries, ninety-three native assistant preachers, ten native pastors, and 150 preaching places. In addition to the distinctively religious work a large number of secular schools are carried on by Christian teachers.

—A leading paper of Vienna has recently published a translation of an article which appeared in the London News, exposing and denouncing the religious intolerance of Austria. The Vienna editor adds: "From this narration it is very clear that the Austrian confession laws need thorough revision. In certain respects we are behind all other cultivated states of Europe." No doubt as to the latter statement, though it may be a question whether it is not Austrian practice rather than Austrian law which requires change.

—On the eighth of June a Chinese Church was organized in Honolulu, the American and Hawaiian pastors being upon the council. The Hawaiian Evangelical Board has undertaken labors in behalf of the rapidly increasing numbers of Chinese who are settling in the Islands. The Friend of Honolulu says: "The California watchword may be, 'The Chinese must go,' but that of Hawaii is, 'The Chinese must come, to work our cane and rice fields.'"

—The Methodist Recorder reports progress in the Wesleyan Methodist Thanksgiving Fund, which was to have amounted to $1,200,000 by saying that of this amount more than £170,000 or $850,000, have already been promised; and twelve out of thirty-three districts of the connection, including Manchester and Bolton, Sheffield and Newcastle, have yet to be visited."

—A recent letter from Indore says that the coolness formerly existing between a section of the Brahmos and the Christian missionaries is giving place to very friendly feeling. The antagonism was rather a tradition than a sentiment developed by existing facts. It has yielded to the liberalism of the young men among the Brahmos, who are the most earnest of the Hindus.

—The German minister, Von Putt Kammer, replying to a petition of the Catholic clergy of Munster and Paderborn for the removal of hinderances to religious instruction in schools, says he can do nothing to effect an essential change until the Catholic Church formally acknowledges the inalienable right of the State to make its own laws.

—Since Rome became the capital of united Italy, twelve Protestant Churches have been built in that city, of which three are Episcopal and two are Methodist. The Baptists and Presbyterians have one each. Bibles are now openly sold in the streets of the principal cities of Italy.

—The late Canon Benson, who died recently in England 102 years old, kept up his shooting till he was 94, and his fishing till he was 88; was a moderate drinker and fond of sweet things, and had his first serious illness when he was 97. Two of his nephews died last year, aged 85 and 88, and one is living aged 86.

—The late Gen. Jackson, a wealthy Episcopalian of Vermont, left his property "to be turned into money, to be used at the discretion of the Bishop, for the benefit of the poor of God's heritage." The general intimated a preference that the money should go to the widows and orphans of deceased clergymen.

—Ten missionaries, six of them being women, were sent to the East, in September, by the American Board of Foreign Missions. Four were sent to Central Turkey, two to Constantinople, two to Western Turkey, and two to North China.

—The Chilian Reformed Congregation in Valparaiso has purchased the "Old Church" of the Union Society, which was erected in 1855, and was the first church edifice for Protestant worship on the western coast of South America, from Panama to Cape Horn.

—There are 38 churches and chapels in the (Episcopal) diocese of Kentucky, with 12,595 sittings. The estimated value of church property is $197,166, with an indebtedness of $21,124. The communicants number 4,142, a slight gain upon the previous year.

—The first known of the hymns of Sankey, Hills and others have been translated into the vernacular by the Rev. Isaac Fieldbrave, native pastor of the Hindoostani Church at Lucknow, India. The boys and girls in the mission schools already sing about fifty of them.

—The death is announced of Mr. Joseph Gurney, Treasurer of the London Religious Tract Society. The excellent "Annotated Paragraph Bible," published by the Society was prepared under his auspices.

—Of the 515,786 members of the Church of Scotland, a large majority, or 207,375, are women. As women have equal voting power with men, the balance of power in the church lies with the women, who could easily outvote their fathers, husbands, brothers and sons.

—Within the last five years the Established Church of Scotland gained 50,000 communicants in a population of 3,360,000—an increase of twenty per cent. against a growth of four per cent. in population.

—In Illinois there are 240 Congregational Churches with a membership of 21,900, of whom 2,994 are "absent." The benevolent contributions are $55,072 against $54,040 the previous year.

—Bishop Steere of Zanzibar finds that the Swahili version of the Bible made by him is intelligible to some of the tribes along the great central lakes. Mtesa, the King of Uganda, understands the language and has received copies of the translation.

—The Wesleyan Methodist Mission in Jamaica raised on that island, last year no less than $81,410, which is an average offering of $4 50 for each church member, and which shows great generosity and self-sacrifice among native Christians.

Our Young People.

LITTLE BARBARA.

BY WILL WALLACE HARNEY.

Pretty Barbara, ripe and red,
With sweet small mouth, like the bees shed,
And full of nectar and honey-dew;
So pretty a thing I dare not swear
To the art of the ribbon that ties her hair,
Or the buckle that binds her shoe;
So like her each trinket she has to wear,
It seems just as if it grew,
Like a rose in its petals and pollen dust,
That wears its beauty because it must,
And something like Barbara, too.

As she dips her small tin bucket in
The little fountain of woven glass,
Like webs that the spiders weave and spin
To hang on the shining blades of grass,
A face as bright and happy hers,
In the nets of the silken gossamers,
Looks out of the water's smooth eclipse,
As if it was happy to hold within it
The soft vermilion red of her lips,
And kiss and caress her head for a minute,
In the arms of the dimples, smooth and still,
Ere it goes and soberly turns the mill.

For life to her is the honey-dew,
Is nothing yet but the wayside spring,
Between the upper and nether blue,
That makes a fiction of everything,
As perfectly like as it ever grew;
And she is too happy to see within it
The shape of her small sweet self a minute,
From the bow to the hair to the tie of her shoe,
To know that the marvelous shadows mean
The simple inner beauty that shows
But now in the color of a rose,
And now like the water's smooth eclipse,
In hearts that hold her picture still,
As we go and soberly turn the mill.

The Old Mirror's Story.

Ah me—how many tales I could tell, if I chose. I've swung on this old bureau so long, and seen so many people come and go before my face, that I seem to know the secrets of many of them. I've kept the secrets well, too—no fear of my telling them now; only while I am in the mood for talking, let me give you the history of one half day, and you can judge for yourself if I do not sometimes reflect character as well as faces, and learn quiet secrets at the same time. First, after the family dinner hour of quiet talk came Miss Mary, the young lady of the household. She might have gone to my larger and handsomer neighbor in the parlor, but she has a kind heart and will not slight her old-time friend for the bright face stranger of recent acquaintance. And sure I am that if light and truthfulness were desired, she could find no truer face than mine.

"Good morning, old friend," was her greeting. "I've come to have your polished self tell me if my new spring suit is becoming and rightly made." So she tipped my face up and she tipped it down, turning herself around all the while, that she might see just how each fold hung, and if the fit were perfect. Satisfied at last, she restored me to my wonted angle, saying as she did so: "There, old friend, if you've told the truth, I'm more than satisfied with myself and you." And so the dear girl tripped away with the joyousness of youth, leaving all thoughts of self-consciousness behind, and going out to enjoy her walk, her face radiant with happy smiles that told of a contented spirit within.

Next came the mamma, with her tired, heated face, fresh from the kitchen, and bringing with her odors of pickles and spices; so I easily guessed what had been her work of the morning. Looking into my face with her kindly eyes, and smoothing down her hair, she said softly: "Ah, old mirror, you show me new wrinkles every year; but you are a truthful old friend, and I will not blame you, though I might sigh quietly over your story."

Presently in rushed the little whirlwind of the family—six-year old Carrie. "I don't believe a word of it!" she cried, "and I'm just going to see if it is true." So she pushed a chair up in front of me, and climbing up, looked carefully into my face at her own rather wrathful one reflected there. The frowns gathered over her pretty brow as she looked, and jump down, she stamped her little foot, and, doubling up her tiny fist, cried out: "Oh, you ugly, naughty old mirror! I'll never like you again, and I've a great mind to just break you, I have." Oh, ho, my little girl, I thought, what is the matter now, that you abuse your old friend so and threaten such dire punishment on her reflective old face? Is it because we confirmed mamma's words that thoughtless disobedience in leaving your hat lying on the lawn, instead of on your head, as you were told, has indeed brought out a very dark line of freckles across the little nose and face of which you were becoming quite too vain? Don't blame us, little Carrie, but stop and think one moment if little thoughtless self is not the one at fault, and remember hereafter that disobedience, whether thoughtless or willful, always brings its own punishment.—New York Observer.

Little Bob.

He was only a poor cabin boy. It was his fortune to sail in a ship that had a rough and cruel captain whom all the sailors hated. They took every way to thwart and torment him, if they did not actually disobey his orders. Little Bob came in for his share of hard treatment with the rest; but he had been trained in a Christian home, and being a God-fearing boy, he did not harbor wicked resentments. The time came when he proved himself the only friend that his rough master had on board. The captain had as he was, had feelings, like other men, and the constant ill-will, and possible mutiny, of the sailors, made him so irritable and suspicious that he lost his sleep, and finally fell sick. He lay in his bed in the cabin alone; for he could trust nobody, and nobody cared for him. So he thought; but this was not entirely true. Little Bob cared enough about him to inquire after him. Not seeing him on deck for a day or two, he at length ventured softly to his door and knocked.

"Who's there?" was the fierce question from inside.

"It's Bob, sir. Can I do anything for you?"

"Go to work, you little rascal, and let me alone."

Bob went away, but the next day finding that the captain did not get about, he took courage from his pity for him, and tried again.

"Who's there?" the sick man's voice answered his knock as before.

"Can I do anything for you to-day, captain?"

"No, no, go away."

Bob noticed the less angry tone and words, and determined to persevere. Early on the following day he repeated his visit, and this time the captain bade him come in. He had thought to himself, "This boy is the only one in the ship that has paid any attention to me. He is different from the rest." The unhappy man was really very ill. He allowed Bob to make up his bed and bring him some hot coffee and toast. Spying a small volume peeping from one of the pockets of the boy's jacket, he asked, "What book is that?"

"It's a book mother gave me," said Bob. "Nicest book you ever saw."

"Can you read it?"

"Yes, sir; would you like to have me read a little to you?"

"Aye, aye," said the captain.

And Bob sat down and turned to one of the gospels, and began to read the story of Jesus. He read on and on, and still the sick captain did not seem to get tired. It was so the next day, and the next, and then several times a day. At last, one evening the captain asked him to leave the book with him so that he could read it himself. So Bob put his pocket Testament in his hands, and went out, after making him as comfortable as possible for the night. Next morning, when he knocked at the cabin door, there was no answer. He knocked again, waited awhile, and then opened the door. The captain was out of bed, kneeling on the floor, and there was the Testament lying open before him on a chair where his head was resting upon his hands. He was dead.—T. B., in the "Watchman."

JESUS IN THE HEART.—I was telling a dear little baby child, only three years old, of the kind Saviour Jesus, who loved him so much and had a place in heaven for everyone who came to Him and was willing to go there.

The little one listened to me with wondering brown eyes for a time in silence. Suddenly he sat upon my knee, and opening his arms wide towards heaven, said earnestly, "I wants my Jesus here!" pressing the tiny hands upon his heart.

My heart went up to the Saviour that He would take my child-listener at his word and come as an everlasting guest to the little heart that opened to Him that day. You, dear children, who are reading this little story, have the same "want" as that little one needed. You need Jesus, but do you feel your need? Have you ever felt you must have Him "here"—in your very heart—that you cannot be content until He comes and dwells there forever?

Little Herbert spoke out the need of every human soul; an indwelling, loving Saviour. No far-off Jesus was enough for him; he wanted a presence, and a possession. That is what you and I, and every child of man, have need of—Jesus, Jesus only. Will He refuse to supply our need? Nay; "my God shall supply all your need."

"Behold I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear My voice and openeth the door, I will come in unto him." Only let your heart cry to the Lord Jesus, "Lord Jesus, come quickly!"—Eva Travers, in the Christian.

INITIALS ON FRUIT.—Did ever you see a name printed on a growing apple, pear or peach? No? Well, if you wish to have that pleasure, this is the way to obtain it: While the fruit yet hangs green upon the tree, make up your mind which is the very biggest and most promising specimen of all. Next, cut out from thin tough paper the initials of the name of your little brother or sister or chief crony, with round specks for the dots after the letters, and the letters themselves plain and thick. Then paste these letters and dots on that side of the apple which is most turned to the sun, taking care not to loosen the fruit's hold upon its stem.

As soon as the apple is ripe, take off the paper cuttings, which, having shut out the reddening rays of the sun, have kept the fruit green just beneath them, so that the name or initials now show plainly. After that, bring the owner of the initials to play near the tree, and say presently: "Why, what are those queer marks on that apple up there?"

You will find this quite a pleasant way to surprise the very little ones, and, of course, you can print a short pet name as easily as initials.—St. Nicholas.

EVERY DAY A LITTLE.—Every day a little knowledge. One fact in a day. How small is one fact! Only one! Ten years pass by. Three thousand, six hundred and fifty facts are not a small thing.

Every day a little self-denial. The thing that is difficult to do to-day will be an easy thing to do three hundred and sixty days hence, if each day it shall have been repeated. What power of self-mastery shall he enjoy who, looking to God for grace, seeks every day to practice the grace he prays for!

Every day a little helpfulness. We live for the good of others, if our living be in any sense true living. It is not in the great deeds of philanthropy that the only blessing is found. In "little deeds of kindness," repeated every day, we find true happiness. At home, at school, in the street, in the neighbor's house, in the playground, we shall find opportunity every day for usefulness.

Every day a little look into the Bible. One chapter a day! What a treasure of Bible knowledge one may acquire in ten years! Every day a verse committed to memory. What a volume at the end of twenty-five years!

The Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1879.

REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

OFFICE.—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Passed By.

This has been a year remarkable for the revival influence which has prevailed in the church. The number of conversions will probably be greater than for any year within the past ten. Some sections, however, have not shared, apparently, in this influence. Many churches, altogether, have remained cold and lifeless during this gracious outpouring of the Spirit. Others have been somewhat active in certain kinds of church work, congregations and Sunday-schools have been kept up, churches have been built and repaired, and the gospel has been preached, but there has been no special refreshing in the church, and few, if any, sinners have been converted. Where this is the case, there should be great searchings of heart. Why has this church been passed by in this time of power and general awakening? A year in any pastorate, with few or no conversions, is always occasion for serious thought; but, when this is an exceptional state of things, it calls for even deeper self-examination.

It may not be the fault of the pastor. The church itself may have to bear the blame largely. There has been no union of effort. Divisions have existed among the members, mischievous gossip has sown the seeds of envy and jealousy, and a mania for worldly amusements and fashionable pleasures has obtained. Under such circumstances there has been little accord in prayer, and no agonizing together for the salvation of souls. The members are probably at ease in Zion. They have concluded that the preaching must do the whole work, and that they have only to sit and wait for the result; or, as is sometimes the case, they feel that with fair congregations, regular and entertaining services, and general peace and quiet, things are doing well enough. The community is full of unconverted people, and the church about as full of lifeless professors, but this is regarded as the normal and inevitable condition.

To be satisfied with spiritual stagnation is the sure way of keeping it up. Revivals, as a rule, must be developed from within the church itself. Both pastor and people must be stirred in the depths of their hearts, and be seized with a thirst for holiness, and with an irrepressible longing for the conversion of souls. Where this deep feeling of dissatisfaction with things as they are obtains, and where, as with one heart, the church cries out for the living God, the blessing cannot be long delayed. The burden of souls may rest upon the preacher, and upon a very few of the members, but it must be generally felt before we have the conditions of a deep and powerful awakening. If any individual soul is seemingly passed by in the dispensation of the Spirit, it is because that soul has grieved and resisted the Spirit. The same is true of churches that do not partake of the rich blessings which God is ever dispensing to those who are ready to receive them. If passed by, there is a cause not to be explained by any mere sovereignty in God, nor by difficulties that seem to be insuperable in the world without. The only thing too hard for God is to save a soul that will not repent, or to revive a church that is not seeking to be revived. As Christ stood at the door of the Laodicean Church and knocked, so does He stand at the door of every church. The church that has not felt the ordinary ministrations of the Holy Spirit, or to whom this extraordinary wave of revival influence has not reached, has been passed by, only because the waiting Saviour has not been admitted. He stands and knocks, but His voice is not heard, and the door is not opened.

A church unbelieving, unspiritual, without conversions, is so from some cause in itself. The pastor sometimes appoints a protracted meeting, gets help for the pulpit, and every means is invoked, but not much is done. The people are there, the gospel is proclaimed, appeals are made, earnest and persistent, and yet the stony hearts are not broken, and there is no movement. There is hinderance of some sort. God is true to His promises, Christ is ready and able to save, the quick and powerful word is preached, the Holy Spirit is there to awaken and sanctify, and yet there are no cries of contrition, no gush of love, no overflowing joy. What is it that bars the door to the entrance of mercy? What is it that keeps back the streams of grace? It might be in the preachers, or it might be in the members of the church. The wedge of Achan is buried somewhere. In whose tent the gold and the Babylonian garments are we may not be able to tell. There may be no special sin, but there is lack of consecration, there is unbelief, there is no deep soul-thirst with the people of God. The burden of souls, felt by some, is not generally distributed, and the most have come not to pray and work, but rather to see whether anything will be done.

The lack of spiritual prosperity should be an occasion of deep sorrow to every Christian, and to the live Christian it will be. He will mourn over the church as if it were his own family, and he will pray unceasingly for the baptism of the Spirit to come upon the fainting heritage. The natural showers are often partial, and one is watered, and another is left dry and withered. But it need not be so in the province of grace. The passed by do well to consider why the beneficent clouds of salvation have dropped no fattening and refreshing rain upon them.

About Christ.

There is a great deal of cant uttered in regard to Christ, and in opposition to doctrinal statements. Creeds are considered of no moment, and the easy changes are rung upon a mere name, as if there were something talismanic and saving in the sound. No doubt the essential thing in religion is the hearty acceptance of Christ, and the possession of the likeness of Christ in the character and life. But there are at least three things which are required of those who follow Christ.

They must believe in Him. This demand is absolute, and emphasized in the Scriptures. It is by faith that men come to Christ, and through faith in Him that they are saved. He that believeth not is condemned already, and the wrath of God abideth on him. No one can believe on Christ without believing something that is particular and definite concerning Him. What a man thinks of Christ is embodied in his belief, as whether He was only human, or both divine and human; as whether His death was in any proper sense an atonement for sin, or merely incidental to a benevolent, prophetic mission. Was it a matter of no consequence with the jailer whether he believed in one thing or another concerning Christ, so he believed on Him? Could he believe on Him without believing something definite? What we are to believe is not necessarily clear when we simply cry to the multitude: Believe in Jesus.

Love to Christ is as imperative as faith. "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maran-atha." It is the love of a person, love of such a peculiar and supreme nature, that nothing but the very highest and truest conceptions of Christ can justify it. It is much more than any love we are capable of cherishing for Paul or John, or for any mere creature. It is based not only upon the moral excellence of Christ as a man, but also upon His divine perfections. As a love of gratitude, it is incited by the sufferings of Christ for us, "in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." Who is it that we love, and what is it in Christ that we love? His love to us was exhibited in His death, and that love draws believing and penitent hearts. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." In order to love Christ we must have definite views of His nature and redeeming work, especially of His death as vicarious, as endured for our salvation. Faith, as the right apprehension of Christ, is necessarily before love, and our love is determined by what we perceive and believe Christ to be. Would it be like if we loved Him only as a good and holy, and a most benevolent and self-sacrificing man? Was this the measure and kind of Peter's love, or that of Paul?

Christ must be obeyed. It is obedience due to Him. He teaches and commands not as the scribes, but as One having authority. He says: If ye love Me, keep my commandments. He exacts such service and obedience as is due to the divine Law-Giver. This obedience springs from love, as love is born of faith, and it is not genuine obedience unless it be obedience to Him. An outwardly moral life there might be, and a recognition of moral obligation as based in the will of God, but in it there might be no distinctive acknowledgment of Christ's authority. Not only outward conduct, but the inward life, the very thoughts, must be subdued to Christ. "Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalted itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." Consecrated obedience and service are constrained in us by Christ's love to us, by His death for all. "And that He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again." Can there be obedience to Christ without a clear perception of His character, authority, and of His suffering?

We confess that we are wearied with this pretended preaching of Christ as opposed to the need of doctrinal statements and well-defined views of religious truth. Much that is in the creeds may be unknown to the soul saved through faith in Christ. But the vital doctrine is about Christ, and it does make a difference as to what men believe. The truth as it is in Jesus must be presented, and faith, love and obedience all demand that which is definite and true in our apprehensions of the person and work of Christ.

Another Instance.

MR. EDITOR: I am not done advocating the great importance of circulating, as a regular item of pastoral duty, our denominational religious literature. The more I call up the facts strown along my itinerant career, the more I feel the importance of this department of our work. In December, 1827, I was appointed to Warren circuit, with Vicksburg, as it then was, as one of my preaching places. As was my usual custom, I soon became acquainted with almost every white person in Vicksburg, and, among others, with William H. Benton, an educated and courtly gentleman, possessed of fine poetical talents, who was acting as magistrate and post master. As he had no family, he spent most of his time in his office, and seemed very fond of reading. He was supposed to be deistical, and, though I soon became socially intimate with him, such was the superiority of his literary education I was afraid to enter into any argument with him in regard to the authenticity of the Scriptures. The first volume of Watson's Institutes had lately reached our country, and I had read with great pleasure and profit. I took it to Esq. Benton's office one day, and told him that I did not feel competent to argue with him on the inspiration of the Bible, but there was a book that said all on that subject that I would wish to say if I could do it, and asked him if he would read it. He very pleasantly answered that he would read it carefully, for he was disposed to give that subject his honest attention. As I was often in his office, I could see, from the slow removal of his bookmark, that he was very deliberately plodding through the Institutes. Finally he told me he had finished the volume, and added that Watson's arguments for the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures were overwhelming to any candid mind. He dwelt particularly on the argument derived from the miracles of the Bible, and added: "If he could prevail on God to work one more miracle, then he would be a good Christian." I did not apprehend his meaning, and asked him if God had not wrought miracles enough to remove the doubts of the most skeptical already. "You do not understand me, Mr. Jones," said he, "it will take such a miracle of grace, as only God can work, to renovate and change this polluted and wicked heart of mine, and that is the miracle I earnestly desire to have wrought."

But years rolled on before that miracle was wrought. But he had become a firm believer in the Bible, and continued the struggle against sin and unbelief, until he was able to confess himself a sinner saved by a miracle of grace. He took a prominent stand in our church at Vicksburg, consecrated his superior talents to religious purposes, became a very acceptable local preacher, had the esteem and love of the church, and the confidence of almost everybody, and finally died in the faith. Now my brother, who reads this, do try and sell some of your reading people a few copies of Watson's Institutes. Or, if you can't do that, take that old dusty copy out of your library, that you will never read again, and send it round to those who may not be able to buy it, but would read it to profit. I loaned the first volume to William H. Benton in 1828, and though, perhaps, very few ever knew what had turned his attention to the Bible, it seemed to give him an impulse in that direction, which resulted in much good to himself and others.

J. O. JONES.

The Cost of Rum.

The arithmetic has been exhausted to compute the destructive cost and countless ills of intoxicating liquor. Liquors, by most skillful, careful statisticians, appall credulity. They reveal an enormity almost beyond the reach of most darling imagination. When considered calmly, the wonder is not that prosperity is retarded, socialism is spreading with alarming rapidity, factories are hushing their spindles, and labor strikes and riots occur, but that we have a national, social existence. How this exhaustive drain upon the industrial, economical resources of a people can be suffered, and yet live as a nation, is the miracle of political history. But, startling as is the truth, without color or exaggeration, it fails to arouse fear or quicken energy. The spirit of reformation, in all our Southwestern country, seems to be dead beyond hope or power of speedy resurrection. We have yielded to the inevitable, and given consent to be dominated by the devil and his minions. In all our towns and cities the rum-power holds undisputed sway. They elect our officers and administer our laws. They shape the moral sentiment of communities, and dictate the course of priest and people. They inspire our patriotism and control our legislation. Courageous, conscientious manhood has surrendered its royal colors. Against this galling tyranny over truth, good morals and social life, a voice is rarely lifted, a word scarcely spoken. If, perchance, here and there, some one who loves truth rather than error, Christ more than a besotted, besmirched Cæsar, ventures to utter a feeble protest or prayer for relief, the whole rum-power turns loose the dogs of war, and fear him to atoms for the delectation of their bloated dupes and disciples. In Louisiana they have said to constitution and law-makers: "We are the party in power; before our scepter you must bow." In Mississippi they have said: "Yes, you have laws in your interest on the statute-books, but they are a dead letter; their administration is in our hands. We make and unmake politicians. No man holds office but by our consent, and to subserve our ends." So, upon us, have been riveted the chains of a debasing servitude. Figures no longer alarm us. Murders by liquor, only annoy, because of their monotonous frequency. Asylums and hospitals crowded with the wretched victims of rum, and maintained at large expense, only give opportunity to indulge our benevolence. The millions thus squandered, enough to expel forever from our shores the cry of "hard times," so that its feeblest echoes will never be heard again, is now simply estimated as a part of our necessary annual expenses.

When we consider all this, and then the apathy of the church and Christian conscience, we ask, vainly: Where is the spirit of reform? Where is the faith and heroism of John Knox, and Martin Luther, and John Wesley? With every suggestion of special effort at emancipation from this worse than Egyptian bondage, we are told "there is no hope; effort is utterly useless; we had as well submit and quietly endure what we cannot cure." Thus we are slumbering on arms that ought to be gleaming in the fore-front of battle, and winning conquests over the powers of darkness. May Heaven arouse the church, and make every pulpit a throne of thunder, and every Christian a plumed and armored foe of intemperance and the rum power. The above is by way of preface to the following suggestive figures taken from an interesting article in the Christian at Work, which we republish with hope, but "little faith:"

The Old and the New.

BY DOUBLE U.

The article of Chancellor Haven on ministerial support among the British Wesleyans recalls the like spirit, if not a like liberality, that pervaded the system of ministerial or Conference finances on my first acquaintance with the itinerancy, in Alabama, near thirty years back. It was a quarterage and expense system. The last of it I recollect was: Single preacher, $150, and boarding expenses. Preacher's wife, $150, and table expenses for the pair. Children over seven years of age, $45; under, $25—nothing allowed for children over fourteen years. A table imprinted on the memory from secretaryship to the Conference Board of Stewards. The deficiencies in payments were united with the claimants upon the Conference or fifth collections fund, and received a dividend. This system was smiled down under the plea that it was trivial. Salary would sound better, and secure a larger benevolence toward the support of the ministry. This has been true in respect to the few strongest out of many weak appointments, but it has worked downward, and promoted indifference almost to the peril of the entire work. It is now bare of any provision for supporter education of children—of any recourse against a deficit in salary, is left to estimates by men, in many, very many instances, totally incompetent, as the provision for their own family attest. Take as guide a favorable instance: A station on a railroad, 150 members, salary $500, preacher, wife and four children. Old quarterage system would be $400, table expenses $300, with recourse against deficit. Better that than the one we work by.

The Alliance at Basle.

We have already given some items in regard to the recent General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance at Basle, Switzerland. From a communication in the Independent by Dr. Philip Schaff, we give the following interesting extract:

Dr. Christlieb prepared for this Conference a long paper on heathen missions. It was the result of profound and extensive study and gave a bird's-eye view of the Protestant mission work all over the globe, with a bright prospect of the approaching harvest.

At the same time, this paper led to an important action of the Conference—a solemn protest against the infamous British opium-trade in China, which was forced upon that vast empire against its will, at the point of the bayonet, and is one of the chief obstacles to the progress of Christianity in the East. A heathen nation protests against the poison, and a Christian nation forces it upon them. It seems incredible that the people of England can tolerate any longer that traffic which is carried on as a government monopoly, to the disgrace of the Christian name and the ruin of millions of human beings. Alas! that heathen China, with its loud protest, should shame Christian England, which sells her conscience for filthy lucre! When will a new Wilberforce arise to arouse Parliament to a sense of its duty? The protest of the Alliance is to be brought to the notice of the English Secretary of State for India. May it have the desired effect. Dr. Christlieb prepared a special pamphlet on the opium trade, which was translated into French and English and sold during the Conference. It contains a great deal of appalling information on this satanic chapter in the history of Great Britain. Unfortunately, the liquor traffic is equally ruinous and disgraceful to our civilization.

Another important act of this General Conference is its interference in behalf of religious liberty. The Alliance has always been the advocate of the oppressed. It released Matamoras and his fellow-prisoners in Spain; the Madiai family in Italy, who were thrown into a dungeon for no other crime but reading the Bible. It interceded for the Baptists and Methodists in Scandinavia, for the Lutherans in the Baltic provinces of Russia, and for all Christian sects in Turkey. At this time it cry for help came from Austria, and especially from Bohemia and Moravia, where Scotch and American missionaries have been laboring with some success among the Roman Catholic population. Under the influence of the recent Jesuitical reaction, the devotional meetings of the converts in their own houses in Prague and neighboring villages have been broken up by the police, at the point of the bayonet, and the work of the missionaries been totally prohibited. Several of the offenders have been fined and imprisoned. Under the same influence, the labors of the Moravians, the Baptists, the Methodists, the Swedenborgians, the Irvingites, and the British and Foreign Bible Society, which were tolerated since 1857, have been stopped in Austria during the present year. It is declared unlawful and criminal to invite friends and neighbors to family worship in one's own castle! It seems incredible that this should be possible in a civilized country, in this nineteenth century; but we must remember that the spirit of the Jesuitical counter-reformation, which utterly crushed Protestantism in Bohemia and reduced its population of three or four millions to seven hundred thousand, during the Thirty Years' War, is not dead. The Austrian Constitution, adopted after the Koniggratz disaster, in 1867, grants, in Article 14, "full liberty of faith and conscience to everybody." But in Article 15 the liberty of public worship is confined to the churches recognized by law. And in Article 16 the right of private devotion (hausliche Religionsubung) is granted to members of unrecognized confessions only on condition that it be "neither unlawful nor detrimental to morals." Here is room for a considerable latitude of construction to police authorities, according to the prevailing sentiment of the community. It is said that Cardinal Schwarzenberg, of Prague, is at the bottom of the severe measures; and he is aided by some rationalistic Protestant pastors, who hate vital religion. I have recently visited Bohemia and Austria, and, from communications of native ministers and laymen, as well as American missionaries (the Rev. Schauffler and the Rev. Adams,) and the Rev. A. Moody, the Free Church missionary of Pesth, formerly of Prague, I have fully convinced myself of the facts of persecution. Dr. Joseph P. Thompson, of Berlin, in behalf of the American Board, investigated the matter, and sent a carefully-worded memorial to the Alliance Conference, which, in his absence, on account of sickness, was read by Dr. Brown, of Hamilton College.

This memorial, together with the petitions of the persecuted brethren and the verbal statements of several Bohemian pastors present, were considered in several private conferences, and the result brought before the open meeting. It was unanimously resolved by the Alliance to advocate the cause of the persecuted brethren and to send an international deputation to His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, with the request to grant the petitioners the full right of private and public worship.

More Ministers Needed.

A writer in the Churchman says:

It should be borne in mind that no "supporting salary" was promised in Scripture to God's ambassadors, except in the general promise, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Everywhere in its pages the idea is held out that "the disciple is not above his Lord, or the servant above his Master," who "became poor for our sakes" that He might make many rich.

And examining the principles that actuated the early church, as when St. Paul went into Macedonia, or the deacons down to Samaria, we find that the settled principle of early times was that they who had already received the gospel should support those who preached it and that while they were carrying it to those who were still without it. In other words, the early Christians recognized a difference, and a radical one, between the law of "demand and supply" in the case of the ministry and in the case of other trades and professions; that while in these latter the supply must be regulated to the demand, in the case of the church it is her mission not only to supply a ministry to meet the demands of her actual membership, but also to furnish a force to create a demand.

It will be a sad day for the church when she gives out as a recognized principle of action that the gospel is like wheat, potatoes, or corn, only sent where there is a good and profitable market for it; where people want it and will pay well for it. God forbid that that hour shall ever come! It will show that the church has lost the true idea of her mission to the world.

And as far as support goes, I think this is unquestionably true, that, as a whole, the clergy do get through life "having food and raiment." If some fail or are unemployed, so they do in all professions and business. No good reason can be given why an ill-furnished, incompetent, or unwise man should do better in the work of the ministry than in any other business, except that God sometimes "gives more grace." But I do believe that a greater per cent. of men in the ministry of the church make a success of their lives, to a greater or less extent, than in any other business or trade.

Rev. Dr. Foss, in his address at the funeral of Daniel Drew, said:

When I first knew him as his pastor he was a regular attendant of the meetings of the church, especially the love feasts. Many a time I have seen him in the lecture room of St. Paul's Church in those years that were not so bright with holy hope as the years that have gone by, and yet were years of serious penitence, and, at least, of frequent humiliation of himself before the Lord, and of earnest prayer. How many times all those years I have heard him speak when there was scarcely a dry eye in all the assembly, and when I feel sure that those old class-leaders and other discerners of religious character, whose judgment could be trusted, saw in him at least a human soul struggling with the problem of destiny, yearning to be better; and, surely, that is no small part of virtue. And I trust those who knew and loved him best will pardon his lifelong friend—one who from boyhood has been his friend—if I now say that, doubtless, amid the terrible competitions of the years that then came which led to his financial wreck, there were many months in which there hung a dark gloom over his mind, and he saw no ray of the stars, but was driven on a stormy sea, hardly knowing how he should ever make the happy coast; but, then, as I believe, and I think my information is sufficient to justify the statement over his coffin to-day, that by his temporal wreck, by the blasting of his most cherished financial hopes, and especially by that keenest pang which went through his soul when he was unable to meet his promise to the Christian institutions which will hold him in everlasting and grateful remembrance for what he did, and also for what he intended, that by that great sorrow he was brought again into smooth seas and under peaceful skies, and during the last few years of his life he was much on his knees an humble penitent at the foot of the cross, and much before his Bible; and that from his lips, in those latest months, from time to time there dropped, in the feebleness of advancing age, words of restfulness and peace which befitted the drawing near of the setting sun.

The Standard, Chicago, has this to say about the pulpit use of slang:

While some defense may be found for the employment of unwonted methods of preaching, such as familiar and colloquial and anecdotal forms of utterance—partaking of the nature, if not, indeed, formed upon the model of the sensational; we insist upon it that there can be no excuse offered—or none admitted if offered—for the use of slang and slovenly expressions in the house and service of God. These we hear but too frequently, and while they are occasionally the outcome of defective education and taste, they are more frequently—the more's the pity—the affectation of young preachers who ought not to be allowed to plead ignorance in their defense. They probably would not do so, but would claim that the active force of slang phrases reaches the mind of the hearer quicker and more effectively than expression of a more sober and dignified tone. We grant that this may be true, but they reach the ear of all cultured persons to offend it, and of the majority of devout hearers to produce the impression of a levity at utter variance with the solemnity of religious worship.

We have heard preachers only recently and in pulpits not out of telegraphic reach of Chicago—use such slang phrases as "taking stock," "getting a square meal," "going the whole animal," "keeping his head level," "putting his foot in it," "getting a corner on brimstone," "and then he Peter'd," and many others, equally coarse and unfit for the pulpit—unless, indeed, the theory which some would set up, is to be admitted, that the pulpit is no more sacred than the platform. If some young preachers we wot of—and preachers who are not very young no less!—would be a great deal more careful in their utterance—the dignity of the pulpit would not be so often lowered and possibly they might be more respected in it, and out of it, alike.

Letter from Bishop Paine.

DEAR BROTHER MCFERRIN:—Let me congratulate you, your able and noble Book Committee, as well as all other members and friends, who have contributed to sustain the honor of our Southern Methodism. It thrilled my heart to learn that the big debt of $300,000 had been provided for. Hear it! The Methodists, South, do not repudiate an honest debt. They, like all other honest men, frankly confess it, and pay it as soon as they can. Poor we may be, and how poor we are down here those North cannot conceive; yet our Methodism is a debt paying religion. In this respect, at least, we are true Wesleyans, and no man shall take this honor from us. And now let us pay promptly our subscriptions, and go forward to meet our obligations to God and man by sending the gospel to the whole world.

My health has not improved much. I am feeble, and sometimes suffer intensely. Then I can do nothing but endure. At other times I am comparatively easy. How I may do my work at my Annual Conferences I cannot tell; but it is my purpose to attend them, D. V., and do the best I can. They lie among my old friends, and I want to see the members again. They will sustain me and bear with me as they have heretofore done. I know this. Bishop Pierce has, in two notes, kindly tendered me his assistance at Murfreesboro; and while unwilling to impose any additional labor upon one who I fear has already taken too much upon himself, yet, as he assures me that neither his convenience nor his present state of health forbids, I have invited him to come. My strength may fail, and, anyhow, I am sure we will be greatly delighted to have him with us. Above all, may God be with us always! Your old friend and brother,

R. PAINE.

ABERDEEN, Miss., September 30, 1879.

Nashville Tristian Advocate.

—We have received a card announcing the death of Mr. Daniel C. Lowber, in New York City, October 2. Mr. Lowber was for many years a citizen of New Orleans; but for the past ten or twelve years he spent most of his time in England. He was a man of wonderful energy, and of indomitable perseverance, in business pursuits. A kind, considerate and generous friend, we knew him long, and sadly do we chronicle his death. His saluted wife, Mrs. Mary Lowber, a woman of precious memory, died in England several years ago. Mr. Lowber was given to charitable deeds, and always heartily seconded his noble wife in her many works of usefulness. They were without children, but their home was rarely without some orphan, who received from them parental care.

—We are informed that the impression prevails, in some sections, that Seashore camp ground has been so injured by storm, and by the yellow fever flurry of last summer, that there will be no attempt to hold camp meetings there in the future. This is a great mistake. The injury done by the storm was not great, and is being repaired. The camp meeting will be held hereafter at an earlier date, so as to avoid all apprehensions about the fever. Mr. James P. Hamilton is the keeper at the camp ground, and to him communications should be addressed, and not to Mr. James Tharp, who is now residing in Mobile.

—The Democratic State Convention of Louisiana met at Baton Rouge, October 6-8. The following were the nominations: For Governor, Louis A. Wiltz; for Lieutenant Governor, Samuel D. McEnery; for Attorney General, J. C. Egan; for Secretary of State, W. A. Strong; for Superintendent of Public Education, E. H. Fay.

—Marriage notices, field notes, obituaries, and other communications, still come to us occasionally without the names of the writers. In all such cases the communications cannot be published. We must have names and address.

—Rev. Dr. W. H. Watkins was in the city last week. His health is still rather feeble, but improving. His trip to the mountains seems to have been of considerable service to him. When the cool weather comes we trust he will be fully restored.

—Rev. R. S. Trippett returned from England by way of New York, on Saturday, October 11. He left New Orleans for Monroe, La., the same day.

We are glad to learn, says the New York Methodist, that the old and well-equipped Methodist college—the Wesleyan University at Middletown—has opened the new year under exceedingly favorable auspices. It has admitted more than forty new students. Its buildings have been thoroughly renovated and repaired, its recitation rooms furnished with elegantly new seats, its apparatus increased, and its annual deficit of $10,000 in current expenses fully and promptly met. Best of all, Mr. Geo. I. Seney, one of its noble Board of Trustees, the President of the Metropolitan Bank in this city, has recently paid into the hands of the Treasurer of the University, 50,000 in first mortgage six per cent. gold-bearing railroad bonds, as the endowment of a professorship. Who wants to do likewise?

We regret to learn that Rev. B. D. Dashiell, presiding elder of Galveston district, Texas Conference, has been a great sufferer of late. The Texas Christian Advocate says:

We have been permitted to see a letter from Sister Dashiell, to a friend in Galveston, written September 25, from Philadelphia. It states that on the twentieth his leg was amputated at the hip joint. Since then he has been doing as well as can be; could in the same condition, Sister D. says: "He is very low and much prostrated, but the doctors are hopeful." Again: "He has been perfectly happy, and expects to be able to do more good, by the help of God, on one leg than he has done in the past."

Last Sabbath, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of December 5, was a day of jubilee to the congregation of City Mission Episcopal Church, South, in this city. It was the day of their entrance into their new and permanent church home—an occasion that might well call for congratulation and rejoicing. None but those familiar with the history of this true and tried people, the circumstances of extraordinary discouragement through which they have been called to pass, can appreciate the happy transition that has just occurred in their experience.

TRAVELLER'S OFFICIAL GUIDE OF THE RAILWAYS AND STEAM NAVIGATION LINES IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA for December, 1879. Philadelphia: The National Railway Publication Company, publishers and proprietors.

This is a large octavo of 360 pages, and contains everything that needs to be known concerning railway time-tables, connections and distances, ocean and inland steam navigation routes. Maps of the principle lines are given, and an immense amount of miscellaneous information. It is compiled and edited by W. F. Allen, editor and business manager, under the auspices of the General Ticket and Passenger Agent's Association. Price, $1 per annum.

THE SABBATH MONTH. Devotional thought for young mothers. By Louise Seymour Houghton. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication.

The volume contains a Scripture text, and meditations thereon, for each day in the month—thirty-one in all.

THE MODEL CHRISTIAN WORKER. John Potter. By Rev. William P. Breed, D. D. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication.

John Potter was for many years a colporteur in the West for the American Tract Society, and later a colporteur of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and City Missionary of the West Spruce Street Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia. This book gives a very interesting and edifying account of his conversion, labors, character and death. The Church of Christ in modern times has furnished few brighter illustrations of Christian devotedness and usefulness.

—The Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, October, 1879, contains the following articles: 1. Prelatical Succession. By T. O. Summers, D. D., LL. D. The claims of the successionists are met by the learned reviewer in the usual way, and by such authorities and arguments as have been adduced along this line of polemics for a long time. The article would make a timely and useful tract to guard our people against those who use this figment of prelatical succession as a means of proselyting the ignorant. 2. The Impeccability of Jesus Christ. By J. E. Evans, D. D. The writer contends as against the views of Dr. Summers, and Ullman and others, that Christ was not liable to sin—that it was impossible for Him to sin. This, also, is an old bone of contention, on which there is nothing new to be said, and something to be said on both sides. Dr. Evans leaves the matter still in this condition. 3. The Theory of Sound. By Rev. J. M. Lawson. A review of Wilford's Problem of Human Life, embracing the evolution of sound, and evolution evolved. Wilford attacks the old and generally accepted wave theory of sound, and affirms that sound is a finely attenuated substance, which is radiated from the sound-producing body by an unknown law of diffusion, just as the radiant atoms of light, heat, magnetism, electricity, and even odor, are sent off from their respective sources." Mr. Lawson seems to be with Wilford in these views. 4. Anglo-Catholicism. Some radical questions concerning Episcopalianism in England and America. By Rev. J. J. Tigert, A. M. The article is taken up with a comparison of the articles of religion of the Reformed Episcopal Church with those of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and with a glance at the true position occupied by the Reformed Episcopal Church. The conclusions of the author are: that there is no occasion for any such church, and that the real home of the Reformers is in the Methodist Episcopal Churches. 5. The Sin of the Angels. By J. B. West, D. D. The essence of their sin, as the author believes, was in their rejection of Christ. A thoughtful and well-written article, but dealing with a rather speculative and very obscure subject. 6. Ignorance of Origin a Factor in Language. By Prof. E. A. Allen. "Words have grown far away from their original meaning, and their etymology is often so entirely forgotten or obscure that the philologist who looks at the facts of language must admit that, for all practical purposes of speech, knowledge of etymology, so far from being indispensable, is even quite unnecessary." We quote this opening of the article as the thesis of the writer. The treatment runs through ten pages of the Review, and is a readable essay on the change in the meaning of words and as contrasted with their derivation. 7. The Book of Job. By Rev. G. H. Zimmerman, A. M. "In Job we have the philosophy of faith apprehending the grace of God, when as yet the process of that grace was but mutely revealed." This is the meaning of the book, and the reason for its being written. So Mr. Zimmerman believes. His texts are Horne's Introduction and Cowle's Notes on the Book of Job. 8. Von Holst's Constitutional History. By the editor, Rev. J. W. Hinton, D. D. Von Holst is a German professor, has written two large volumes, and there are more to follow. He is a thorough Nationalist, and holds that "the Union made the States, and not the States the Union." Dr. Hinton takes up the cudgel in defence of a true Federalism and States rights, and in the discussion reviews the questions and principles involved in the late war.

This number closes the first year of the Review. It is to be continued. We suppose it has paid expenses, and that the prospects are fair for the future. Its quality, on the whole, has been as good as could be reasonably expected. This quality has not been first rate, a very few articles excepted. Many of the articles have been common-place and of small value. In time, however, there will, we hope, be improvement. The Southern Church may not have a great deal of the kind of talent that makes a good review writer, but it has some, and this will be called out more and more. It is only as a beginning, and as the promise of better things, that we express satisfaction in the first volume. Doubtless the committee and editor feel much this way about it. We were not convinced of the expediency of starting a quarterly without means to pay contributors and editorial service, but we heartily desire a Review. It is a need of the Southern Methodist Church, and, as the enterprise is under way, let us work together to have it. We learn that on the seventh of this month a majority of the Committee of Publication met at Nashville and elected Thomas O. Summers, D. D., LL. D., editor of the Review. Drs. Hinton, Lupton and Miller were elected to co-operate with Dr. Summers, exactly in what capacity we do not know, but we suppose as an advisory committee in the editorial management. It is probable that Dr. Hinton's distance from the place of publication made it impracticable for him to continue as editor. The subscription price is $3 a year. Remittances should be made to Dr. R. A. Young, Nashville. Communications for the Review must be addressed to T. O. Summers, D. D., LL. D., Nashville, Tenn.

—The North American Review for October has: 1. The Woman Question, Frank Parkman. 2. Science and Humanity, Frederic Harrison. 3. Louis Napoleon and the Southern Confederacy, Owen F. Addis. 4. The Railway Problem, Robert Garrett. 5. The Diary of a Public Man, part 3. 6. Spencer's Evolution Philosophy, Prof. E. L. Youmans. 7. Recent History and Biography, A. K. Fiske. 8. Von Holst's Constitutional History of the United States; Adam's Life of Albert Gallatin; Writings of Albert Gallatin; Shea's Life and Epoch of Hamilton; Cullum's Campaigns and Engineers of the War of 1812.

—Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for November opens with the Religion of Shakespeare, by Rev. John Bayley. Other articles are: Luther as a Lyric Writer; Misinterpreted Texts; Catherine Von Born; Pompeii and Vesuvius; Home Pulpit, Night and Morning, by the editor; The Persecution Under Queen Mary of England, by Alfred H. Guernsey; Popular Exegesis, by the editor. The number is rich in poetry, short articles and abundant illustrations.

—The American Bee Journal for October is filled with information in its special department. Published at Chicago, Ill. Price, $1 50 a year.

—The Southern Cultivator and the Alabama Farm Journal for October are both excellent. These periodicals are specially adapted to Southern agriculture.

—The Preacher and Homiletic Monthly for October contains its usual very choice supply of sermons and sermonic literature. A valuable periodical. Rev. I. K. Funk, editor, New York Religious Newspaper Agency. $2 50 per year.

—The Theological and Homiletic Monthly for October, Rev. R. N. Sleight, D. D., editor and publisher, Richmond, Va., has: Ritualism or Church Machinery; Christ and Nicodemus; The Law of Forgiveness; A Voice from the Pew to the Pulpit; A Natural Man Changed Into a Spiritual Man; A Minister's Dream; A Homily; Growth in Grace; Adopting the Mind that Was in Christ; New Translation and Exposition of First Peter iii, 18-22; Editorial Miscellany.

—The Church News is the title of a monthly paper devoted to the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, published at Batesville, Ark. Rev. John W. Boswell is the editor.

While we continue to do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements from the ADVOCATE, parties must judge for themselves as to the real value of the goods advertised. In ordering please mention the ADVOCATE.

THE ADVOCATE

FOR TWENTY-FIVE CENTS TO JANUARY, 1880.

The publisher announces to the thousands of our friends that he will send the paper from date to January next on receipt of twenty-five cents in currency or postage stamps. This is done to facilitate securing new subscribers; and, feeling assured that with but slight effort on the part of our friends thousands of persons could be induced to take advantage of this great offer, many of whom after that time would become permanent subscribers, will they exert themselves to swell the list? There is no other investment that will supply the same amount of interesting reading matter, week by week, as this liberal offer. Let us hear from you as early as possible.

THE ADVOCATE FUND.

To any person sending us four yearly subscribers, with $1 the paper will be sent free for one year. Sample copies will be mailed to parties who advise, to facilitate agents in securing subscribers. Address all communications in connection with above to the publisher.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS, of the staff of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, left We Inesday evening, for the West and East, on business connected with the ADVOCATE. We speak for him the courtesies while in have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.—Fruit jars Mason pints, $1; quarts, $1 25; two quarts, $1 50 per dozen; American China dinner sets, $15-$18. Equal in looks and usefulness as French China. 19

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this particular feature is an opportunity seldom found in so thoroughly a first-class house, having reduced its rates to $1 and $1 50 per day.

KEWANEE WINDMILL.—For particulars respecting this popular windmill see the card on the sixth page. It is considered to be the best one in use, and those requiring a reliable and at the same time an economical windmill should buy one from the Kewanee Manufacturing Company, 64 Broadway, New York. They invariably take the premium wherever exhibited. Agents wanted.

MR. PHILIP WERLEIN, 135 Canal street, is now offering fine bargains in pianos, organs and musical instruments. Those wishing anything in that line will do well to call and get a good instrument at a low price.

NEW fall and winter dress goods, hosiery, flannels, etc., just rolled in, purchased at low prices, to be sold at low prices and all first class goods. See advertisement of Steer, E. H. Adams & Bro. on this page.

MR. AND MRS. F. R. HARDON arrived, on Tuesday last, from New York. They will be followed shortly by an extensive line of new fall and winter millinery goods of their own selection. The regular opening will occur soon in a style for which this house is noted.

MILLINERY GOODS, ETC.—There is no better concern to do business with than Armstrong, Cater & Co., of Baltimore. Their business extends to all parts of the country, and every day they are making new customers. Baltimore may well be proud of such citizens, for they are not only respected and honored there, but by everybody who knows them. When you want goods from a first-class house remember Armstrong, Cater & Co.

COMPLETE HOME.—The above work is indorsed by many of the leading papers in the land as being the most valuable of its kind ever published. It contains information for the old and the young. It imparts information to the housekeeper upon things it is necessary for her to know. It also reminds her about matters she is in danger of forgetting. There is no better guide for the young married people just in sets of everything pertaining to the home. This book ought to be in the house of every family. That enterprising gentleman, J. C. McCurdy, is the publisher. Supply yourself at once.

IRON ROOFING.—The attention of every one is directed to "Carrier's" New Patent Sheet Iron Roofing, which is considered to be the best in use in this part of the country, as well as wherever used, and its adoption by the best mechanical judgment of the country and from our own examination we are fully convinced of its excellence, combining cheapness with durability. Our planters and others should write and get full particulars from Cincinnati and there is no doubt left when they try it they will use no other. The president and superintendent of this concern are gentlemen of the highest standing in Cincinnati, so that you can rely on anything they say on the subject. Those of our readers contemplating building should use this in preference to any other now in the market. See advertisement.

Pure Cod Liver Oil made from fresh selected livers on the Seashore, by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to any of the other oils in market.

Farm, Garden and Household.

THOUGHTS FOR THE MONTH.

To gather and house his crops before bad weather sets in, is the prime consideration with the farmer just now. The weather is usually favorable in October, and the crops in good condition to handle. When frost has killed the leaves, much more trash adheres to cotton, the picking is more tedious, and the sample inferior to the early pickings. It is sound policy therefore to push the picking as rapidly as possible. Corn also loses constantly—water gets into the shuck and rots some—a part falls on the ground and rots or is eaten by rats. As soon as dry, therefore, it is best to house corn. Where the weevil is troublesome, some wet the shuck as it is put in the crib—the corn being precious[ly] dry—others sprinkle a little salt and lime through the corn as it is packed away. In both cases, of course, it is corn in the shuck and this is always preferable—the corn keeps sweeter and better and is less injured by rats, when they have access to the crib. But rats ought never to be permitted to enter a corn crib. If there are no trees or other objects which they can climb, and from which jump on the crib, and if the latter is put on posts or piers four feet high and capped with inverted flaring tin, or sheet iron pans, the rats cannot get in. The steps should be movable ladder-like) and taken down whenever the crib is locked up.

WHEAT.

Besides gathering crops, preparation for wheat and sowing of the same, is now in order. In our Southern climate the paramount consideration is to secure early ripening of the crop. Quite a number of things may be made to work to this end. Early variety—early sowing—dry, thirsty, land—heavy manuring—and probably liming the land. May wheats—such as usually ripen about the last of May—are decidedly best adapted to our climate and taking the average of years are surest to produce good crops. The later the variety the sooner it should be sown; in northern part of the cotton belt by the middle of this month, especially on clean land where there is little apprehension from the "fly." Perhaps a good rule is to sow about the time of the first killing frost.

SWEET POTATOES.

Dig after first light frost—a hard freeze will injure them badly, especially if the ground is wet. The surest method of keeping is in banks or hills. Leave a hole at top for ventilation until the "sweating" is over, and keep rain water from entering the bank. After three or four weeks close up the bank, and dirt it heavily, adding more and more as the weather gets colder. The dirt should finally be at least one foot thick. It is well to wrap the potatoes with a good covering—eight or ten inches thick—of dry pine straw, and then a shingling of boards, bark or corn-stalks, before putting on the dirt. Dispose of the early planted first, the late planted will keep better and be of finer quality in the spring.

GROUND-PEAS.

Dig just before frost—if the vines are killed and the digging delayed the nuts will separate easily from the vines and many of them be left in the ground. Run a plow—a half sweep—with wing set to run deep—on each side of hill, and then pull up and turn over the vines, and expose nuts to the sun to cry. When dry, they can be stacked up, and the nuts pulled off at leisure. The vines thus cured, make excellent forage.

SUGAR CANE.

To novices, it may be well to say, cut before a hard frost. A freeze is destructive to the plant, causing the juice to sour. Select a high dry place—between two wide rows will answer—and lay the cane (with leaves on) in regular order, extending the butts farther and farther in same direction, so that the tops will successively cover up the butts quite deep, then cover the last butts with earth. Leave all exposed to rain.

BARLEY AND RYE.

If not already sown should be, seeded down at once.

OATS.

In the warmer portions of cotton belt, continue to sow oats. Get good first proof seed and prepare and manure the land well. In your farm arrangements, advance oats to the first place as a provision crop, in place of corn. In Georgia this is rapidly being done.

HOGS.

Push those intended for slaughter. Besides an abundance and variety of food, give them a plenty of pure water, both for drinking and bathing. Place charcoal, salt and copperas, where they can get it at will. It is well to begin the treatment by giving them corn boiled in strong rye, to destroy worms and diseases; the latter is one form of worms. It is poor economy to carry a hog through the winter, which can be made to weigh one hundred and fifty pounds or upwards.—Southern Cultivator.

A WARNING FOR THE PEACH SEASON.—A sad case of accidental poisoning from eating peach-kernels is just reported from Paris, which should serve as a warning to all having children who can obtain peaches. It seems that a little boy, five years of age, succeeded in obtaining a number of peach-stones, and after breaking them, ate the kernels. When found, he was nearly dead from the effects of the contained prussic acid, and aid arrived too late to save him. It is as well, now that the fruit season has arrived, to explain to what extent poisoning properties are possessed by the peach-stone. The writers on toxicology state that an ounce of the kernels contains about one grain of pure hydrocyanic acid, and it is known that one grain of the poison will almost to a certainty kill any adult person. Two thirds of a grain has often been fatal for a child. Should any sickness occur from eating peach or other kernels, it is well to remember that ammonia is one of the best antidotes. The patient should be made to inhale all he can, and a few drops, diluted with four or five times its bulk of water, should be given internally.—Christian Union.

A correspondent of The New York Herald gives this report of results of experience as to the best time to cut timber:

"If oak, hickory or chestnut timber be felled in August, in the second running of the sap, and barked, quite a large tree will season perfectly, and even the twigs will remain sound for years; whereas that cut in winter and remaining till next fall (as thick as your wrist), will be completely sap-rotted and will be almost unfit for any purpose. The body of the oak split into rails will last ten or twelve years. Chestnut will last longer, but no comparison to that in August. Hickory cut in the eighth month is not subject to be worm-eaten, and will last a long time for fencing. When I began farming in 1802, it was the practice to cut timber for fencing in the winter. White-oak posts and black-oak rails, cut at that time, I found did not last more than ten or twelve years. In 1808 I began cutting fencing in the eighth month. Many of the oak rails cut that year are yet sound, as many of those formed of chestnut. If the bark be not taken off this month, however, it will peel off itself the second or third year and leave sap perfectly sound. The tops of the trees are also more valuable for fuel than when cut in the winter."

"To keep apples," says the Germantown Telegraph, "the fruit must be free from bruise or blemish. The fruit must be spread out on shelves or packed in barrels, and kept in an atmosphere of from forty to fifty degrees, better from forty to forty-five. Cellars at a temperature as equal as possible. Some cellars are just the thing, and preserve them beautifully. Others are too moist. Where this is the case a few bushels of stone lime should be used. Sliding shelves, six inches apart, latticed bottom, with a single layer of fruit, are extremely convenient, as they allow of constant examination without disturbing the fruit."

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, Jr.
Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo pages—Over 200 Illustrations.

Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assisted analysis and demonstration, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

DR. C. McLANE'S
Celebrated American
WORM SPECIFIC OR VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an itching sensation of the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a gnawing sensation of the stomach, at others entirely gone; feeling pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive, stools slimy, but frequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough, cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,
DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE
will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY
in any form; it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

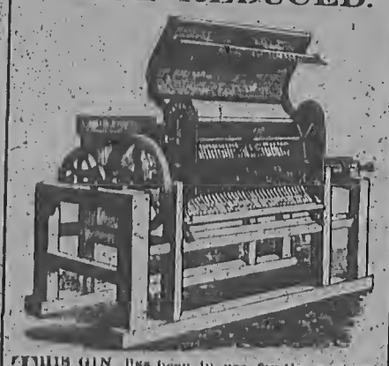
And General Agents for
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin,
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.
PRICE REDUCED.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past six seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the end of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same amount of seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while economizing steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton, on this account, of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 100 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.
FEEDERS and CONDENSERS with latest improvements also made by the Daniel Pratt Gin Co. to work with these Gins. Send for descriptive circulars.

Scientific.

—Rowland attacks the theory o lerrestrial magnetism based upon his own experiments by Ayrton and Perry, a theory which we noticed in this columnn a few weeks ago. He says the theory at once occurred to himself in connection with his experiments; but he was obliged to reject it, on finding that, to produce the earth's actual magnetism, she would have to carry such an electric charge as would be capable of giving a spark through air some nine millions of miles in length, and would repeal the moon so powerfully as quite to neutralize the action of gravitation and drive her out of her orbit. Either he or Ayrton and Perry must be greatly mistaken, as the latter make the necessary charge only sufficient to give a spark some 400 feet in length. The question is purely a mathematical one and will probably be soon settled. It is however, by no means a simple one, and the number of persons who can discuss it authoritatively is very small.

—That stamens are but petals more highly specialized is well known. When, therefore, we have double flowers, it is incorrect to say that the stamens have been changed to petals, as this would imply a step forward. The multiplication of petals in this way is really a step backward. If we are to use the very inappropriate term of sex in the same sense as we do when talking of animals, the truth would be that a double flower is "more male" than a single one. Some very interesting facts have recently been made known by M. Fournier, a French raiser of double begonias. This genus has male and female flowers separate on the same plant. When the flowers come double, it is generally confined to the male flowers. There is a great difference in the sexual characters of some species of begonias. In some the male flowers predominate. In some cases it is rare for a female flower to be produced. In other cases there is a good proportion of females to males. It has been noticed that the tendency to produce double flowers is confined to the former class.

Carburetted Gas.—From time to time many methods of supplying ordinary illuminating gas with an extra amount of light, has been devised. Generally these methods have involved the introduction of the vapor of naphtha, gasoline, etc., and rendered the gas dangerous from its liability to explode. An English invention is just announced which depends on the use of naphthaline, a solid, like paraffine, and is claimed to be perfectly safe. The naphthaline is melted and cast into the shape of candles or in the pellets, and a vessel for holding them is placed over the burner. It is charged from time to time or may be made to hold enough for twenty-four hours without exceeding the size of a cricket ball. The heat from the flame melts the naphthaline, and the gas, in passing through it becomes carburetted. It will, of course, cost the consumer an extra amount, as his gas cannot be carburetted for nothing. Yet it is claimed that the gas bills will be reduced so far that their amount and the cost of naphthaline together will be only half that of the ordinary gas.

Silk Photographs.—One of the silk manufacturing firms of Lyons, France, are advertising the production of photographic impressions on satin. They sent in a recent meeting of the Photographic Society several pieces of silk with a variety of photographic pictures printed thereon, including, among others, a number of large medallions representing pictures of celebrities. The length of the specimens which exhibited is stated as being no less than 131 feet. The process by which they are produced is not given, but it is believed that the plates are made with salts of silver. Such a discovery become of manifestly great value, if would open a new land, probably very popular line of dress goods.

In the "Proceedings" of the Academy of Natural Sciences, discussed Mr. John A. Ryder notes the discovery of honey glands on the leaves of Hydrangea radiata. These glands are situated in the angles formed by the junction of the lateral veins with the midrib. In the smaller leaves there are generally masses of hair, while the honey-glands seem to recede in the larger specimens, and this led Mr. Ryder to suppose that they were in some respect "modified hairs." In many cases the secretion was in sufficient abundance to be perceptibly sweet to the taste, and numerous ants feed on it.

—Mr. Swift, the "comet-hunter" of Rochester, in this state, is soon to be provided with an observatory and suitable instrument. The telescope is now in process of construction by the Clarks. It is to be sixteen inches in aperture, making among the great, but not among the enormous instruments. He proposes to give himself mainly to the study of the nebulæ, for which his peculiar keenness of vision is, really unbroken, but he will not abandon his comet-chasing, at which he has been so successful—more so, certainly, than any one else in the country.

THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

Diseases of the pulmonary organs are so prevalent and fatal, that a safe and reliable remedy for them is invaluable to every community. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results, which enables physicians as well as invalids to use it with confidence. It is the most reliable remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs that science has produced. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt and certain relief, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it without difficulty. In the treatment of ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household, for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

The marvellous cures which Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has effected all over the world are a sufficient guaranty that it will continue to produce the best results. An impartial trial will convince the most sceptical of its wonderful curative powers, as well as of its superiority over all other preparations for pulmonary complaints.

Eminent physicians in all parts of the country, knowing its composition, recommend Ayer's Cherry Pectoral to invalids, and prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proved its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

CATARRH

Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful train—corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, discharging odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. From first to last it is ever aggressive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. It is treated while a cure is possible, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is

Dr. M. W. CASE'S CARBOLATE of TAR-INHALANT

FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness.

It does not require ten minutes to demonstrate the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most cheering remedial agent known to science. Medicine and Carbolic acid, the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar, that the mere breathing converts them into a dense smoke or vapor. This is inhaled. Taken right to the diseased parts. No heat. No hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. The treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by the scientific, who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FREE TREATMENT—Circulars, etc., Sent Free—Send. Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address DR. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WE BELIEVE

That if everyone would use Hop Bitters freely, there would be much less sickness and misery in the world; and people are fast finding this out, while families keeping well need a trifling cost by its use. We advise all to try it.—U. & A., Rochester, N. Y. Adv.

TEA BISCUIT.—One quart flour; two teaspoonfuls Kellogg's Baking Powder; three eggs; one and a half cupfuls milk; butter the size of an egg; two cupfuls milk. Bake in a hot oven.

BASHFUL LOVER.—Why, Miss, I—I wanted to see your father; I've some important business matters to propose to him. Benevolent young lady—"Well, I'm sorry father is not in—but can't you make the proposal to me?" The wedding cards were soon ordered.

—Mrs. Partington has been reading the health officer's weekly reports, and thinks "total" must be an awful malignant disease, since as many die of it as of all the rest put together.

VASELINE.

You may hunt the world over and still will not find
A medicine more valuable to the mind
The idea of value more plain to be seen
Than petroleum jelly, the famed Vaseline.

If a cut or a scald, or a wound or a burn
From pimples or tetter, the face and the form,
On the skin it should be found the first day or pain
And quiet shall reign in the house-hold again.

If our dearest and fairest are faded by the sun,
And the touch of the leper is the touch to be shunned,
Kind Vaseline comes as surely be seen
And the cheek takes on velvet it had not the sheen.

If the voice it is husky, the throat it is sore,
Take the jelly at once, and the trouble is o'er.
In fact read the circular, and from it glean
All the virtue and claims of the famed Vaseline.

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER.

CELEBRATED the WORLD OVER

The manufacturers have awarded the highest and only medal given rubber plasters at both the Centennial and Paris Expositions.

Far Superior to common porous plasters, liniments, the so-called electrical appliances, etc. It is the best known remedy for Lame and Weak Back, Rheumatism, Female Weakness, Sciatica, Hemorrhoids, Diseased Kidneys, Spinal Complaints and all ills for which porous plasters are used. Ask your Druggist for Benson's Capcine Plaster, and see that you get nothing else. Sold by all Druggists, price 25 cents.

Mailed on receipt of price by SAMUEL & JOHNSON, 21 PLATT STREET, NEW YORK.

JOHN WESLEY AT WORK.—As he travelled to and fro odd mistakes sometimes happened. Arrived at York, he went into the church at St Saviour's gate. The rector, one Mr. Cordeau, had often warned his congregation against going to hear "that vagabond Wesley." French. It was usual in that day for ministers of the establishment to wear a cossack, or gown, just as we everywhere in France see the French abbe. Wesley had on his gown, like a university man in a university town. Mr. Cordeau, not knowing who he was, offered him his pulpit. Wesley was quite willing, and always ready. Sermons leaped impromptu from his lips, and this was an impressive one. At its close the clerk asked the rector if he knew who the preacher was. "No." "Why, sir, it was that vagabond Wesley!" "Ah, indeed!" said the astonished clergyman; "well, never mind, we have had a good sermon." Sunday at Home.

TUTT'S PILLS

SYMPTOMS OF A TORPID LIVER.

Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Pain in the Head, with dull sensation in the back part, Pain under the shoulder-blade, fullness after eating, with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache, generally over the right eye, Restlessness, with fitful dreams, highly colored Urine.

IF THESE WARNINGS ARE UNHEEDED, SERIOUS DISEASES WILL SOON BE DEVELOPED.

TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. One dose effects such a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer.

CONSTIPATION.

Dr. I. Gay Lewis, Dalton, Ga., says: "After a fair trial of TUTT'S PILLS I pronounce them the best anti-bilious medicine ever offered."

Rev. T. R. Osgood, New York, says: "I have had Dyspepsia, Weak Stomach and Nervousness for years. TUTT'S PILLS are the only medicine that ever did me good. TUTT'S PILLS do all you claim for them."

TUTT'S PILLS

GOING BACK TO FARMS.—Just after the war, when inflation prices painted pictures of fortunes in all kinds of city and town vocations—when banking, insurance, and the agency business were supposed to yield wealth without limit, and when it was believed that fortunes could be made by merely organizing some sort of stock company, and putting the shares on the market—there was a general flocking of young men from farms to cities and towns, to get rich without labor. But that delusion has ended in bitterness and disappointment to thousands all over the land, and proves that the game of living by the wits is one that very few can thrive at. We are beginning to realize that farming possesses one preeminent merit—it will yield a living if nothing more, and that is more than can be said of many city pursuits. It is generally esteemed a plodding, unromantic business; but this is offset by its exemption from the harassments and tragic features that too often mark the painful and exhaustive struggle for the maintenance of ordinary social position in city life. It requires but a small capital to go to farming. This offers a simple solution of the livelihood problem to all who are willing to work, and it is gratifying to find that the fact is beginning to be realized by many weary of protonged illness in cities.—St. Louis Republican.

Mathushek Pianos,

The Reliable and Fine-Toned

Hale Pianos.

These Pianos possess all the desirable musical and mechanical qualities of first-class Pianos, and have reached a point of excellence which it seems scarcely possible to surpass. They are constructed of the very best material throughout, and are of the finest workmanship. Their tone is sonorous and brilliant, and possesses a peculiar singing quality found in no other Piano. All improvements developed in the art of Piano-making during the last ten years in Europe and this country have been applied to the above Pianos. As to DURABILITY these Pianos are unsurpassed. Not only will they bear during a life-time, but their tone will actually IMPROVE by use for many years.

Prices lower than they have ever been, and my terms to suit every purse.

DISCOVERY by which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the Hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. TESTIMONIALS FROM WELL-KNOWN PERSONS.

From Mrs. Hermann Seligman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 21, 1878.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very much pleased with the Piano you made for me. It is really a fine instrument, very respectable and is admired by all who have seen it. In fact, in point of tone, delicacy of touch and elegance of finish, it is one of the finest instruments I ever have had in my parlor, and am prepared to say that it is decidedly superior to any Piano which I have heard in this city. I consider it to my friends who may wish to purchase.

I am, Gentlemen, truly and respectfully yours,

HELEN H. E. SHERMAN,
254 I Street.

From Judge Bradley.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 2, 1878.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very happy to be able to rank your Pianos as one of the very best I ever had and will express the pleasure and brilliancy of tone and elasticity of touch which I find in them, as well as their great power. Hoping that your Pianos will stand as a fitting reward for any efforts in the direction of the trade, I remain, yours truly,

JOSEPH BRADLEY.

From the World Renowned Artist, Camilla Urso.

NEW YORK, May 27, 1873.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—After testing your Pianos a fair time I unhesitatingly say they are the most perfect instruments you have ever made. They possess a rare singing quality of tone, and gives me much pleasure to recommend them to the public.

Yours truly, CAMILLA URSO.

Letter from H. R. H. the Duke of Edinburgh.

We are delighted with the Piano. The tone is bold, strong and full, yet soft and mellow.

SLEEP OF YEARS.

BY JOHN VANCE CHENEY.

No green that greets the early Spring
When first her presence quickens there,
Glows as the crops the ruddy ripening bring
When Autumn blows her yellow hair.

No bird may build its sheltered nest
In lodging with kindling verdure grown;
But sleeps dwells sweeter, sweeter rest,
When leaves are gone and broods have flown.

No light or lay in love's or hope's or pain
Or passion on the lover's side give,
As tenderly as thoughts will be
The filmiest vapors of ambition.

No smiles that ripling morn may wear,
Are blest as slumbers when evening nears
No wakefulness however rare
As deep and sweet as sleep on years.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

SELMA, Ala., Oct. 8.—Capt. Turner has received a letter from Gen. Hood to D. C. Sullivan, and orders the property delivered to the purchasers.

SURGEON PORT, La., Oct. 11.—The Board of Health has issued a quarantine against New Orleans from and after to-morrow, Oct. 12th.

FOREST CITY, Oct. 11.—The Board of Health reports 4 cases of yellow fever here; four of the sick have died with in the past six days.

FRANKLIN, La., Oct. 11.—The sickness prevailing at Centreville, La., five miles below here, is undoubtedly yellow fever. Sixteen cases and 8 deaths have occurred to date.

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 11.—Five cases of yellow fever are reported existing at Hopefield, opposite Memphis, and at Forest City, twenty miles west. The Howards have been telegraphed to at Memphis for nurses. Trains have been suspended to the Memphis and Eastern Railway. Forest City is thirty miles east of Little Rock, and Hopefield seven miles east of here.

CHICAGO, Oct. 45.—The Tribune considers the election of the Republican ticket by a decided majority a foregone conclusion, and estimates the majority on joint ballot in the Senate at two-thirds, and in the House at two-thirds. The Republican majority on joint ballot will be 20, and in a total of 111 representatives, which is two more than necessary, to pass a bill. The Senate is chosen by Senators, with a majority of one.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 15.—Advices received from Forest City, Ark., this afternoon state the following as the condition of affairs: Two deaths have occurred there as even date. Mrs. Mark Izard and Miss Lattimore. Miss Izard was buried this morning by a few young men who had courage to remain in town; all that have died so far were females. Several men have undertaken work with the offices but received. The Board of Health officers are busy disinfecting and burning the bedding of those who have died. A train from Little Rock, last night, brought three country nurses and disinfectants. No new cases have developed. Every store in town is closed except two drug stores.

NEW YORK, Oct. 16.—The Protestant Episcopal Conference here this morning was largely attended. The question as "What is wanting to successful evangelization of the colored people of this country" was discussed. Rt. Rev. Dr. Lyman, Assistant Bishop of North Carolina.

FRANKLIN, La., Oct. 16.—The latest information from Centreville, La., is of an encouraging nature. No deaths have occurred since Saturday and no new cases during the last 48 hours. The sick are doing well. The physicians are hopeful, and are doing their utmost to arrest the progress of the disease. Weather cloudy and sultry.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—Gen. Sherman has forwarded to Gen. Sheridan a telegram from Gen. Pope, inclosing a petition from a committee of citizens of Santa Fe, stating that the murdering of settlers by Indians still continues in the southern part of New Mexico. Nineteen men are said to have been killed during the past twelve hours. The people of Santa Fe have appointed a committee of safety for the whole territory, and have made a request for rations for 500 men, who will be placed in the field forthwith.

NEWARK, Oct. 17.—Right Rev. Wm. R. Whittingham, Episcopal Bishop of Maryland is dead.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 17.—Returns from 84 out of 88 counties give Foster, Republican, for Governor, 18,627 majority. The other counties will make it 20,000.

AUSTIN, Oct. 18.—The Governor has issued a proclamation that after October 25th vessels from New Orleans by river, not touching at any infected place, will, after proper inspection, be allowed to enter any Texas port.

EAGLE PASS, Oct. 18.—A party of Indians passed near here en route to Mexico. They killed a herder and drove off a number of cattle. Indian signs are becoming numerous.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Oct. 18.—A special to the Chronicle from Sparta states that accounts of the deeds of outlaws in the eastern portion of Baldwin county are greatly exaggerated, but the truth reveals a bad state of affairs. There are about a dozen men in the band and the trouble is personal, not political. The outlaws have committed outrages on several persons. They burned the gins, cotton houses and fodder stacks of Dr. Robeson for the purpose of drawing him out of his house in order to shoot him. They killed a negro man for reporting them to the Grand Jury of Baldwin county. They burned the tannery and barns of Lake Robinson; then whipped a colored woman and her daughter in Hancock county. The gang have taken refuge in the swamps of Ocmee and Ogeechee. The Grand Jury of Hancock, now in session, have investigated the outrages, and are determined to bring the perpetrators to justice. The people of Hancock county are armed and indignant at the outrages and express a determination not only to protect white and black from further outrages, but to inflict summary justice on perpetrators. Judge Pattle, presiding judge, will charge the majesty of the law throughout his circuit.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 20.—No new cases reported. Judge John H. Adams died this morning at 9 o'clock. A light frost, precipitate only in marshy places beyond the city limits, fell last night.

The present quarantine rules will be rigidly enforced until an official announcement is made of the safety for absentees to return.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 20.—Three more cases were reported to the board of health at 12 m. Miss Mamie Tooley, Jos. Crisp and Annie Quegley. One additional death occurred. Jno. T. Davidson. J. D. Conway is reported in a dying condition.

On the recommendation of John Johnson, superintendent of quarantine, rule number six of the State board of health, prohibiting boats, but steel rollers from being brought into the city, has been rescinded. The thermometer ranged between forty-four and sixty-four. Weather cool and cloudy.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 20.—11 P. M.—R. E. Jones, Theodore Lyons, William Voss and Mrs. W. S. Wilie have died since eight o'clock to-night.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 20.—Mrs. Mary J. Wade died of fever this morning at Forest City, Arkansas. There are nine people now sick in that city.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 20.—Official returns of the election show that the vote on Chinese immigration was in favor, 154,638; against it, 883.

CAMP ON WHITE RIVER, THREE MILES NORTH OF THE AGENCY, COLORADO, Oct. 17, VIA REWARDS, Wyoming, Oct. 20.—This afternoon General Merritt's command, marched to this point, orders from Washington being to suspend operations against the Utes and to await orders, either at White or Bear river, as negotiations or peace are in progress, it being understood that the Utes have agreed to surrender the warriors engaged in the recent battle to us.

It is probable that the condemned commands of Merritt and Gilbert will remain for the present at the point, although the Utes know as to future movements. In the event of peace being established, it is also understood that a permanent military post will be constructed at Bear river for the agency.

FOREIGN.

LAREDO, Oct. 13.—Information from Monterey, Mexico, says the city of Chihuahua has been captured by the revolutionists, under Mucheruo. Gen. Trevino, with Federal forces, is en route to the seat of trouble.

BRUSSELS, Oct. 16.—The Journal de Liege reports that the Belgian bishops have given supplementary instructions to the clergy, not only to refuse absolution to teachers in the Communal schools, but also to pub icly refuse them sacraments. Not only are teachers excommunicated, but children receiving religious instruction from them are excluded from the first communion.

MADRID, Oct. 17.—Floods exceeded 120 inches in Andalusia, Malaga, Almeria and Murcia. Several villages are in ruins, railways and crops destroyed. Over a hundred lives were lost.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—A dispatch to the Standard from Cabul says Gen. Roberts, addressing the city, made a speech to the following effect: "It will be necessary to inflict severe punishment. Buildings of the Bala Hissar and of the city interfering with proper military occupation will have to be destroyed. A heavy fine will be levied on citizens. A military Governor will be placed over the city and the country within a radius of ten miles. All inhabitants under a jurisdiction will be required to surrender their arms within a week, on pain of death if failing to do so. Rewards will be paid for identification and conviction of any persons concerned in the massacre of the British Embassy.

HAVANA, Oct. 17.—The steamer City of New York which arrived here this morning from Vera Cruz, brings city of Mexico advices to the 5th inst. Senor Benitez has returned to the capital. There were great demonstrations upon his arrival.

The partisans of Senor Benitez are said to be numerous but they are active and noisy. The bitter animosities and Congress appear to be allayed by engagements in selecting candidates, saying able legitimate legislation. The public peace is unimpaired.

The Diario officially denies that Mexico is taking measures to renew relations with France.

Typhoid fever is raging in Guadalajara. Despite the fumigations have occurred in Tabasco, where the loss caused by the destruction of the corn and tobacco crops is estimated at a million of dollars.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—The Pope is about to dispatch special instructions to the Catholic bishops of Belgium in favor of conciliation.

SIMLA, Oct. 18.—The following details have been received of the attack on the camp at Ali Kheyl by the Afghans on the 14th inst. Four thousand Afghans made a desperate attack upon the British camp, but were repulsed at the point of the bayonet, leaving on the field forty killed and two hundred wounded, and two standards. The British loss was two killed and fourteen wounded. The latest intelligence is to the effect that the combined Ghilzai tribes are retreating.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—A party of French agriculturists, numbering seventy-nine men, women and children, have left Havre for Southampton, on their way to Texas under the auspices of the Texas Freehold, Farm and Emigration Union.

MADRID, Oct. 18.—Further inundations have occurred in the Provinces of Alicante, Malaga and Alicante. Several persons have been killed and much damage has been done to property. In the Malaga and Alicante districts thus far 2000 houses have been destroyed and it is believed 500 persons perished by the floods. Damage to property is estimated at 30,000,000 francs. Later telegrams from the Murcias states that 570 bodies have already been found. It is believed that over 1000 people have perished.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—The Daily Telegraph publishes the following from Ali Kheyl: The magazine of Bala Hissar has been blown up; twenty-seven of the British force and many Afghans were killed. Fighting has been renewed at Sirkai Kotal.

The position was held by ninety Sepoys against heavy odds. The enemy left twenty-five dead.

A dispatch from Ali Kheyl, dated the nineteenth, says: The cause of the explosion of the magazine of Bala Hissar is unknown. The first explosion occurred at half-past one this afternoon, the second at four. Further explosions are apprehended.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—A Berlin dispatch asserts that the Austro-German treaty of defensive alliance was signed by the emperors of Austria and Germany last week.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

ELKMONT, ALA., Oct. 1.—"A good meeting at Pleasant Grove. Results, thirty-seven conversions, twenty-three accessions." The church was blessed, and the whole community was awakened on the subject of religion, insomuch that, notwithstanding the meeting has been closed two weeks, the good work still goes on in the homes of the people. JOHN H. SHARPE.

DARDEVILLE, ALA., Oct. 9.—The saving power of the gospel is being felt and seen here. The clouds which have so long hung over our beloved church here are dispersed, and we is boldly coming to the front. All the collections will be paid. They have already been subscribed. Built two churches and repaired one this year. The preacher in charge and family have good health. Have had fifty accessions to the church.

JAMES W. TUCKER.

LAFAYETTE, ALA., Oct. 11.—Since I wrote last quite a number of protracted and two camp meetings have been held by the joinings of this district. Most of these meetings have been very good, indeed. Many have been added to the church, and still the blessed work goes on. Several new churches and one parsonage built this year. Several houses of worship repaired. Crops in the northern and western part of the district very good; southern corner not so good. Health good. Signs of returning prosperity in some parts of the country.

JOHN B. STEVENSON.

ELKMONT, ALA., Oct. 17.—We have seen the work of the Lord prosper this year. We have had nearly one hundred conversions, and many valuable accessions. The vital spiritual growth of the church is encouraging. Our prayer meetings are well attended. Class meetings are being revived.

JOHN B. SHARPE.

ST. MARTINSVILLE, ALA., Oct. 17.—We held a meeting at Sevier's Chapel, which resulted in nineteen accessions to the church. Held a few days at Eschezer; eleven conversions. Our fourth quarterly Conference was held at New Hope, October 4 and 5. J. B. Stevenson, P. E., was present, and administered the sacrament to over one hundred persons. On Sunday night there was a camp meeting time. Thirteen accessions to the church. We have received fifty here on trial. We have completed another church. Health good. Crops good. The Lord still blesses the people. T. H. MCMIN.

MISSISSIPPI.

WOODVILLE, MISS., Oct. 15.—Macedonia, Wilkinson circuit, Mississippi Conference, has had a gracious revival. Accessions, twenty-two; number of conversions, unknown. Some old members were greatly blessed, and some backsliders were reclaimed. Rev. J. P. Pr ke and Rev. W. W. Simmons came and helped us. Rev. P. S. Petty and Rev. H. Watts, local brethren, were also out in prayers and labors. Cotton and corn crops are short. THOS. W. BROWN.

BLACK HAWK, MISS., Oct. 15.—Our fourth quarterly Conference at Black Hawk was an occasion of considerable interest. Our presiding elder, the Rev. Kenneth A. Jones, preached several sound and seasonable sermons. The meeting resulted in a number of conversions, and eighteen accessions to the church. The ladies of this charge are collecting funds for a new parsonage. They will succeed. I believe all our collections will come up in full. JOSEPH S. OAKLEY.

MARSHALL CIRCUIT, MISS., Oct. 16.—We have had two months dry weather. Heavy rains to-day. Cotton crop half out; sample good; the remainder will be so so good. Revivals all over the district. Collections coming up well; will be in full from this circuit. This is a good farming country. Many wealthy, intelligent and liberal people are here. The Methodist Church is a power stronger than all the other churches.

J. W. HONNOLD, P. C.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., Oct. 17.—Our meeting at Franklin Chapel was excellent. A meeting of much power spiritually. Four were converted and joined the church, and five or six others were converted. We have had twenty-six accessions at this church, this year, up to date, and baptized twenty-three of their children. Many family altars there. The crops were injured greatly by the storm. Cotton is opening fast, and being gathered and put into market rapidly.

N. R. YOUNG.

PONTOTOC, MISS., Oct. 17.—The October rains are militating very much against the raising of the collections ordered by the Conference in this portion of the North Mississippi Conference. It is impossible to gather the crops, many of which are already seriously injured by the floods. Political excitement abating somewhat. Sunday-schools are falling, and going into their winter hivonac. Other church work is progressing finely. D. C. BROWNE.

WATER VALLEY, MISS., Oct. 17.—Wood Street Station, Water Valley, has enjoyed a two weeks' revival. Numerical results meager, but the church was considerably strengthened. Some backsliders were reclaimed. But for the political fever we would have had a glorious meeting. Bros. Ritchey, Young and Von Buren did the preaching. We are getting ready for the Annual Conference, which meets here December 3. I hope the brethren will come praying that we may have a glorious revival then. We expect the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Have a home for him already, J. M. BOON.

LOUISIANA.

NEW IBERIA, LA., Oct. 13.—Please acknowledge the receipt of $20, toward support of French mission, from the Woman's Missionary Society of St. Charles Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of New Orleans. Many thanks. I feel very gratified, and much encouraged that this small mission should be thought worthy of help from such a quarter. May Almighty God put it in the heart of others to "go and do likewise." WILLIAM J. PICOT, Missionary.

WATERPROOF, LA., Oct. 15.—God has been pouring out His Spirit upon us in answer to prayer and faith and exhortation. The result was, so far as manifest, seven or eight confessions of pardon, and eighteen of entire sanctification. This work was entirely inside the church, and we are now getting prepared to work for the Master. Bros. J. W. Chambers and T. S. Ruddle were servants meet for the Master's use. The meeting continued twelve days. E. ALLEN.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PERRY CIRCUIT, TENN., Oct. 13.—The Lord is graciously reviving His work of this place. Twenty-four or twenty-five have professed religion in the last eight days, eight joined the church, and still the work goes on gloriously. Hope for still larger results.

W. F. RICHARDSON, L. E.

Southwest Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As your paper circulates throughout the northern part of this State, Mississippi and Alabama, where many good people are toiling hard for a living on lands too exhausted to adequately remunerate their labor, permit me to tell them through your columns something of the advantages to be found here in southwest Louisiana, bounded north by the Red river, east by the Mississippi, south by the Gulf of Mexico, and west by the State of Texas.

TOPOGRAPHY.

Most of the lands in the northern and eastern parts of our country here are rich alluvial, lying along several rivers, and numerous bayous, mostly navigable, but seldom overflowing; and, now that the general government has taken the Father of Waters in hand, it is to be hoped that complete protection will soon be afforded at all times. The middle and southern portions are of a gently undulating prairie country, dotted by numerous high land ponds, and traversed by small water courses, which are skirted with narrow belts, and is heavily covered with waving grass, upon which numerous herds multiply and subsist all the year round, with little or no attention from their owners. While the western portion of our highly favored country is covered with large forests of magnificent pines, and other trees, which afford ample supplies of building materials, and is supplied with the streams of water, and annual crops of grass for stock also.

CLIMATE.

Being in close proximity to the Gulf, the soft, balmy, sea breezes from the south render our country here not only very pleasant, indeed, but extremely healthy also. The breezes blowing fresh from the sea are not only pure, but they so temper the heat of the sun, that our summers are far more pleasant than in more northern latitudes, while in the winter the same breezes off south seas are relatively warm and agreeable. As to health, there can be no question that this is the most salubrious climate in the United States (where so many other advantages also exist) for all except consumptives. That unfortunate class ought to avoid sea atmosphere, as chloroline in every form is poisonous to them, and seek mountain air. Those who live on the high lands have occasionally light attacks of malarious fever, but they yield readily to appropriate treatment. But our whole country here is remarkably exempt from typhoid fever. As to yellow fever, it has prevailed a few times, to more or less extent, in some places in our country. But I verily believe that if everybody, both people and doctors, could dismiss all idea of yellow fever entirely from their minds the probability is that disease would be one-fiftieth as great as it has been. Assume as the basis of alarm its sounded this people become panic stricken, give up in despair, and die in spite of everything; the doctors become discouraged, and throw away their heads; instead of holding on to their self-possession and proceeding upon the same general principles upon which they have so often relied confidently and successfully before in other diseases. No doubt fear kills far more than the disease. But now that the general government has taken hold of the other, which is the right end of the rope, it can, if it will, pull us all out of the mud and filth that is causing all of this panic and death. If all the money and the thought and the effort (and as much more as may be necessary) that is being wasted upon quarantines, which only interrupt travel and paralize commerce, and tend to bankrupt and ruin the country, be put in the Mississippi river and its tributaries, and adjacent swamps, etc., in the way of proper improvements, not only will millions of acres of rich alluvial lands be reclaimed, but our whole country will be rendered healthy, and yellow fever become so nigh that the people will loose their dread of it; and then it will be as amenable to treatment as other malarious diseases. Such is my honest opinion, formed upon some experience and studied observation, for I have treated the fever successfully, and had it myself, and my family also. And certainly what has occurred this year goes very far to corroborate my views. For, while the quarantine sentinels, out at their posts, were, Argus like, peering over the broad seas to descry his first approach, and were ready, armed with all the authority of the United States government, to fire across his bows, and forbid his invasion of this country, supposed to be outside of his pestiferous domains, he turned up Jack far away in the interior, and defiantly claimed his indigenous rights! If yellow fever ever was introduced from abroad it must have received a permanent foothold to have retained its vitality through such a winter as the last was. There can be no question that the fever originated in Memphis this year. For it is not known that there was any yellow fever last year in the house in which the first case occurred this year in that city. And the house in which the next case occurred was not occupied at all last year, and was too far distant from the other, with which there had been no communication to invoke infection in that instance. It would seem that Providence has interposed to demonstrate the futility of quarantining against the yellow fever. I am compelled to believe that the disease is produced by either telluric or atmospheric influences, or both combined, and that we had just as well submit like to protect ourselves by quarantine from ordinary bilious fever as from yellow fever. If yellow fever be an exotic germ, it preserves the germinating properties through the last winter in Memphis. And if it could stand such a winter as the last one was, it must be fully acclimated, naturalized, has become indigenous. Then why quarantine now? It cannot be pretended that the germs were not introduced from abroad into Memphis this year. It seems to me that it will be much wiser to withdraw all our attention from without and direct it within, for I believe our health and prosperity depends upon the general government controlling

A WINTER SKY.

BY AUGUSTA LARNER.

Pale Twilight beams from out her crystal tower,
And seems to smile upon the parting day;
Some trembling beams still trick her windowed bower,
But fast they fade before the encroaching gray.

Blue and weak red within the east are met,
Faint as the dyes that stain a sea shell's whirl,
And low the slender crescent moon is set,
Carved perfect from a single flawless pearl.

But all the west is clear as limpid lakes,
Spaced for the eye like unrelating air;
No flush of sunset through the pallor breaks,
But naught with that clear pallor can compare.

And thrown against the imaged form of peace,
Those depths of ether, lucent as a gem,
The winds have to and a widely ragged fleece,
Torn all along the strange fantastic hem.

Its fringes stream like some gray monarch's hair,
Or Merlin's beard blown o'er his mighty breast,
Contending with the forces of the air,
With his magician's wand and wizard's vest.

And peering through those shaggy locks and wild
Some little stars look out with glad surprise,
Like Orpheus, who turned and sweetly smiled
Or like the youngest angel's lucid eyes.

And still the Twilight seems to lean and wait;
Her asphodels are faint and faded now,
And Night, with sable plume and queenly state,
Stoops low to kiss her gentle sister's brow.

Alas! for with that kiss she's en must die,
Breathing the odor of Night's poppy flower;
And Nature seems to gently heave a sigh
As falls the beam in Twilight's windowed bower.

For though clouds shimmer on to-morrow's eve,
And nameless beauty hovers o'er her train,
Twilight shall ne'er such rare enchantment weave,
This perfect moment ne'er shall live again.

—Evening Post.

A Model Farm.

MR. EDITOR: On the banks of the Tennessee river, in the midst of the most picturesque scenery, is the "Island Home Farm," owned by Mr. Percy Dickinson, of Knoxville, Tenn. This farm is certainly one of the loveliest spots in the United States, and is a beautiful illustration of the combined results of scientific agriculture and great artistic skill. It is situated about two miles from Knoxville, on the opposite side of the river from the town, covering an area of about five hundred acres, two hundred of which form a beautiful island, washed by the clear waters of the Big Tennessee.

Only four short years ago this place was a wild, broken region, overrun by briars and tangled brush growth, desolate and uninviting, but, beneath the magical touch of a wise and skillful hand, this wilderness has "blossomed as the rose," and now is the garden spot of Tennessee. We had heard of Mr. Dickinson's great hospitality and kindness to strangers, and on a certain bright morning we had the pleasure of experiencing it, when he came for us in a handsome jersey, drawn by a spirited pair of bays, and gave us a delightful ride, showing the various points of interest, and natural beauties of his place.

Crossing the river by ferry, we drove over a pleasant woodland road, which came suddenly upon one of the handsomest rustic bridges ever seen, light and graceful, painted white, with touches of crimson, and presently entered a long, avenue lined with promising young trees. Passing through a stately gateway, over which two large gilded eagles keep watch with hovering wings, we entered the grounds around the dwelling house. Upon the summit of a high elevation stands this large and handsome residence, around which wind most graceful, finely-graveled walks and drives, leading among beds of every variety of flowers, all placed with rare skill, so that, while each plant is seen to its own best advantage, it displays by graceful mingling, or brilliant contrast, the beauties of its neighbors also.

The lawn is a velvet carpet of blue grass sloping down the hillside on the front, with here and there a circle cut out and set with brilliant flowers, producing the effect of a bright gem cast upon the bosom of the green-sward by the artist's lavish hand.

In the rear of the house are long rows of bee hives; and what a feast the "little busy bee" must have among those flower-plants! What an inspiration they must draw, to "improve each shining hour!"

The stables of the model farm are an example to the surrounding country, and, indeed, to farmers everywhere. They are capacious, built with regard to comfort and convenience, and beautifully painted in white and red. Around them stand tall, shapely hay ricks, put up in English style, beneath which great numbers of white rabbits spend lives of placid enjoyment, watched over by Scottish shepherd dogs, whose faithful eyes never allow their charge to cross the broad walk which marks the boundary of their proper place of abode.

Opening a door, Mr. Dickinson bade us enter, and "take a look at his pet," a monster bull, of short-horn breed, two years old, and weighing two thousand pounds. He is of a rich, dark color, his hide shining like brown satin, for he is treated with the greatest attention, and has his toilette performed regularly every day, groomed, brushed like a prince; and a prince he is, among his brethren, for he is of the celebrated stock of the Fourth Duke of Geneva, of Campbell's sales, New York.

We witnessed the weighing of several fine oxen, one weighing 1,570, and another 1,410 pounds.

Next we entered the engine-room, where the farm machinery is kept, for no hand-work is done. An immense steam engine is connected by rubber bands, with whatever machine is used, from the giant thresher, which winnows eight hundred bushels of wheat in a day, pouring out the golden grain on one side, and tossing off the chaff on the other, to the small but complete mill for grinding up the stock feed. By the side of this mill we lingered some time, admiring the neat, economical and careful manner in which wholesome food is rapidly prepared for the stock. Grain—corn, peas, etc.—are ground, and hay chopped up, so that the quantity of feed required is reduced to fully one-half as much as would be necessary without the use of the mill.

Every utensil, wagon and plow is numbered and marked "Island Home." The most beautiful order and perfect system prevails. Nothing is forgotten, nothing out of place, but "there is a place for everything, and everything is in its place."

From the engine-room we went to the pig sty, where huge specimens of Berkshire pigs stuck their friendly noses through the fence, and grunted a welcome. These creatures are just six months old, but are larger than the largest hogs your correspondent has ever seen, and we have seen a good many. In a distant lot we saw the Poland Chinas—odd looking, but handsome creatures—for pigs.

Attracted by a tinkling bell, we looked over a small inclosure, and saw the living impersonations of Moore's famous "dear gazelle," in the shape of two tame fawns, with little silver bells round their necks; but these are enjoying a happier fate.

Near by we saw a fine growth of mammoth pumpkins. Really, Mr. Editor, I am afraid to tell their proportions, lest you think it "only romancing!" We thought of Jonah's gourd, and began to understand how he could sit under the shade of it, and were fain to tell our host that, for once in our lives, what we saw was, indeed, "some pumpkins!"

Eastward of the stables and barnfiles the Island Home park, broad and beautiful, full of stately trees spreading reposeful shadows over a sloping hillside, through which the road, smooth and even as a floor, winds upward till a fine view of the Cumberland Mountains bursts upon our eyes. Oh, the beauty of that picture!

"A glistening veil of purple haze
On nearer mountains softly lies,
The distance swims in liquid light,
Where blue peaks shine, height on height,
Dissolve, like dreams in fainting skies."

Descending this hillside park by a different road, we began the ascent of another, through dark, leafy, wooded recesses, to the summit of the Island Home Lookout, where, from a still higher elevation, we had a lovely view of the Smoky and Chilhowie ranges, lifting up their royal heads on one side, and the great green cone of House Mountain on the other, while far below shone the winding waters of the river, encircling the harvest fields of the Island farm.

We crossed by a ford to the Island, and saw spread before us a vast field of turnips, the common kind, and ruta baga, in the height of successful cultivation, fenced in by an osage hedge trained on a trellis. A beautiful example to all farmers is this hedge—the wild, unmanageable osage tamed in perfect obedience by a master-hand, and, from being a dreaded bramble, trained into a "thing of beauty."

One thing especially to be noticed about the Island Home farm are the neatly-kept fences, white as snow, running in showy lines across fields and meadows, and the airy little bridges which span every brooklet and uneven hollow, all exhibiting great neatness and perfection of finish. On the banks of the Island there is a giant sycamore tree, worthy of California, the base of its trunk measuring twenty-two feet. It divides itself into three huge limbs, or rather trees, the largest of which measures nine feet in circumference.

Returning from the Island, we recrossed the ford, and finally rested in the cool halls of this beautiful country-seat, from whence magnificent views of Knoxville, the river, and surrounding country, with the mountains rising up behind all in an imposing back ground, lay spread out before us.

There, as a souvenir of that most delightful morning, we left the names of our party, and, Mr. Editor, the pleasantest wish I can make you, is that there it may some time be your good fortune to place yours, after as charming a summer day's visit to this Island Home, the garden spot of Tennessee.

KNOXVILLE, Sept. 25, 1879. PERDITA.

East Mississippi Female College.

MR. EDITOR: The opening of the present scholastic year is highly gratifying to the friends of the school, and gives promise of enlarged usefulness and success.

The examinations and exercises of the last commencement were all that the Visiting Committee, and, we believe, the public could expect.

The great care bestowed upon the moral, mental and physical development of the students, was manifest in their deportment, recitations and healthful appearance.

The school is steadily advancing in popular favor, and is destined to be a power for good in the training and education of the young ladies of East Mississippi.

As chairman of the Examining Committee, I desire to express to the Mississippi Conference, to which it belongs, and to the public, the entire and hearty approval of the whole committee, of the thoroughness of the instruction imparted and manifest success which has crowned the faithful labors of the faculty.

We hereby recommend the institution to our friends, and to the church at large, as well deserving their support, and Meridian as one of the healthiest and most accessible cities in the South.

JOSHUA T. HEARD,
Chairman of Committee.

ENTERPRISE, Miss., Oct. 1, 1879.

Note from Rev. J. B. K. Smith.

MR. EDITOR: I want to say, through your columns, to all my friends in Mississippi and Louisiana, that I am not lost. I still live, after having made the tour of four States, resting, according to Bishop Keener's order, for at least three months of the time, since the middle of June, at the rate of about two sermons a day, singing pretty much after the manner of Crystal Springs and Seashore. I am, at last, still for a time in Richmond county, Ga. My health has improved very much. I only weigh two hundred and ten pounds, and am in fine spirits, with a good appetite. I would be glad to meet my brethren in Mississippi and Louisiana, but can never hope to have that pleasure again unless they come eastward. I can't live in the climate of Mississippi, and can in Georgia, hence I stay here. My family are well, and send much love to all our friends. Farewell, and may God bless you.

Your brother in Christ,

J. B. K. SMITH.

From the Work.

COPENHAGEN, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: A meeting held at Montgomery, La., was commenced by the pastor on Saturday, the thirteenth, and closed on Friday night, the nineteenth, assisted by Rev. T. J. Hough, of Natchitoches. I have been informed that this is the first revival in Montgomery since 1873. Congregations large and attentive. Merchants, Jews and Gentiles, though in the busy season, closed their stores, and took part in the services, bringing their customers with them. Wagoners and passers-by stopped and attended. The farmers with their families in the surrounding country were regular in attendance. A profound religious impression seemed to pervade the community. The altar was crowded with penitents at every service, and a large number back in the congregation knelt for prayer. Result: Eighteen conversions and thirteen accessions, and a bright prospect for future good. A meeting of such power only occurs a few times in life. Truly yours,

C. K. GODFREY.

CHINA GROVE CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: The twelfth session of the camp meeting at China Grove, Dale county, Ala., began Friday evening, October 3, and closed Wednesday morning following. The ground has been improved, by the erection of five new plank tents, and the repair of several older ones. Now there are fifty five plank tents, besides scores of cloth and wagon tents. All were filled. The concourse of people immense. People were in attendance from places distant embracing a diameter of one hundred and thirty-five miles—did not come on the cars. Twenty-three preachers of the gospel were in attendance, seventeen itinerant and six local. Of these, three are presiding elders, and three ex-presiding elders in the Alabama Conference, and one the Sunday-school agent of the Conference. The preaching was the pure, unvarnished word of God, good to the use of edifying. Scores of sinners were convicted, and twenty-five or thirty converted, and sixteen persons joined the church. Of these, one is the half brother of one of the D. D.'s, and another the brother in law of a D. D. of the Alabama Conference. The first, with his entire family, joined; the second came to us from the Missionary Baptist.

The most touching and delightful spiritual feast was Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock. At the close of the sermon, and after several prayers had been offered for mourners, the Rev. Zaccheus Dowling, now in his eighty-eighth year, came forward into the altar, and delivered, as he believed, his farewell address, giving full assurance of his readiness for heaven. He closed by expressing a desire to shake hands with all his relatives and friends. Then the scene became the grandest that the writer ever beheld. Aged fathers and mothers, middle aged men and women, young men and maidens, boys and girls, preachers and people, pressing around and giving the veteran cross-bearer the hand of fellowship and love, and also of blessing. The gospel blessing came in such fullness and power that many strong men were overcome, and many glad and triumphant shouts sent thrills of joy to all around.

A part of the time the weather was rainy and windy. On Monday night the wind rent the cloth covering of the arbor. The tenters on Tuesday morning resolved to build a board-covered arbor, and forthwith proceeded to make up the money. So next year, God willing, the people will meet at China Grove on Friday before the first Sunday in October, to hold the meeting under the new and substantial board-covered arbor.

OCTOBER 11, 1879. AGUS DOWLING.

HINESTON, RAPIDES PARISH, LOUISIANA

MR. EDITOR: I am a subscriber to, and, as a matter of course, feel an interest in the circulation of your excellent paper; and not having seen anything published therein from this part of the country, I thought I would write you a short letter. We have an exceedingly healthy country, a salubrious climate with short winters, while nearly all the time in summer we have a cool breeze. Our lands produce corn, cotton, oats, and in fact nearly everything that is grown. We have excellent freestone water, and some mineral that is very healthy. Houses of public worship are in tolerable condition. Our pastor, Silas H. Cooper, has just closed a meeting at our church (Big Hammock, Spring Creek circuit.) We had truly a time of refreshing from the Lord. There were four conversions and four accessions. Among the conversions was one, the head of a family. It was very affecting to see the father at the altar kneeling. We have a membership of thirty-three—eighteen males and fifteen females. The CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is a welcome visitor, indeed, and is accomplishing a good work in this part of the moral vineyard. We cannot do without it. May its pages long go to the homes that dot our land. Success to you and all your correspondents who are endeavoring to impart useful knowledge to the Methodist's cause.

Yours respectfully,

CRAWFORD M. CARRUTH.

FIELD NOTES.

LOUISIANA.

SUGAR TOWN, LA., Sept. 29.—Our revival goes on without any apparent wane. At all the appointments the Holy Ghost is present in sanctifying power. The cry for help comes up from other neighborhoods that I have not been able to reach. Closed a meeting yesterday in the French settlement. Four accessions. The stewards are abreast with finances, and the Conference claim will be paid in full. One hundred and sixty-six accessions to date.

J. W. BEARS.

ALLAWARA, LA., Oct. 7.—I closed a meeting of a week's duration at Pecan Grove last Friday night, which has resulted in great good. Eleven persons applied for membership in the church, and I suppose about as many conversions. Several family altars have been erected, and almost all the membership have recommitted themselves to the Lord. We have had about fifty applications for church-membership this year. Some have not been received yet. I think Lake Providence and Pecan Grove circuit may be said to be in a good condition, spiritually and financially.

R. A. WHITE.

COUSHATTA, LA., Oct. 9.—Our camp meeting at Davis' Spring camp ground, on Springville circuit, closed on the seventh instant, resulting in a glorious revival in the church. Ten backsliders professed to be reclaimed; twenty-four conversions of sinners; twenty-three accessions to the church; seven adults and five children baptized. We raised about $20 for Conference collections. We have received up to this time forty into full connection, and have a number of candidates for membership. Health good; cotton good; corn about half crop; river fordable at this place.

W. D. STATTEN.

FRANKLIN, LA., Oct. 11.—The storm blew away everything of our church property here, except the church and main parsonage house. We have rebuilt dining room, kitchen, out-houses and fences. All nearly paid for. We will fall very far short in our collections, I fear. Yellow fever is prevailing five miles distant, alarmingly. If the Annual Conference must be held so soon, tell the brethren in other districts they must double their efforts for Conference claimants and missions. If we could close the year with January, we might bring up all. Congregations large.

B. F. WHITE.

MISSISSIPPI.

EAST PASCAGOULA, MISS., Oct. 7. The fifty-first session of the Salem camp meeting, East Pascagoula circuit, was held October 2-6. The congregation was unusually large and well behaved. There were thirteen conversions, two accessions and six infants baptized. It was a time of refreshment from the presence of the Lord. Bros. Ellis, Downer, Thompson, Goff, J. S. Calhoun, E. and R. Roberts, and Luther, were present and labored in the meeting. Salem is the oldest camp ground in this country.

C. W. CALHOUN.

STARKVILLE, MISS., Oct. 9.—The Conference year is nearly closed. Religiously, the year has been prosperous. Seventy-eight received into the church, forty-two of them by baptism. A new parsonage nearly ready for occupancy. We need a new church. Salary of preacher a little over half paid. Collections ordered by the Conference will all be full. Crops moderate. Health of the country tolerably good. Work is well advanced on the A. and M. College.

J. W. LOWRANCE.

WAYNESBORO, MISS., Oct. 13.—Our Circuit Court was held last week. Judge Ham magnifies his office. Is "a terior to evil doers." His charge to the grand jury, his exposition, enforcement of law in the punishment of crime of every grade, made a profound and salutary impression upon the public mind here, in favor of law and order. Government was made to assume and exhibit its greatest majesty and highest authority in demanding blood for blood, and life for life, in the sentence of death, by hanging, on the seventh of December, Francis M. Allen, who was tried as Francis Walton, for murder. A few more strokes like these upon the head of crime, and its dominion will be broken, and its minions seek refuge in more congenial surroundings, the body social, be more healthful, and law and order flow back upon us. Such officers are invaluable to public weal.

WM. B. HINES.

CORINTH, MISS., Oct. 13.—Crops at a fair average. Health of country also good. If old debts were out of the way, our people would soon be on the highway to prosperity. Revival influences have prevailed in all the country around Corinth. In town two successful meetings have been held—the last at the Methodist Church, resulting in nine conversions. Have received fifteen persons on profession of faith, and as many by letter this year. Have passed a pleasant year, and am now preparing for Conference. Collections will be nearly full. Come doctor, to our Conference at Water Valley.

JOHN MERCROFT.

ENTERPRISE, MISS., Oct. 13.—On the evening of the twenty-fifth of September, at Quitman, we buried, at the same hour, the mortal remains of Mrs. Rebecca Brasler, wife of Rev. P. Brazier, and her granddaughter, Mrs. Rebecca Cherry. The burial service of our church, always solemn, was rendered, more so on this occasion, from the fact that it took place after nightfall. An obituary will be forwarded.

JOSHUA T. HEARD.

ALABAMA.

HENRYVILLE, ALA., Oct. 7.—I have recently closed my best protracted meeting for the year. We had ten conversions, the membership was greatly revived, six added to the church, and prospects that others will join. The Holy Spirit was poured out on all Christians. Our presiding elder, Rev. M. L. Wilkes, was with us, and rendered valuable service at the meeting.

R. F. WINSTON, P. C.

MOUNT STERLING ALA., Oct. 9.—I have just closed a three days' meeting in Butler, Choctaw county, Ala. Eleven accessions to the church, mostly young men and young ladies. Have held two other meetings recently, and received several into the church. Health of the country very good. Crops are short, consequently finances will be depressed.

W. B. WILD.

RUTLEDGE, ALA., Oct. 13.—The camp meeting at the Rutledge camp ground closed on the thirtieth of September with about forty conversions and twenty-three accessions to the church. The membership was greatly revived and encouraged. This was our first camp meeting in this section, and we predict for it, under the blessings of God, a bright and glorious future. Our arbor is elegant, and would do credit to any community. We expect a large increase in tenters next year.

W. D. OWENS.

MISCELLANEOUS

POWELTON, FLA., Oct. 15.—My work, under God's blessings, is doing well. Recently we have had some gracious meetings on the Powelton circuit, Alabama Conference, and, as far as I can see, I am inclined to think our final exhibit will show a considerable gain in accessions and conversions. About eighty per cent. of Conference collections up. We will overrun. Don't know about preacher in charge and presiding elders' expenses.

W. F. DICKINSON.

Obituaries.

DANIEL HUMPHRESS, SR., was born August 4 1801, near Wilmington, N. C. When quite young his parents moved to the State of Georgia, where they remained about three years, after which they removed to Catahoula parish, La. Here he remained until after his first marriage, which took place in 1820, after which he removed to the parish of Ouachita, and lived near where the town of Columbia stands, in 1823. In 1829 he settled a place about three miles west of the Ouachita river. In 1830 he attended a camp meeting, and was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In the year 1835 he removed to Catahoula parish and purchased a home, where he lived until after the death of his first wife, which occurred in the year 1844. He was married a second time in 1847. His second wife lived but a short time, after whose death he returned to Caldwell parish. In the year 1849 he was again married. After the death of his last wife, and marriage of his younger daughters, he lived with his children and grandchildren until his death, which took place at the residence of his nephew in Caldwell parish, August 16, 1879, aged seventy-eight years.

In the early days of Bro Humphress this part of Louisiana was sparsely settled, and almost entirely destitute of schools and churches. Owing to this he had very poor advantages, and, of course, his education was quite limited.

The writer of this became acquainted with him early in the year 1840, and at that time he was a prominent member of the church. He was always quite active as a member of the church, rarely without official position, sometimes steward, sometimes class leader. His was a long life of usefulness in the church. He was always ready to work for the church, and willing to render any aid to the preachers in their work that he was capable of doing.

Bro. Humphress' piety was steady exhibiting itself more in diligence in working for the church than in profession of devotion. In the last hours of Bro. Humphress he was calm, and exhibited the strongest confidence in his Redeemer, and when questioned by friends as to the state of his mind and his preparation for death, he gave the strong assurance of his readiness to meet his Saviour. Thus has passed from us one whose place in the church it will be difficult to fill.

E. W. YANCEY.

MARY ELLEN, wife of Rev. S. H. Nettles, of the Alabama Conference, was born in Monroe county, Ala., February 23, 1850, and died in Elmore county, Ala., August 19, 1879, after an illness of but three days. She was taken sick on Sunday with cholera-morbus. It was followed by congestion of the heart, which caused her death on Tuesday.

She professed religion and joined the church last year, under the ministry of Rev. J. S. Peavy, of our Conference, and from that time to her death she truly "adorned the doctrines of God our Saviour in all things." And, although she had been a member of the church but a short time, and was passing through her first year in the ministry, she gave evidence that she possessed, in an eminent degree, those qualities necessary in the wife of a minister of the gospel. She was industrious, economical, quiet, patient, sensible and pious. I have been at the house of Bro. Nettles several times in the last two years, and have been forcibly struck with the quiet, pleasant demeanor of his wife. If she could have lived, she certainly would have greatly strengthened the hands of her husband in his work of preaching the gospel. She would have done him good and not evil all the days of his life. But God, in His mysterious providence, has seen proper to take her to Himself, and leave the husband to pursue his path of duty in loneliness and sadness. She leaves to her husband's care three little boys. She was conscious to the last. Just before she died she said to her weeping husband: "I will soon be at home," and passed away without a struggle. May the Lord sustain our afflicted brother.

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

TRIBUTE of respect by Providence Sabbath-school, Copiah county, Miss.:

The committee appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the feelings of the Providence Sabbath-school, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, relative to the death of Mr. IRA STRICKLAND, superintendent, submit the following, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased God, in His infinite wisdom, to remove from our midst our much beloved superintendent, and desiring to record the deep sense of our bereavement, and our admiration of one possessing so many virtues; therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. IRA STRICKLAND our Sabbath-school has lost a good and faithful superintendent, the church one of its most active and useful members, and the community a citizen of purity and integrity.

Resolved, That we cherish the memory of our beloved brother and strive to emulate his Christian virtues, and follow his example until our work is ended, and leave him sweetly rest with his sainted spirit on our Savior's breast.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, and that we join in prayers that each member may meet him in the home in the palace of God.

R. F. CRAWFORD, For Committee.

TRIBUTE of respect to the memory of LORENA SANFORD, a member of the Sunday-school at Greenville, Ala.:

Whereas, Our heavenly Father has seen fit, in His unerring providence, to remove, by death, from our midst Lorena Sanford, our beloved companion, taking the gentle child from earth, adding another gem to the glorious diadem of heaven; therefore be it

Resolved, That while we would bow in humble submission to the will of Almighty God in our effliction, in the Sunday-school her widowed mother and family have sustained a great loss, yet we feel that the child we loved is only taken to a happy rest in heaven.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, trusting that God will take special care of the widow and the orphans in this their sad affliction.

C. C. D. GODFREY, For Committee.

MARION D. MAHONE died, at his residence near Nidsaulga, Ala., July 22, 1879, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. Bro Mahone was a man of decided character and extensive influence in the close of the disease that caused his death. He was always prompt to throw the weight of his character and influence upon the side of morals and Christianity. He was one of a very large and respectable family that emigrated from Georgia and settled in various parts of Alabama. He was a true Methodist of Georgia Methodism.

I knew his aged mother, who sat under the ministry of Dr. Pierce when a youth, and, I believe, joined the church under his ministry. She was the most aged and consecrated Christian lady I think, I was ever my privilege to know. At Bro. Mahone's funeral I preached to her great grandchildren, who exhibit in their characters the impress of three generations. One of these great-grandchildren received into the church recently. May this large family be undivided in heaven.

TRIBUTE of respect to the memory of LORENA SANFORD, a member of the Sunday-school at Greenville, Ala.:

Whereas, Our heavenly Father has seen fit, in His unerring providence, to remove, by death, from our midst Lorena Sanford, our beloved companion, taking the gentle child from earth, adding another gem to the glorious diadem of heaven; therefore be it

Resolved, That while we would bow in humble submission to the will of Almighty God in our affliction, in the Sunday-school her widowed mother and family have sustained a great loss, yet we feel that the child we loved is only taken to a happy rest in heaven.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, trusting that God will take special care of the widow and the orphans in this their sad affliction.

MARION D. MAHONE died, at his residence near Nidsaulga, Ala., July 22, 1879, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. ANNIE PEART, infant daughter of J. G. M. and M. A. Luther, was born March 13, 1879, and died of congestion, at Luther's Store, Ala., October 7, 1879, aged six months and twenty-four days.

Jesus said: "Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." She has come to Him, there to await the coming of parents, sisters and brothers.

ARIELLA SINRETTA MCFARLANE, daughter of W. M. and M. E. McFarland, was born January 24, 1873, and died September 14, 1879. Her suffering was great, but of short duration. She was a kind, obedient and loving child. She was too pure for earth, and has gone to meet her sweet little brother and sister, who preceded her to the better land.

ON THE SHORE.

BY SUSAN COOLIDGE.

The punctual tide draws up the bay,
With ripple of wave and kiss of spray;
And the great red flower of the light-house tower
Blooms on the headland far away.

Petal by petal its fiery rose
Out of the darkness buds and grows;
A dazzling shape on the dim, far cape;
A beckoning shape as it comes and goes.

A moment of bloom, and then it dies
On the windy cape twixt the sea and skies.
The lug lan'cha low to see it go,
And the white waves watch it with cruel eyes.

Then suddenly out of the mist-cloud dun,
As touched and wooed by unseen sun,
Again into sight bursts the rose of light,
And opens its petals one by one.

Ah, the storm may be wild and the sea be strong,
And man is weak and the darkness long,
But while blossoms the flower on the light-house tower,
There still is place for a smile and a song.

Star-Gazing in Missouri.

BY BISHOP W. M. WIGHTMAN.

Having heard that there is in Glasgow, Mo., an astronomical observatory with very fine instruments in it, and under the charge of the Rev. Carr W. Pritchett, I accepted the kind invitation of my good friend, Bro. J. S. Thompson, to take a seat in Mrs. Thompson's carriage, and spend a few days with them at Glasgow. We drove the distance in a couple of hours. Glasgow is a town of some 3,000 inhabitants, located on the east bank of the Missouri river, which here is spanned by a steel bridge, the crossing-place of the C. and A. railroad. The town contains many elegant residences Bro. Thompson's being one of the largest, and built with all the conveniences of the present style of architecture. Here I have found the pleasantest quarters for a few days Prof. Pritchett took me the day after my arrival to the observatory, which stands on an elevation near the town. This building was erected after the war (skilful judges think that it is not excelled in America for arrangement and adaptation to scientific uses. The entire dome is a duplicate of Harvard College Observatory, and is twenty-four feet in diameter. I was first shown the Meridian circle, which has an objective of six inches aperture, with circles twenty four inches read by eight micrometers. I was much interested in the movements of the Sidereal Break Circuit Chronometer, and the Electro Magnetic Cronograph which, registers permanently every beat of the Chronometer, and also the instant of every observation made at the various Instruments. The telescope, the third in size of any in the United States, has a focal length of seventeen feet, and an object glass twelve and a half inches in diameter. This glass, alone cost $3,000 in gold in London; the cost of the entire instrument being $8,000. It has a range of powers from 50 to 1,200. It reveals the companion-star of Sirius, and has resolved many of the nebulæ.

The entire cost of the observatory and its scientific furniture was $25,000—the munificent gift of a young lady not yet twenty-three years of age. We have been thinking and saying, in South Carolina, that the legacy of the late Rev. Benj. Wofford, of $100,000, to found and endow Wofford College, was the largest contribution made by any Southern gentleman to the cause of Christian education. Here is a young lady—really very young—who, for the love of learning, has contributed $25,000 to astronomical science, and, in addition, $75,000 to endow Pritchett Institute—an admirably conducted school of High grade, located at Glasgow, for both sexes. One hundred thousand dollars! At the age of twenty one she signed the necessary papers, and the gift was complete. And this marvellous instance of Christian liberality occurred 150 miles west of the Mississippi river. The simple statement of such a fact exhausts the possibility of further encomium. I need hardly add that Miss Berenice Morrison is the heiress of a large fortune. She is also, what is better, a simple-hearted, decided member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

After spending a couple of hours in the observatory, listening to the explanations of the learned professor, the desire became irresistible to spend a few night hours in the dome, and see for the first time some of the nebulæ and double stars and other wonders of the heavens. The atmospheric conditions did not allow this for two nights. On Wednesday night, however, we had a clear sky and an excellent opportunity. Bro. Thompson and I accompanied the astronomer to the observatory, and remained until a little after midnight. I copy from my memorandum book the entries made on the spot:

1. We begin with Arcturus; too low in the west and somewhat disturbed by atmospheric undulations to be seen to the best advantage. It shines with a yellowish luster, but from its position in reference to the horizon it has too much coruscating sparkle about it.

2. The double star, Alpha, in the constellation of Hercules, is the next. To the naked eye it is a single star of the second magnitude. It now appears in the object-glass of the instrument to be two stars—the first binary star-system I have ever seen. The primary of these two stars is larger than the secondary. They doubtless revolve around each other, but to determine the rate of the movement will require observations and calculations covering long periods of time. The desire of years is now gratified. I have seen a double star.

3. The famous Nebula, in Hercules, is now in the field of the telescope. At last I have seen this Nebula resolved. It looks like a countless multitude of diamond points on the black velvet of the night sky. How they glitter in amazing beauty! The light grows denser at the center of the Nebula. Can it be possible I have just looked at one of God's universes, compared with which our solar system is the merest speck? I could gaze upon the unveiled beauty of it all night. It is a grand cluster of stars innumerable, but each separate and distinct. This Nebula is, perhaps, the most magnificent in the northern hemisphere, though the professor says there are several in the southern sky grander.

4. Now we have had a very fine view of the moon, just passed into its third quarter. On the dark part of the disk are specks of light here and there, looking like small stars—in reality mountain peaks touched by the sun, while all around is darkness. The surface of the moon appears to be excoriated—a vast mass of lava beds. A mountain peak of light in the center of a circular lava bed shows that a second eruption must have taken place. The professor points out a short black line which he pronounces a crack in a patch of smooth surface, which he has measured, its breadth about the fourth of a mile, and its length some three hundred miles. It seemed to run in a straight line. It was formed by some great convulsion on the moon's surface. We have looked for a long time at the moon, and now the instrument is turning.

5. Jupiter comes into the field of vision. There are its belts very distinct. To my eye the planet appears the size of a silver five cents piece, though my astronomic friend says it seems, to his eye, nearly as large as the moon. The four satellites are all visible. They differ in magnitudes, some of them as large as our moon; others smaller. This monarch planet revolves on its axis in nearly ten hours. At what a pace it must whirl! It takes twelve years to make its run around the sun. A practiced eye can see the flattening at the poles.

6. I have just looked at Saturn. How unspeakably grand its appearance through this telescope! The planet, with its far-reaching rings, appears in a pure white light. Five of its eight satellites are visible now. The difference between the equatorial and polar diameters is plain to the eye, the former being about 79,000 miles. The rings separated from each other by a slender dark line reach, along the major axis, a distance of some 180,000 miles. They make by far the largest single object we have looked upon to-night. Words cannot convey any adequate idea of the impression of grandeur the sight leaves upon the memory forever. This instrument shows the separating line discovered by Prof. Bond, between the second and third of the rings.

7. Mars next; view least satisfactory. It has risen above the horizon since we have been in the dome, and the atmosphere, in its present position, is somewhat hazy. Still, a close inspection gives the view of a continent in dim outline, and a spot of snowy white at the south pole, which Prof. Pritchett says indicates polar ice. With this instrument he has seen distinctly the two satellites discovered a year or two ago.

8. We have now looked at the Pleiades, known popularly as the seven stars, though only six are visible to the naked eye. In reality the constellation is an immense cluster of stars. I have long wanted to see Alcyone, the brightest, which has been supposed to be the point to which all the movements of the heavenly bodies were tending. The master of this observatory smiles when I mention this hypothesis. That smile means a good deal on his face.

9. "I will show you now," said he, as the instrument was moving, "what might poetically be called the Coronet on the brow of Night;" and the instrument stopped on one of the two clusters in the sword of Perseus, invisible to the unaided eye. The first glimpse called out an involuntary exclamation of wonder and rapture at the glittering spectacle. It is a shining array of worlds, where God's eternal beauty seems to unveil itself to mortal vision. I don't wonder at the gleam of enthusiasm which shone out for a moment amidst all the calm self-possession of the astronomer, who had pushed his measurements amidst the heavenly bodies to the hundredth part of a second. To me the brief sight of this cluster will leave a life-long vision of the possibilities of the Beautiful.

10. The last subject we look at, just at midnight, is first pointed out through the aperture in the dome—a dim star of the fifth magnitude—directly above Alpha, in Lyra. A look through the telescope reveals the wonderful reality: that dim single star is now seen to be two pairs of stars, separated, each pair from the other, about 1°43'. Each pair is composed of two stars, probably revolving around one another, double stars, with star dust thrown in between; the whole appearing, as aforesaid, as a single star, known to astronomers as Epsilon Lyræ—the quadruple star. Thus ends this memorable night scene. I thank Prof. Pritchett, for the exquisite pleasure, I have enjoyed; and how cordially do I thank Miss Morrison, and pray for her long life and the ever growing joy of knowing that she has conferred upon her generation a boon as splendid and precious as this.

Here ends the memoranda of the note-book. I will add the expression of my grateful thanks to my good friend, Thompson, whose kindness allowed me to return, past midnight, without disturbing the family.

I write this with the serene azure of a cloudless autumnal day visible from the library window. The daylight hides the constellations that glitter in the far-off heaven. Yet science tells me they are there, and can point to their places; and so I cannot now see the things that are eternal—God, the Judge of all, Christ, the Mediator, the innumerable company of angels, the spirits of the just made perfect, and the ineffable glory of the Eternal City, whose builder is God—I cannot see them, except through Faith's broad glass. In that they glisten with immortal radiance, as do the heavenly bodies I saw last night through another glass. O night of death! which removes all veils, and opens the direct vision of the Supreme Beauty and the Eternal Good.

Religious Intelligence.

—The people of New South Wales are in a ferment over the questions about the schools and religious instruction. It is the same old issue. The Roman Catholics want all they can get. The law authorizes ministers of the several denominations to give religious instruction at certain hours to children of their own denomination whose parents give a written consent to it. Roman Catholic priests under color of this provision got the consent of Protestant parents to the religious instruction of their children by them, and were training the children in the way to Rome, when the educational council "sat down" upon them and restricted them to the terms of the law. The bishops have issued pastorals against the schools and are trying to put them down as godless schools, but the people pay little attention to them. The congregation walked out of one of the cathedrals while the bishop was reading his fulmination. In another church the bishop announced that he would confirm no candidates who attended the public schools. He asked the candidates one by one if they attended them, and set those aside as rejected who answered yes, then he took his action all back, and proceeded to confirm the rejected ones, saying that the priest of the parish had expressed his belief that the parents would withdraw the condemned candidates from the schools, and that children should not be made to suffer for the sins of their parents. Altogether, it is a very pretty comedy to look at from a distance.—Methodist.

—EVANGELIZATION IN FRANCE.—Dr. Somerville's evangelistic meetings in France continue to be very successful. At St. Servan the crowds were so great that people had to be turned away. The authorities of the various towns are apparently in sympathy with the movement and render every assistance in their power, and this in spite of the influence which the priests bring to bear upon them. Pastor Hirsch, of Nimes, has recently made a tour in the department of the Correze and was everywhere met by the same eagerness to hear the truth. It was as if the people were hearing the gospel for the first time. The Catholic Bishop of Tulle tried to induce the local authorities to silence the preacher by accusing him of reviving the blasphemy of Nestorius against the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary, and the Catholic press has teemed with denunciation of these Protestant services. At Montargis, a year ago, there were between forty and fifty Protestants, now there are 150. At Chateauroux a Roman Catholic officer was recently buried, with much pomp, and when his will was opened it was found to contain a bequest for the erection of a Protestant Church. At Valenciennes, where twenty years ago there were only forty Protestants, there is now a church of 250 members. In Paris there are twenty-two missions, the weekly attendance at which is estimated at 8,000.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE AT BASLE AND THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.—At the Seventh General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance at Basle, the following resolution, proposed by the Rev. Dr. Christlieb, of Bonn, was passed unanimously, thus carrying with it the weight of the general opinion of Protestant Christendom:

"That this Conference, prompted by the reports laid before it as to the present state of Evangelical Missions in China and India, expresses its full sympathy with the efforts for the suppression of the opium traffic which have been made during many years past, and desires to support the protests against this trade which from time to time have been raised by various Evangelical and Missionary Churches, and by many distinguished friends of Christian missions. The Conference unites with its English brethren in declaring this long established trade to be a crying injustice against China, a cause of offence which deeply injures the honor of the Christian name, both in Christian and heathen countries, and especially an immense obstacle to the spread of Christian missionary work. The Conference feels constrained to place on record its conviction that a change in the policy of England as regards this traffic is urgently necessary, and it instructs its president to bring this resolution to the knowledge of her Majesty's Secretary of State for India."

OLD CATHOLIC SERVICES IN PARIS.—M. Hyacinthe Loyson conducts his services in the "Gallican-Catholic" chapel at No. 7 Rue Rochechouart, Paris. There is a daily celebration of the mass on week-days and two on Sundays. There are sittings for 1,300 people, and they are frequently all taken. A noticeable feature of the congregations is the large attendance of men, a thing almost unknown in the Romish Churches. The average attendance at the preaching services on Sunday is about 1,000. M. Loyson is assisted by a personal friend, a young priest named Blenery, who was ordained not very long ago by Bishop Reinkens. Over six hundred names were subscribed to the programme of Catholic reform issued by M. Loyson some months since, and the movement seems to be gaining momentum. All the services are in the French language.

—Miss Louisa Leck, of the Salvation Army, exhorted at the Ystrad Station in the Rhondda Valley, Wales, was arrested by the police for obstructing the public thoroughfare, and sentenced to three day's imprisonment. From 4,000 to 5,000 people, with prayers and songs and tears, accompanied her from her temporary residence to the train which was to convey her to the jail. When the three days had expired and she was released, dense crowds greeted her all along the line of the railway on which she returned, and when the Ystrad Station was reached about 20,000 people had collected, bearing aloft the "Salvation" flag. The rain was coming down in torrents, but notwithstanding the multitude marched to a field where a modest address was delivered by Miss Leck, amid shouts of "Hallelujah," etc.

—"Standing Bear," the chief of the Poncas, is a devout Christian and a member of the Presbyterian Church. At the recent fall meeting of the Presbytery of Omaha, Mr. Frank La Flesche, a gentleman of intelligence and refinement, largely self-educated, a son of a former chief of the Omahas, was present as a ruling elder from the church of Black-Bird Hills, and read an interesting paper on the moral and religious condition of the tribe. The Presbytery also heard Mr. T. H. Tibbles, a Hicntta a, who is prosecuting a suit for the protection of Poncas in the United States Courts, and recommended his efforts to the liberality of the Christian people of the Eastern States.

THE GERMAN BAPTIST CONFERENCE.—The twenty-ninth annual meeting of the German Baptist Conference was held in the First German Church of Berlin, Ontario, August 27-September 2. Seventy delegates were present, representing the German Baptist Churches of Ontario, Canada, and of New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Ritter, of Rochester, N. Y. Reports from fifty churches show a state of general prosperity throughout the organization. The Conference supported twenty missionaries during the past year, and has a total membership of 4,601.

—The report of the Greek Mission of the Southern Presbyterian Church states that there are three ordained missionaries, including one native, and three stations—one at Athens, one at Volos, and one at Salonika. There are church services and a Bible class and a Sunday school at each station. Two papers are published, and some fifty-three books. Six young men are being trained for missionary work. The independent mission of Mr. George Constantine, in Athens, has preaching, Sunday-school, prayer and Bible meetings, and is published a paper and tracts and distributes tracts. Two communicants were received during the year, one by profession and one by letter. The preaching services were attended by about 40 persons, and about as many children attend the Sunday school.

—The Rev. Dr. N. Brown, missionary in Japan of the American Baptist Union, writes that he has completed the translation of the New Testament into the Japanese. He says since his arrival in Japan, six and a half years ago, his time has been about equally divided, exclusive of his regular missionary duties, between the study of the language and translating. He doubts "if there is any Eastern language into which the New Testament could be translated in a shorter time or one capable of expressing more distinctly and truthfully the thought of the original." He transferred only two or three words in Greek—such as "Amen" and "Hyssop."

—The Evangelical Section of the Dutch Reformed Church has resolved upon establishing an exclusive Protestant University, where theology is to be taught in accordance with the tenets of the Synod of Dort. The site of this new university has not yet been determined upon, but it is known that the most important chair for orthodox divinity will be offered to Dr. A. Kuyper, the eloquent opponent in the Second Chamber of all undenominational education. The four already-existing universities in the Netherlands are Leyden (1575), Groningen (1614), Utrecht (1636), and Amsterdam (1877).

—The Presbyterian says: "There are only three Roman Catholic Churches in the State of New Jersey which are consecrated, that is to say, there are only three churches out of debt, which is the condition in which consecration is granted. One of them is in Princeton, and it was consecrated last week. In order to give the service a slight flavor of the church's 'environment,' the sermon was preached by Father Denny, who was formerly a Presbyterian." To which it may be added that a large proportion of the Romish Churches in the United States are heavily mortgaged.

—King Menelek, of the Shoa Country, which is south of Abyssinia and north of the Galla Country, has written a letter from Ankobar to the London Anti-Slavery Society, announcing that he, as a Christian king, has abolished slavery in Shoa. He commands in the same letter that the Egyptian authorities have cut off his communication with the coast and will not even suffer messengers of the gospel to come into his country, and asks the aid of the society to have the road opened again.

—The Rev. Cunningham Geikie, D. D., author of "The Life and Works of Christ," entered on Sunday on the incumbency of Christ Church, Boulevard Bineau, the new church connected with Miss Leigh's mission homes and orphanages in Paris. The treasurer's account for the seven months ending the thirty-first of August shows a total of 2,431f. receipts and 3,985f. disbursements.

—There are now between ninety and a hundred Medical Missionaries at work in the foreign field, whereas only twenty years ago there were barely a score. The importance of this style of missionary work is being more and more appreciated, and the demand for doctors is considerably greater than the supply.

—With reference to the Pope's state of health the Rome Fanfulla mentions that some time ago his medical advisers persuaded him to take daily exercise in the shape of a drive in the gardens of the Vatican, and that Leo XIII. felt, for a time, much the better for this advice.

—The new session of Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College was opened with thirty fresh candidates to attend.

THE CLOCK'S MESSAGES.

BY S. H.

What says the clock when it strikes one?
Mark, says the clock listen little one.
What says the clock when it strikes two?
Love God, little darling, for God loves you.
And tell me, tell me softly, what it whispers at three.
It is suffer little children to come unto Me.
Then come, gentle lambs, come and wander no more.
For the voice of the Shepherd that calls you at four.
And let your young hearts with gladness revive,
When it echoes as sweetly, "God bless thee," at five.
And remember at sun-set, at fading of day,
That your life is a vapor that passeth away.
What says the clock when it strikes seven?
Of such is the kingdom, the kingdom of heaven.
What says the clock when it strikes eight?
Strive to enter in at the beautiful gate.
And louder, still louder, it echoes at nine
And its song is, My son give Me that heart of thine.
Then sweet be your voices, responsive at ten,
Hosanna in the highest, Hosanna, amen!
And loud let the echo ring on till eleven,
Praise, praise to the Father, the Father in Heaven!
While the deep stroke of midnight the watchword shall bring,
Lo! these are my jewels, thus saith your King.

A Rainy Day.

Rain! Rain, go to Spain,
And never, never come back again,
Rain! Rain,—

"O do hush, Bell; I can't read a word," said Helen Harrison, looking up impatiently from her book.

"Well I can't go out-doors and I want the rain to go away; I am just tired to death with the drop, drop, drop," Sarah Simmons says:

Rain, rain, go away
Come again some other day,— but I don't like that; I wish it would never, never come again!"

"O, sister Helen," and the small head, of golden curls turned eagerly towards the grown up sister, "Wouldn't this world be beautiful if we had sunshine all the time?"

"Do you think so, my dear child?" said Helen, closing her book and gathering the bodeguided pet into her arms. "Suppose we talk seriously about the matter. How would the flowers grow in your own little garden if we had no rain?"

"We would have the dew every night, you know. I always get my feet real wet if I go out on the grass before it rises."

"But the dew only lies on the flowers on their leaves, refreshing them after a hot day just as you are refreshed by washing your face and hands after a dusty walk. Rootlets not sink deep down in the dry ground where the thirsty roots live; they could not have anything to drink if the rain did not come down so steadily from those dark clouds above us."

"That would be too bad," said Bell soberly. "I should not like the beautiful flowers to die of thirst."

"No, I am sure you wouldn't; nor dogs, nor kittens, nor horses, nor people."

"But they needn't; they have wells and springs—the water comes right out of the ground."

"First, though, it must go into the ground. These same little drops that are so tiresome to you creep away under the earth and run quickly into the quiet, dark corners of some thick wood, and when they find a cool, damp place, there they rest, and by-and-by other little drops find the same path and follow it to the same pleasant resting place, and so after awhile there comes to be a pool and pleasant spring. Everybody knows how happy that makes a tired and dusty traveler."

"Yes; you and I found that out the day we went to look for the arbutus blossoms. O dear! I was so tired," sighed Bell, her recollection of the long walk she had taken being almost vivid enough to bring back the weariness she had felt as well. Silent and thoughtful, she rested a few moments, and then said, although a little regretfully: "If we can't have wells and springs without it, I suppose we must have rain; but what can do all the day long?"

"Wait patiently and hope for the sunshine; it will surely come. You know the old story, dear, about the Flood?"

"Why, of course I do," said Bell, to whom all the stories of the Old Testament were familiar.

Fortunately her parents believed that God made and governs this world, and that He had grand and glorious purposes to fulfill in the being and destiny of both mind and matter. They did not allow second causes, however mighty, to obscure their sight of the Great First Cause; law could never take the place of the Lawgiver to them, and among doubts and mysteries they held but the more firmly to the unanswerable words of the Apostle Paul: "For every house is builded by some man, but He that built all things is God." So believing, they fed the instinctive faith of childhood with Bible stories that through their own lives, with their inevitable cares, might often come the comforting remembrance of God's love to His ancient people. Would that more parents, in these latter days, so believed and taught the old record.

"My little sister should be wise, then, if she used her memory to bring her hope this dreary day."

"Why, how do you mean, sister Helen?"

"What came after the Flood?"

"Oh, the rainbow—the bright beautiful rainbow!"

"Yes," answered Helen; "and think for a moment that you are finding one rainy day tiresome and dreary, while then the rain fell day and night. In a little while you will see the sun shining as brightly as before; but then the water was poured out of the windows of heaven," until nearly six weeks had gone by, and all the people who did not love their good God and would not obey Him, had perished. For one hundred and twenty years Noah had been telling them of God and warning them of the Flood, but they would not listen, and so they died. Then came the beautiful bow of promise that there should be no more Flood. Now, does any rainy day that can come to us seem so dreary if we hope for the rainbow that may shine after it?"

"No, indeed," said little Bell, the discontent all gone out of her face.

"There is another story, about the rainbows, it is such a beautiful thing that people who do not believe as we do must think something about it. They say, if any one can reach the place where the end of the bow rests on the earth they will find there a pot of gold. Which story do you like the best?" quietly said Helen.

With a puzzled look at her sister's face, as if she wondered if the question had been asked in seriousness, Bell answered, with a tinge of scorn: "What use would a hundred pots of gold be if we should have another Flood?"

And Helen answered, "What, indeed!"—New York Observer.

A BOY'S LEISURE HOURS.—What a boy does with his leisure is most important; what he gets in school is mainly drill or exercise; it is a gymnasium to him, he must eat elsewhere. What he does with his spare hours determines his destiny. Suppose he reads history every day, or scientific books, in the course of a few years he becomes learned. It matters very little what he undertakes Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Sanscrit, all disappear if he uses his spare time on them.

A boy was employed in a lawyer's office, and took the daily paper to amuse himself with. He commenced to study French, and at that little desk, became a fluent reader and writer of the French language. He accomplished this by laying aside the newspaper and taking up something not so amusing, but far more profitable.

A coachman was often obliged to wait long hours while his mistress made calls. He determined to improve the time; he found a small volume containing the Eclogues of Virgil, but could not read it, and so purchased a Latin grammar. Day by day he studied this, and, finally, mastered all its intricacies. His mistress came behind him one day as he stood by the horses waiting for her, and asked him what he was so intently reading. "Only a bit of Virgil, my lady." "What, do you read Latin?" "A little, my lady." She mentioned this to her husband, who insisted that David should have a teacher to instruct him. In a few years he became a learned man, and was a useful and loving minister in Scotland.

A boy was hired to open and shut the gates to let the teams out of an iron mine. He sat on a log all day by the side of the gate. Sometimes an hour would pass before the teams came, and this he employed so well that there was scarcely any fact in history that escaped his attention. He began with a little book on English history that he found in the road; having learned that thoroughly, he borrowed of a minister, Goldsmith's History of Greece. This good man became greatly interested in him and loaned him books, and was often seen sitting by him on the log conversing with him about the people of ancient times.

All these show that, in this country any one can learn that wants to. If he is at work, he still has three hours he can call his own. Let him use those wisely, and he can fill his mind, with stores of knowledge.

RELY ON YOURSELF.—It is related of Stephen Girard, that he had a favorite clerk, and he always said "he intended to do well by Ben. Lippincott." So when Ben. got to be twenty one he expected to hear the governor say something of his future prospects, and perhaps lend a helping hand to starting him in the world. But the old fox carefully avoided the subject. Ben. mustered courage: "I suppose I can now (for, stammered he, and I thought I would say something to you as to my course." What do you think I had better do?" "Yes, yes, I know you are," said the old millionaire, "and my advice is that you go and learn the cooper's trade. This application of ice nearly froze Ben. out, but recovering his equilibrium, he said if Mr. Girard was in earnest he would do so. "I am in earnest." And Ben. forthwith sought the best cooper in Spring Garden, became an apprentice, and in due time could make as good a barrel as the best. He announced to old Stephen that he had graduated, and was ready to set up in business. The old man seemed gratified, and immediately ordered three of the best barrels he could turn out. Ben. did his prettiest, and wheeled them up to the old man's counting room. Mr. Girard pronounced them first rate, and demanded the bill. "One dollar each," said Ben, "is as low as I can live by." "Cheap enough, make out your bill."

The bill was made out, and, old Steve, settled it with a check for $20,000, which he accompanied with this little moral to the story: "There, take that, and invest it in the best possible manner, and if you are unfortunate and lose it, you will have a good trade to fall back upon, which will afford you a good living."

A Boy to be Trusted.

A youth seeking employment came to a certain city, and on inquiring at a certain counting room if they wished a clerk, was told that they did not. On mentioning the recommendations he had, one of which was from a highly respected citizen, the merchant desired to see them. On turning over his carpet bag to find his letters, a book rolled out on the floor. "What book is that?" said the merchant. "It is the Bible, sir," was the reply. "And what are you going to do with that Book in this city?" The lad looked seriously into the merchant's face, and replied: "I promised my mother I would read it every day, and I shall do it;" and burst into tears. The merchant immediately engaged his services, and in due time he became a partner in the firm; one of the most respectable in the city.

Work Never Done.

The work of evangelizing the world will end only with the end of the world. If, at any given time, all the people were converted, the generation coming on would have to be converted also. All the members of a family may be religious, but the new-born child coming into that family is flesh, and must be born of the Spirit. With all the old crop of humanity saved, the new must undergo the same processes of cultivation and harvest. With the advantage of prevailing piety, the newly-born would the more readily yield to spiritual influences, and their reception of the gospel would be more general than now, but there would be occasion for labor to bring sinners to repentance, and to reclaim apostate and wandering souls. The stream can never be so purified at its fountain that it shall be sweet and wholesome ever afterward. Each individual child, of whomsoever born, comes upon the scene of life with a corrupt nature, a nature that is not purified by ancestral piety, and that, in itself and for itself, must be changed by the Holy Spirit.

Each individual must for himself be subjected to trial and battle with temptation. The questions that his parents have settled for themselves, the doubts they have combatted, the perplexing problems they have solved, must be met anew by every soul upon the arena of probation. The children need the training and nurture that their fathers needed, and the same prayerful vigilance and diligent instruction will be required in order to save them. Such a field cannot be cleared of weeds, once for all. They may be kept down, but they will appear again and again, and the crop is really never laid by. That the world will ever, or can ever, be so saved, that the work of God's toiling servants may be slackened, is not probable. Corruption will come into the world with every child that is born, the enemy will continue to sow tares in the field, and there will be backsliding and stumbling among the converted. Christian work, in its results, can never be said to be done. If the present generation were wholly saved, the next remains to be met by gospel agencies, and to be brought to the knowledge of Christ. Whatever conceptions we may have of that brighter and latter day, when all shall know the Lord, there is not in them the promise to the church of release from toil. The sower must still go forth to sow, the utmost of care must still be given to the training and conversion of the young, and the conquest of the world, to be permanent, must be secured by watchful and persistent effort.

It is also true in the sphere of experience that there is no time when the Christian can put off the harness until mortal life is over. If there be no occasion for subsequent repentance, and if a perfect love be maintained from the hour of conversion—a supposition that applies to comparatively few—still there must be conflict with temptation, prayer must be unceasing, and effort is needed to keep ourselves in the love of God. The chiefest of the apostles said: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect; but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." The goal of personal holiness is not the goal of heaven. We must still press along the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Without such earnest endeavor we may miss the crown, and be castaways. As long as we coast these earthly shores there is possibility and danger of shipwreck. The highest type of experience is still a warfare and a wrestling. The divine armor is both for defense and for attack. While he lives on earth, the Christian is a soldier, in the midst of the conflict. He must fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life.

From the active pursuits of business men sometimes retire in the meridian of their strength. But there is no period in the Christian's course when he is at liberty to cease from labor for Christ. He must do what he can till death relieves him of further duties here. He can never truly say that he has given enough, nor that he has done enough, nor even that he has suffered enough. The good and faithful servant receives his discharge only when he enters into the joy of his Lord. The infirmity of years may come upon him, the weakness of sickness, but he must work as he can, and with unabated purpose and zeal. While the breath is in his body his work is not done. In every case the faithful Christian ceases at once to work and live. Neither as to himself, nor as to the world around him, will it ever happen that there is nothing more to do. As far as strength and circumstances permit, he is in the midst of his work to the very last; and, were he to live a thousand years, it would be the same.

The real satisfaction at the end cannot be that there is no more work to be done, but that we have done what we could. If there be then a clinging to life, its strength will grow out of the desire to do something more and worthier in the field of Christian labor. There is one regret that the believer is likely to feel most deeply in the dying hour: that which is connected with the sense of work but partially and negligently done. The blood of Christ may put away the sins of impatience, indolence and distrust, but they will linger among the last ingredients in the cup of things to be sorrowed over and to be repented of.

Denver and Montana.

Mr. Editor: I arrived here by steamer from Oregon on the evening of the third instant, after a rough passage of three days. The bar at the mouth of the Columbia was in its grandest, wildest mood, when we crossed it, and I never saw a more threatening sea. The roll and pitch of the ship left an impression upon the passenger not to be thrown off, until she glided into the smooth water of the Golden Gate. The long, heavy swell upon the Pacific told of distant equinoctial gales. We passed a school of whales, apparently enjoying the relief they must feel at the discovery of coal oil, and for the first time I saw a "double blower"—a whale that spouts from two distinct holes in immediate succession. The lazy majesty of the huge creature suggested conscious strength. He evidently rejoiced in the width and depth of the sea, and was not afraid of the steamer. This sea voyage was at the end of five or six weeks of travel and work unprecedented in my itinerant life. Besides holding the Western, the Denver, the Montana and the Columbia Conferences, I had traveled 5,000 miles of railway, and 800 by stage, preached fourteen times, and delivered four addresses. I feel especially grateful to the prayers of dear friends, for through it all my health has been good, excepting a thirty-six hours' neuralgia at Mobile.

Of this Western out-post work it may be said, in a word, that by the grace of God there has been during the year a forward movement all along the line. The Western Conference has been noticed in a letter to the Nashville Advocate. The Denver Conference consists of one presiding elder's district, and seven regular preachers. An excellent work was done during the year at Denver and Pueblo, and there were a number of conversions and accessions at several points. The church has been newly repaired, frescoed and furnished at Denver, at a cost of near $2,000, all of which is paid for. It is admirably located, and is well attended. Denver is a well built city of 20,000 population, full of costly houses and business enterprise. Every house going up is of brick, which can be put in the wall for $7 a thousand. The vast wealth of silver ore now in sight and tributary will certainly make this the second city in the far West. Its streets are at right angles, and streams of fresh water are flowing on the four sides of every square. The climate is dry and temperate, the soil very fertile and rich in alkalies. The brethren are much encouraged who have been long battling for Southern Methodism. This Conference needs several experienced young men, who are available at home, to put our church well up to the rapid and permanent development of Colorado. From Denver I traveled from Monday morning until Friday night, by car and stage, via Ogden, and found myself at Butte, in Montana. The narrow gauge road runs through Utah, Idaho, and up to northern Montana; there a stage accomplishes the rest of the route for you. As a preacher on the frontier of Texas once said to me, in respect to a circuit that swept several hundred miles next to the Comanches: "It is only a question of stock," so I may say of this Montana trip. It was dusty, and at night cold, but, on the whole, quite tolerable.

Butte is a silver-mining city of several thousand inhabitants, with reducing furnaces and shafts in and about it. Business stirring and hopeful. It has no Sunday, though I preached to a very excellent congregation on that day, both morning and at night. But men in search after gold and silver seem to forget everything else. Well-diggers, carpenters and crushing mills were all at work, as for dear life. This is probably the most important and permanent city in Montana. From Butte I rode in a spring-wagon, with Bro. Stanley, some seventy miles, to Willow Creek, the seat of the Conference. There we had a brave little session, and well attended by the people. It was held in a church which had been just completed, and which I dedicated, though it had been used and under way for several years. The missionary meeting yielded at this Conference $162; that at the Western $160; the Denver $50, and the Columbia $100, which may be taken as exponents, in part, of the frontier work. Both at Denver and at this place the congregation had spent a good deal for church repairs. There were five preachers attending, besides the lay members. It would be hard to find men truer to our church than they. The report of the work showed no falling off, even where we had had no preacher. At Helena the church building has been repaired, and $400 or $500 put upon it. The whole cost some $12,000, is out of debt, and waiting an energetic man, a devoted Christian minister, with good ability, to preach the word. I am satisfied that our church can afford to hold this and several other established towns in this territory, and cannot afford to give them up. The people need us, and demand our style and character of workmen more than at any previous time. They are disgusted with a pulpit that is half rostrum, that speechifies fully as much as it preaches, that charges itself with the care of the government fully as much as with the cure of souls. It is certainly enough to make the heart sad to see these early settlers and gold prospectors scattered over the foothills and mountains, as "sheep without a shepherd." They are weary, disappointed, sick at soul, yet without God and without hope. Hundreds of men are full of bitterness and blasphemy, because, by the very conditions of prospecting, they are deprived of the refining and saving influences of home life. It is this large class who are the real source of wealth in the mining regions. There are millions spent in digging holes only a few feet in the ground, to be presently abandoned. The prospector traverses mountains, valleys, foothills and gulches, scraping, washing, digging and carrying, beguiled, fascinated, attracted, on and ever, by the expectation of at last striking his pick into some rich load, which in a moment will amply repay him for all his years of toil and disappointment. Once in a while, like finding a diamond pin in the middle of Canal street, a deposit of precious ore is found, and one in ten thousand succeeds. I have forwarded the minutes of the Denver Conference to Nashville, but suppose they must have miscarried, and I therefore repeat the appointments, as also those of the Montana:

MONTANA CONFERENCE.—APPOINTMENTS.

Helena District.—E. S. Clark, P. E. Helena station, to be supplied; Helena circuit, R. S. Clark; Centerville, R. M. Craven; St. Louis circuit, to be supplied (by W. Eva;) Willow Creek, to be supplied; Bozeman mission, L. B. Stateler; Fort Benton and Sun River, to be supplied.

Deer Lodge District.—E. J. Stanley, P. E. Deer Lodge, to be supplied; Silver Star and Butte, E. J. Stanley; Missoula circuit, T. W. Flowers; Virginia City circuit, to be supplied; Yellow Stone Valley, to be supplied.

DENVER CONFERENCE.—APPOINTMENTS.

Denver District.—W. M. Smith, P. E. Denver, W. J. Phillips; Colorado Springs, to be supplied (by Ben Doering;) Divide, J. R. McClure; Fort Lupton and Sterling, to be supplied; Pueblo, W. W. Welsh; Silver Cliff, to be supplied (by W. A. Ansbury;) Canon City circuit, to be supplied; W. Las Animas, to be supplied; Trinidad and Raton, J. W. Carnes; Huerfano, A. H. Quillan.

I may add that Montana is a good stock country, with a few hills wooded like the down on a youth's chin, but mainly the highest points as well as valleys are covered with grasses, now looking dry but very nutritious. They have but little rain on this eastern side of the Rocky Mountain range, and the winter's snow is so light that horses and neat cattle find little difficulty in getting down to the hay beneath. A great deal has been already accomplished in bringing water from the snow peaks and ranges into the valleys, by flumes and ditches, and irrigation is cheap and universal. Marvelous statements are made in regard to the yield of wheat per acre. I found that each of the preachers was quite well satisfied and intrenched financially, several of them with small herds and ranches, and that they were in more than good spirits, and gave very liberally at the missionary anniversary—all good symptoms. For the first year or so they encountered the usual hardships of new comers, but now would not go back even to Mississippi. The continual motion of the past month left me no time for writing, only eating, breathing and talking. Hereafter there is somewhat to be said of the trip to Oregon, and that work.

Yours truly,

J. C. KEENER.

The Tithe.

We have known some laymen and some preachers who adopted the tithe as the rule and measure of religious giving. The examples, however, are few. The Christian Observer has recently published a series of very able articles advocating the tithe system. The concluding article closes as follows:

In a matter so simple as tithing it may seem superfluous to enter into any practical details. Yet some church member may ask, how can we bring in this reform? Where ought we to begin? In reply to this question, we venture to offer a few suggestions.

If you are persuaded, as we trust you are, that we should honor God by giving him our tithe, begin by tithing yourself. This is a matter between each Christian and his Lord. In a case of duty it is idle to think of screening ourselves behind the practice of the church or of the age in which we live. A cotemporary of Malachi could plead the example of previous generations and of his own generation in defence of his failure to pay tithes, yet he was none the less a robber of God. Here, "every man must bear his own burden," and if he honors God "then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone and not in another." But, in the next place, there may be others in your church who are convinced that they ought to adopt the system of ministerial support which the Bible describes. If there are such then you may meet together and covenant to observe some such rules as these:

1. The tithe is to be paid to God in humble, grateful acknowledgment that all we have comes from God and is His. I Chron. xxix, 14.

2. It is to be a tithe of all that God gives us. "Of all that Thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto Thee." Gen. xxviii, 22.

3. It is to be set apart as soon as we receive from God; "If the first fruit be holy, the lump is also holy." (Rom. xi, 16)—and to be paid to the treasurer of the church as soon thereafter as convenient. Ex. xxii, 29.

4. The tithe may be paid in kind, as far as it can be used. Beyond this it shall be changed into money by the person who tithes. Deut. xiv, 22-29.

5. The control and distribution of the tithes shall be with the deacons of the church.

When these rules are adopted, declare your pews free. Let subscription papers be torn up. Be honest with God and see if His blessing does not come upon you.

And now, we bring these papers to a close. We are aware that whatever grief we may feel in view of the evils which have been pointed out, we are but in sympathy with many an earnest heart in the church. The burden of our church journals and of our church courts is the inadequacy of the means supplied by Christ's people for the support and extension of Christ's Church. The appalling extent of this burden is seen in the statistics of our land. The census of the United States reveals the fact that the cost of the dogs of our country is greater than the cost of all our ministers; and that for every dollar spent in the support of ministers, there are one hundred dollars spent for cigars and tobacco, and two hundred dollars for intoxicating drinks. As God looks down upon all this, surely He must say, as He said in the days of Malachi: "Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have robbed Me, even this whole nation." The remedy which we urge is, we believe, fundamental. In urging it, we have only followed others abler and more learned than ourselves. Whether to accept it or to reject it is not a matter for dalliance or for neglect. Let every man make up his own mind, and may God prosper the truth.

Toning Up.

Under this heading the Interior discourses as follows:

The theological or religious signs of the times are well nigh as bright as the business tokens. Though it is a time of sharp questioning and much honest doubt, there are many evidences that point to an era of larger and profounder faith and grander religious activity than the world has ever known. We observe a number of the religious papers commenting on Dr. Allman's address before the British Science Association in the most hopeful way, as an acknowledged weakening, if not abandoning of extreme materialism. Thus the Christian at Work says: "It is a long time that has no turning, and our friends of the scientific associations seem to have realized the truth in their new experience." Speaking of Dr. Allman's address, it says: "The reader will search in vain for any declaration that the professor finds the 'potency' of life in any aggregation of molecules." Not only so, but Dr. Allman expressly asserts that there is such radical difference between different kinds of protoplasm as to necessitate the conviction that antecedent design had something to do with determining its constitution. Dr. Allman further refers to some of Prof. Huxley's statements about protoplasm in a form of mild dissent that has led some critics to the conclusion that Dr. Allman's dissent was authorized by Huxley, and equal to a retraction of the distinguished professor's bold statements about the origination of life from not living matter. Be this as it may, Huxley has of late manifestly wavered from his once positive ground on this subject, and Tyndall now admits the possibility of a creative force back of matter. He holds, indeed, to its unknowability, but it is something to have admitted the possibility.

In another direction there has of late been progress on this side of the ocean. Not many years ago Ralph Waldo Emerson was generally regarded as at least in doubt about personal immortality. But now that the sun of that superb mind neare its earthly setting, we have the assurance of his intimate friend, Bronson Alcott, that it is going hence in the strong conviction that it will have a morning of unclouded and immortal life. Mr. Alcott says, "It is my impression that he is not a pantheist but a theist, and I venture to say a Christian theist."

Not less remarkable is the change through which Mr. Alcott himself has passed. In the Conference at Andover he affirmed his belief in the personality and sovereignty of God, in the value of prayer, in the Trinity, and in the inspiration of the Scriptures. He also spoke his mind freely as to the future of Unitarianism. "He expressed his belief that it will soon cease to exist. One wing has for some time been tending strongly toward orthodoxy, and will soon be absorbed in it, while the other wing is fast drifting into a liberalism far worse than Unitarianism."

Are we not going ere long to have such a gathering around the fundamental truths of the Christian faith as we hardly dare now anticipate, a consent of the world's best thought to the essential gospel? And that will mean the advance of a great host with closed ranks and lofty enthusiasm.

"The Strongest Pillar."

The following is from the Western Christian Advocate, Cincinnati:

Some months ago The Christian Advocate, the New York organ of the Methodist Church, published an editorial commenting upon the allegation that a member of the present Cabinet had advised the President to avoid Grant's friends, and especially not to allow himself to be influenced too much by Grant's Church. Recently no one has connected Secretary Sherman's name with the affair, as the member of the Cabinet who had thus advised the President, and the consequence is that some of Mr. Sherman's Methodist friends have been quite troubled about it. A few days ago a gentleman in Washington called the Secretary's attention to the matter, and received the following reply:

Washington, Sept. 9, 1879.

Dear Sir,—Your note of yesterday, in which you allude to a paragraph in the Advocate, the organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to the effect "that a prominent member of the Cabinet had warned the President not to trust or have any thing to do with any of Grant's friends, and especially his Church—that is, the Methodist," and stating that such a remark, has been attributed to me, is received.

Such an imputation is scarcely worth denying. I believe it to be untrue as to any member of the Cabinet. I know it to be untrue as to myself. The idea of warning the President against the Methodist Church—the strongest pillar in this country of the Republican party—is utterly preposterous, and no one who knows me would give it credit for a moment.

And it is equally preposterous that I could warn the President against "Grant's friends," for General Grant never had a truer friend than I am. I supported him from the beginning of his service at Fort Donelson to this hour; never spoke an unkind word of him, never besought him for favors, being always in a position where he could render me none; always supported his policy, except in the few cases where my judgment did not conform to his and then I always frankly told him why; and I do not mean that our friendship shall be disturbed by any act or word of mine.

Very truly yours, John Sherman.

From this we infer that somebody regards the Methodist Episcopal Church as strongly devoted to the political fortunes of Gen. Grant. Mr. Sherman's estimate of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is that it is "the strongest pillar in this country of the Republican party."

Mr. Sherman is a cagacious politician is likely known, whereof he affirms. There are many Democrats in the Methodist Episcopal Church, no doubt, but they are in the minority. A tolerable acquaintance with the spirit and drift of the official press of the Methodist Episcopal Church fully justifies Mr. Sherman's words. They were uttered as commendatory of that church, but they are not altogether relished by the editor of the Western. To accept the position of "the strongest pillar" would be an embarrassing admission. However that may be, we fear the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, a prominent aspirant for the presidential candidacy of the Republican party, has only spoken the truth; and he also knows that it is important to conciliate "the strongest pillar" by affecting the utmost friendship for Gen. Grant. It might help his chances if he only had a Methodist wife, and occasionally attended Methodist meetings.

Tennessee Conference.

The Tennessee Conference began its session at Murfreesboro, October 8. The editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate left the Conference in session on Monday the twelfth. From Dr. Fitzgerald's account we give the following items:

Bishop Paine was in the chair most of the time, and now and then astonished the brethren by little flashes of chastened wit that showed how fresh an old man's heart may be kept by the grace of God. Bishop Doggett is in attendance, and greatly relieves his venerable colleague by his services.

The Rev. Dr. J. O. A. Clark, of the South Georgia Conference, is here in the interest of the Wesley Monumental Church, Savannah. His lecture on John Wesley on Thursday evening was an elaborate and masterly production. We hope to see it in the forthcoming memorial volume, of which our readers have already heard. The Conference on Friday passed resolutions, expressing approval of the Memorial Church enterprise, and recommending that $1,000 be raised in the Tennessee Conference in aid thereof.

Drs. McFerrin and Young addressed the Conference on Publishing House interests, and sold thirty of the $25 bonds. The Tennessee Conference has very properly led the column in the movement to relieve the Publishing House. The feeling of the body is enthusiastic. The Methodist people of Tennessee know the men who compose the Book Committee; they know Dr. McFerrin and his co-worker, Dr. Young, and they have confidence that the business is being managed with skill and absolute fidelity.

The anniversary of the Woman's Missionary Society was held on Friday evening. The spacious house was crowded. The reports of the officers of the society showed that a year of successful work had been done. Dr. Wilson and the editor made addresses. The secretary hit the mark, as he usually does. There is real life in this organization, and we predict next year will show a decided advance as compared with the last.

The Missionary Anniversary on Saturday evening was addressed by Dr. Wilson, and Dr. Young lifted the collection in his own effective way. Dr. Wilson's speech was worthy of the man and the occasion. He dealt with facts and principles, basing his appeal for missions on Christian obligation, and searching the consciences of the immense audience. The collection was about $250.

Columbia Conference.

Mr. Editor: We had a delightful session of Conference. The preaching by the brethren at the various churches in the city gave great satisfaction. Our dear Bishop Keener was with us in good health, although in labors and travel abundant. That stage ride of three days through the mountainous region between the railroad connection of California and Oregon fatigued him much—gave him a thorough jostling up. How he did sleep after he got here! We had him as our guest, of course. Did not our hearts burn within us as we talked of persons and things of other years! Truly, it was refreshing! His presence was a benediction. He is gone; all the preachers are gone; one feels lonesome. God bless the dear Bishop, and restore him in due time to his beloved family.

We buckle on the armor for another year's conquest. Pray for us! "The prayers of the righteous avail much."

Affectionately in Christ,

T. B. White.

Albany, Oregon, Oct. 7, 1879.

APPOINTMENTS.

Willamette District.—T. B. White, P. E. Albany, M. C. Muller; Tangent, T. B. White; P. A. Moses; Lebanon and Forks of the Santiam, E. G. Michael; Harrisburg, D. C. McFarland; Eugene and Coast Fork, to be supplied; Junction, to be supplied (with Thomas Starus;) Corvallis, Joseph Emery and professors of Corvallis College; Dallas, A. Hardison; Yamhill and Tillamook, to be supplied; Oregon City, James B. Perkins.

Jacksonville District.—J. R. N. Bell, P. E. Roseburg, J. R. N. Bell; Oakland, H. B. Swofford; Williamsburg, to be supplied (by James M. Gross;) Jacksonville, W. H. Kryce; Coquille, to be supplied.

Walla Walla Dist.—J. W. Compton, P. E. Walla Walla, J. B. Davis; Weston, E. P. Warren; Pendleton, to be supplied; Hopner, R. C. Oglesby; Dayton, F. M. D. Mays; Palouse, H. T. Berger; Powder River, T. —"Well, but after all, these Puritan practices won't do. You must remember that this is the nineteenth century, and that we are turning our electric light upon old fogeyism and Bourbonism of every kind. These antiquated regulations won't do any longer. Men are too enlightened to submit to them. You must accommodate yourselves to the exigency of the time. There are your Sunday laws, for instance. You must modify them, they are not adapted to the present condition of society. Men have changed, and such regulations must be changed." We do not feel the force of this. We are of quite a contrary opinion. We think the Sunday laws were never needed more than at present. Never before has there been less reason for working or playing on Sunday. Never before have men been able to do so much and earn so much in six days as at this very time. Never before could men afford so well to take a day off or a week off. Never before have men had so much done for them, such provision made for disasters that may befall them. Never before has a religion achieved so much for men as Protestant Evangelical Christianity has for the men of the present time. Never before have religious commands come with as great power, with claims so strong, with supporting evidence so indisputable and clear, as the Ten Commandments come to men to-day. Never before have men needed so much the rest of the Sabbath as they do to-day.

The "exigency" demands a more faithful preaching of the whole counsel of God. Regeneration, justification, sanctification, and all the terms of the word of God, mean to day precisely what they did three hundred years ago. Men need to-day the doctrines contained in these terms as they have always needed them. The word of God, unaltered in a single phrase, is to day the "sword of the Spirit," as it has always been. The "exigency" demands a call to repentance, to just such a change of opinions and conduct as has been demanded from the day of Adam's sin until now. The "exigency" demands an exhortation to faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as the propitiation for our sins, as the Saviour of sinners. The "exigency" demands a return to the practices, the rules of life, declared in the word of God. There has been no change in human character or in the relations of men. Not one new moral or religious truth has been discovered. Intellectual life is essentially, precisely what it has been. The times have not changed in character, and there is no call for a change on the part of evangelical Christians.

Richmond Christian Advocate.

—The scriptural plan is the safe and sure one: "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him."

This plan has apostolic authority. "Every one"—rich and poor, young and old, male and female—"every one" without exception. If this plan were carried out in good faith, the treasury of the Lord would always be full and overflowing. Pastors would be paid, Sunday-schools supported, missionaries sustained, colleges endowed, churches built. But why is it that all these interests are on the beg, and crippled up for the want of support? Mainly because the men and women of moderate means do not give according to their ability. It would astonish any thinking man to know how many thousands there are in the church who do not give a dime during the year to God's cause. In the great majority of our pastoral charges the burden of the expense is paid by a handful of the membership. Those who pay most liberally during the year are the few who, by additional contributions, make up deficiencies at the end of the year. How shall we bring up the masses of church members to the duty of giving according to ability? There are noble examples, as notable as they are noble, among the poor, where the full measure of giving up to ability is met, and that, too, with cheerfulness and a willing mind.

Watchman (Boston).

—Dr. Morgan Dix, rector of Trinity Church, New York, in his "Manual of the Christian Life," warns churchmen not to attend the places of worship of the denominations or sects. "Go not at all," he says, "neither to hear preaching out of curiosity nor to oblige friends. Keep to the church alone. You have naught to do with those without the church, but to pray for them and treat them with kindness." By the church he of course means the Episcopal Church. Dr. Dix is a high churchman, but it would surprise one who had never made it a matter of particular observation to notice how many who rank as low churchmen act on the same rule. William Wilberforce gave similar advice. We once asked a friend, a Congregationalist, if he had ever heard a distinguished Episcopal clergyman in the city of his residence. He said he had not; that he had friends who were Episcopalians, and had often invited him to do so, but as they would not accept invitations to hear his pastor, he was not inclined to hear theirs. We do not quote his decision to recommend it, at least for the reason expressed, but to suggest that one who has an intelligent Christian reason for belonging to a church, and a due sense of her claims upon him, with a proper regard for the uses of the Lord's day and of the sanctuary, will not very often go to other places "out of curiosity, or to oblige friends."

Christian Neighbor.

—To preach acceptably to the people, and acceptably to God, do not always go together. When a minister pleases God in the matter, spirit and manner of his sermon, he pleases all men who ought to be pleased. A preacher should seek to come out with clear skirts and an acquitting conscience. No one knows as fully as the preacher the temptation to omit or pass lightly over the more popular sins, such as may possibly obtain largely in his congregation. Let the preacher remember Paul to the Galatians: "For do I persuade men or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ."

Methodist Recorder.

—That time serving spirit which opposes truth from motives of self-interest, or from fear of exciting opposition, finds no countenance in the word of God. The Bible never excuses or palliates sin, but boldly presents the naked truth. Away, then, with the false conservatism, whether in Church or State, which would give mild names to existing evils, and blunt the keen edge of the Spirit's sword. Away with those who cling to error with one hand, and hold back truth with the other, trembling lest by a too rapid progress it should injure its own cause; let them point out if they can a single instance in all the past where truth has overleaped itself.

Let no man's heart fail him for fear that Christianity is retrograding because of the turmoils in the world, for it is only marching steadily onward; neither let its enemies exult as though it were dead, for it is only waiting till it can leap to its predestined supremacy.

To Our Subscribers.

—January next the ADVOCATE office will adopt the cash system, and business thereafter will be conducted on the basis of all the leading papers published. Subscriptions being payable in advance for such length of time as desired. The date of expiration by months will appear opposite the name of each subscriber, indicating the subscription expires with the close of that month, at which time the paper will be discontinued, unless renewed. This will materially simplify the office work, as the printer will drop the names according to monthly expiration, and no individual partiality be shown, as every subscriber will have a standing notice of expiration. It will also facilitate agents in giving receipts in accordance with office accounts, corresponding with printed date. Where advance payments exceeding one year are made the year to which paid will also be inserted. Errors in names and dates will be promptly corrected when advised, and we urge you to notify the office of such cases when known, as our desire is to avoid all friction, or causes for complaint, and have everything as nearly perfect as possible. Accounts will be kept with agents as heretofore, to whom payments may be made, or sent direct to this office, if preferred.

—The following items are from the Southwestern Presbyterian of October 9:

Rev. J. H. Nall, D. D., and family, arrived in our city on Friday last. They were at once conducted to the parsonage of the Prytania Street Church and installed there. Dr. Nall preached on Sabbath morning and evening. The attendance was good. This pastoral charge, so long vacant, is, we trust, supplied for years to come. We hope that a career of great usefulness may be awaiting the pastor elect, and that the prosperity of this important church may return.

Rev. A. N. Workell, pastor elect of the Canal Street Church, reached the city on last Friday, in fine health, much benefitted by his summer sojourn in a cooler climate. We need not say that he was warmly welcomed by his many friends, and especially by his congregation. He proposes to join the Presbytery of New Orleans at its present meeting. The addition of two active and efficient workers—himself and Dr. Nall—will be a welcome accession to the roll of Presbytery.

The Good Hope camp meeting in Jones county, Miss., will be a grand reunion of the Presbyterians scattered through that section of the State. The attendance, we expect, will be large, and we hope that the occasion may be a profitable one.

—Mrs. Sarah Ridley died, at the residence of her son-in-law, Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D., in New Orleans, October 17. She was in her eighty-first year. For the past year or more she had been suffering from the effects of a fall, unable to go about and for some months past she was confined to her bed. She was ready for the change, and waited for it with desire. Sister Ridley was a woman of great strength and firmness of character, a life long Christian, cheerful in her piety, and supreme in her devotion to Christ and His cause. Mature in years and in Christian experience she peacefully fell asleep in Jesus. To her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren she leaves a name and memory that will be ever precious to them, and an example that they can safely follow. The funeral services and burial were at Ocean Springs in accordance with her own desire, as expressed years ago. We presume an obituary sketch will be furnished soon.

We regret to learn that L. D. Dameron, business manager of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, has been seriously ill for some time. In the issue of October 15 Dr. McAnally says:

"At the beginning of the present week the condition of L. D. Dameron's health was not quite so favorable as it was the week before, though we all hope he may soon be able to be out and attend to business. Until then, correspondents and others will wait with what patience they can. The business suffers for lack of his attention, and we earnestly request those who may be in arrears for the paper, or for books, to forward the amounts at the very earliest convenience. There is urgent need for it.

—Our much esteemed friend, Prof. J. W. Nicholson, professor of mathematics in the State University at Baton Rouge, La., sends us a pamphlet containing a new, simple, and complete demonstration of the Binomial Theorem and Logarithmic Series. The professor informs his readers that he has prepared this pamphlet more especially for the use of his own classes. Copies, however, can be obtained of him. Price, twenty-five cents. We are not able to give any opinion about the new demonstration; but have no doubt it is worthy the attention of mathematicians.

—The Republicans seem to have made a pretty clean sweep in the recent elections in Iowa and Ohio. The result in Iowa was expected, but in Ohio the scales, before the election, seemed nearly equally balanced. The victory in Ohio gives that State a Republican governor, Legislature, and a United States Senator in the place of Mr. Thurman whose term expires shortly. It is thought also to indicate the election of a Republican President next fall. Mr. Sherman's prospects are somewhat brightened by the election of Foster.

—We are informed that the impression prevails, in some sections, that Seashore camp ground has been so injured by storm, and by the yellow fever flurry of last summer, that there will be no attempt to hold camp meetings there in the future. This is a great mistake. The injury done by the storm was not great, and is being repaired. The camp meeting will be held hereafter at an earlier date, so as to avoid all apprehensions about the fever. Mr. James P. Hamilton is the keeper at the camp ground, and to him communications should be addressed, and not to Mr. James Tharp, who is now residing in Mobile.

—We deeply sympathize with Bro. J. M. Weems and family at Shubuta, Miss. Sister Weems writing October 19, says:

This has been a year of sore affliction to us. On the eighth of September our darling Bessie, aged one year and six months, died of malarial fever; and during the past six weeks none of us have been well, sometimes all down at once. My husband has only been able to fill two appointments during this time, and is now in bed, with the third attack of fever. Pray for us.

—Vanderbilt University, says the Western Methodist of October 11, has opened with a larger number of students in the Literary and Scientific, the Biblical and the Law Departments, than in any previous year of its history. In fact, the number of matriculates is already about as large as it was during the last term. The Medical Department also is prosperous and promising—more so than ever.

—Rev. George F. Thompson, pastor at Moss Point, Mississippi Conference, gave us a call this week. He reports his charge as doing well, and as doing well by him. Our friends at Moss Point will have a well-dressed preacher.

—On Oxford circuit, North Alabama Conference, we learn that there have been 171 conversions this year; and in the Talladega district, probably, 500 conversions.

Judge J. L. Rice of Keokuk, Iowa, recently deceased, bequeathed $10,000 to the Library Association of that city for the erection of a building, $5,000 to Williams' College of Massachusetts, and $1,000 to St. John's Episcopal Church of Keokuk.

The British Wesleyan Conference, at its recent session, appointed Rev. William Arthur and Rev. F. W. McDonald to represent it at the next Methodist Episcopal General Conference.

While we continue to do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements from the ADVOCATE, parties must judge for themselves as to the real value of the goods advertised. In ordering please mention the ADVOCATE.

THE ADVOCATE

FOR TWENTY-FIVE CENTS TO JANUARY, 1880.

The publisher announces to the thousands of our friends that he will send the paper from date to January next on receipt of twenty-five cents in currency or postage stamps. This is done to facilitate securing new subscribers, and, feeling assured that with but slight effort on the part of our patrons, thousands of persons could be induced to take advantage of this trial offer, many of whom after that time would become permanent subscribers. Will they exert themselves to swell the list? There is no other investment that will supply the same amount of interesting reading matter, fresh each week, as this liberal offer. Let us hear from you as early as possible.

THE ADVOCATE FREE.

To any person sending us four yearly subscribers with $4 the paper will be sent free for one year. Sample copies will be mailed to parties when advised, to facilitate agents in securing subscribers. Address all communications in connection with above to the publisher.

CLUB RATES.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Nashville Christian Advocate will be sent to same address for one year on receipt of $3 50.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Texas Christian Advocate will be sent to same address for one year on receipt of $4.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine will be sent to same address for one year on receipt of $4, or to ministers for $3 50. Each paper to be mailed from its own office.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS, of the staff of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, left Wednesday evening, for the West and East, on business connected with the ADVOCATE. We bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—Fruit jars. Mason pints, $1; quarts, $1 25; two quarts, $1 50 per dozen; American China dinner sets, $15 $18. Equal in looks and usefulness as French China. 19

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those desiring to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so thoroughly a first-class house, having reduced its rates to $1 and $1 50 per day.

ST. LOUIS IMPENETRABLE PAINT. We refer our readers to the advertisement of the "St. Louis Impenetrable Paint Company" on this page and can conscientiously recommend it as equal to any in the market. This concern started in business last spring, and since that time have done a good business, and those who have tried it are so well pleased that they have recommended its use to their friends. They are also proprietors of the "Colorless Waterproof Process" for rendering houses and other buildings, whether of brick, stone, cement or wood, impervious to damp. It has been used at and successfully applied to the Houses of Parliament, Windsor Castle and Hampton Court in England. The press of England indorse it in the highest terms. Two of the gentlemen connected with this company in St. Louis are of the highest standing, both gold and valued citizens. Write and get their circular, explaining more fully the particulars, etc.

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.—The readers of the ADVOCATE will see on this page the advertisement of the above company, who manufacture the "Corticelli Sewing Silk." This concern has invariably secured the first premium at all the industrial exhibitions and fairs, wherever its merits have been compared for its superior quality of stock, pure dye, full weight and fine lengths. They received the Centennial medal, and the latest is from Paris. The Cincinnati branch was established some six years ago, under the management of a very popular gentleman, Mr. H. M. B. Bowen. They enjoy a large and increasing patronage with the best manufacturers and dealers throughout the Western and South, who all unite in attesting the superior quality and merits of these goods. The mills of the "Nonotuck Silk Company" established in 1834, give employment to over five hundred people, and exceed in the production of sewing silk and machine twist, the rolls of any other company by nearly if not quite one hundred per cent. Remember, try the "Corticelli," and you will use no other.

CARRIAGES.—The "Enterprise Carriage Company" have on this page an attractive advertisement. This house has not been very long in the business, but during the short time they have been in existence they have sold a large number of buggies, and have heard, so far, no complaint. The high-priced vehicles of the past are no longer in demand, and the cheaper kind are becoming more popular, embodying all the qualities of high priced vehicles, both as to comfort and durability, this latter kind the "Enterprise Carriage Manufacturing Company" manufacture. Send and get their catalogue.

WE commend to the attention of our readers the advertisement of Messrs. J. K. Renaud & Co. This is an old and reliable firm and those living in the country can order their groceries from the city, and be assured of perfect satisfaction when dealing with this house. They pack the goods and deliver them to the railroad or boat free of drayage. A great saving would be effected by any one thus buying their supplies, and both privileges secured. They will fill either large or small orders.

THE fall and winter dress goods of Messrs. E. H. Adams & Bro. could not possibly be all enumerated, but a variety of new things are shown in their advertisement. These goods have lately been selected with great care, and are offered at extremely low prices.

DR. HOFFMAN'S PILLS.—These pills have been before the public for almost ten years, and give perfect satisfaction to those who use them. They are highly spoken of in the West. See advertisement. If you cannot find them at your drug store send to St. Louis for them. Do not forget, and you will be pleased.

EXCELSIOR DISINFECTING FLUID. This powerful disinfectant should be in every house, as it destroys all noxious gases and disagreeable odors. It also prevents the spread of contagious diseases. If your druggist has not got it, write to the St. Louis office for it. In that city it is spoken of very highly, and large numbers of families would not be without it. The price is within the means of everybody. See advertisement.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, Indigestion, depression of spirits and General Debility in their various forms, also as a preventive against Fever and Ague, and other Intermittent Fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic; and as a tonic for patients recovering from fever or other sickness it has no equal.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, chap, chafe or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants, who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

LADIES DELICATE AND FEEBLE.

These languid lassome sensations causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet, that constant drain that is taking from your system all its former elasticity; driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces, rendering you irritable and fretful, can easily be removed by the use of that marvelous remedy Hop Bitters. Irregularities and obstructions of your system are relieved at once, while the special cause of perhaps years are permanently removed. Will you heed this? See "Truth."

WE should not suffer from a cough, when a few doses of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL will cure. Time and money, comfort, health all are saved by it.

Yellow Fever.

Rumors of the appearance of this terrible scourge are rife. The necessity of harmless as its application is shielded by the knowledge of a valuable specific for its prevention in Magnesia combining the Great Liver Regulator, Blood Cleanser, Anti-Bilious Purgative and System Renovator and Antidote for fevers of every form.

THE cordial reception that D. F. Willhoit's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic has received at the hands of the medical profession in Louisiana certainly proves that it is an excellent remedy, and that the composition of it, as publ shed by its proprietors, Whitelock, Finlay & Co., of New Orleans, is indorsed by them. As first Chills and Fever, Dumb Chills and Enlarged Spleen there is none better reposed.

BAKER'S CHOCOLATE, so noted for its nutritive, salutary and delicious qualities, hardly needs any further indorsement after the awards given for its excellence at the leading expositions in this country and Europe. A trial is all that is needed to convince any one of its great merit.

WORM PROOF COTTON.—Mr. L. C. White, of Jasper, Texas, sent to Mr. G. A. Mills, Secretary Galveston Cotton Exchange, two samples of worm-proof lint cotton to be submitted to the classification and quotation committee for their views, etc., the samples being numbered one and two. Mr Mills has kindly sent us samples of the same, which we have received to-day, and which any one is at liberty to examine. We take from the Galves on News of August 2d the following statement, giving the result of the examination by the classification committee, and some interesting facts with regard to this co ton:

The committee, after a careful inspection of the samples, report both as a ties of half length, remarkable strength and very silky. —No. 2 the best. This cotton has been produced by Mr. White after some sixteen or seventeen years of inter and study by amalgamating ordinary cotton with a weed, the weed and his process are his secret. He is now in correspond nce with the Agricultural Depar ment of Washington City, with a view to the Government paying him for his discovery and then making known his process, which he says is so simple that any ten year old child can do it—that its simplicity looks ridiculous to him now. Mr. White further states that the weed with which this cotton is mixed was never known to be eaten by worm or insect of any kind.

The writer examined the cotton growing; the stalks were large and healthy, a brownish red color, the leaf resembling ordinary cotton, with a very rank weed odor; the bolls were larger than ordinary cotton and well filled with lint. In the centre of each boll there is a small pod containing, evidently, the seed of the weed. When the boll is fully opened this pod of seed is also opened, and the seed dropped, leaving the lint cotton in the boll. The bolls will all mature within a few days of each other. This the planter could remedy by planting at different times. Mr. White says the cotton can be picked within one hundred days after planting. Mr. White has taken stalks of ordinary cotton with the cotton worms at work upon them, placed them in and along side of his cotton so that the worms could easily get on his cotton, but in no instance did they eat any of the leaves, stalk or boll of his cotton. He has gathered the worms from other cotton stalks and put them on his cotton with the same result, and feels very confident that worms will never touch it.

Should Mr. White's discovery prove to be what he claims for it, absolutely worm-proof—and upon this point he has no fears—the value and importance of the discovery cannot fully be estimated, especially in the cotton belt.—Galveston News.

TO DRY FLOWERS WITH SAND.—There are many of our brilliant flowers—such as dahlias, zinnias, pinks, geraniums, sweet williams, carnations, gladiolus—which may be preserved so as to retain their color for years. While flowers will not answer for this purpose, nor any succulent plant as hyacinth or cactus.

Take deep dishes, sufficient to allow the flowers to be covered an inch deep in sand. Procure the common white sand such as is use l for scouring purposes; cover the bottom of the dish with a layer half an inch deep and then lay in the flowers, with their stems downward, holding them firmly in place, while you sprinkle more sand over them, until all places between the petals are filled and the dish covered out of sight. A broad dish will accommodate quite a large number. Allow sufficient sand between.

Set the dish in a dry, warm place, where they will dry gradually; and at the end of a week pour off the sand and examine them. If there is any moisture in the sand it must be dried out before being again, or fresh sand may be poured over them the same as before. Some flowers will require weeks to dry, while others will become sufficiently dry to put away in a week or ten days.

By this simple process flowers, ferns, etc., are preserved in their proper shape, as well as in their proper color, which is far better than to press them in books. When arranged in groups or mounted on cards or in little straw baskets, they may be placed in frames under glass.—Home and Farm.

THE JUICE OF THE TOMATO PLANT AS AN INSECTICIDE.—A writer in the Deutsche Gartner Zeitung states that he last year had an opportunity of trying a remedy for destroying greenly and other insects which infests plants. It was not his own discovery, but he found it among other receipes in some provincial paper, the stems and leaves of the Tomato are well boiled in water, and when the liquor is cold it is syringed over plants attacked by insects. It at once destroys black or green caterpillars, etc., and it leaves behind a peculiar odor which prevents insects from coming again for a long time. The writer in question states that he found this remedy far more effectual than fumigating, washing, etc. Through neglect, a house of Camellias had got almost hopelessly infested with black lice; but two syringings with Tomato plant decoction thoroughly cleansed them.

PIG'S HEAD CHEESE.—Having thoroughly cleaned the head, put it into a large kettle of hot, (not boiling) water, and set the kettle over the fire; let it run gently, taking off the scum as it rises; when boiled so that the bones leave the meat readily, take it from the water into a large wooden bowl or trays; take from it every particle of bone, and chop the meat fine and season with salt, pepper and sage of thyme to suit the taste; squeeze a cloth in a colander and set it in a deep dish, put the meat in, and fold the cloth closely over it, lay a weight on which may press equally the whole surface. Let the weight be more or less heavy according as you may wish the cheese to be fat or lean; a heavy weight pressing out the fat, will of course leave the cheese lean.—The Household.

A SINGULAR PLANT.—A curious plant has been discovered in Wisconsin which produces a kind of cotton and flax from the same stalk. It has already been woven into fabric, and, as any article cut out will make as good cloth as can be made from this plant, will make good paper. It has been called the paper plant. It can be planted in the spring and cut in the fall and winter. It bleaches itself while as it stands, and will yield at least three or four tons to the acre. From a single root that was transplanted at Appleton last Spring, grew twenty large stalks, with three hundred and five pods containing the cotton) without seed to seed in each. From this root were obtained seven ounces of pure cotton and over half a pound of flax. It is a very heavy plant, and grows from six to seven feet high.—Philadelphia Times.

YEAST MAKING.—Take a pail of water put about two oz of hops, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one dessert spoonful of salt; boil all together for an hour, then strain the boiling liquid on two heaped tablespoonfuls of flour that prevents it from going sour. When it is lukewarm cork it up tight. To eight lbs of flour use about half a pint of yeast. In the cold weather set a sponge over night and knead it all together in the morning; in the summer you do not require to set a sponge. When you take out the last of the yeast boil fresh hops, and fill the bottle again; by so doing you will always have good yeast. The same quantity of yeast will do for either white or brown bread. For brown bread the dough requires to be madder than for white.—Queensland er.

MAYONNAISE FISH SALAD.—Take about one pound of cold boiled fish, cut but not chop, in pieces about an inch in length. Mix in a bowl a dressing as follows: The yolk of four boiled eggs rubbed to a smooth paste with salad oil; add to these salt, pepper, mustard, two teaspoonfuls of white sugar, and lastly, six tablespoons of vinegar. Beat the mixture until light, and just before pouring it over the fish, stir in lightly the beaten white of an egg. Serve in a glass dish, first mixing half the dressing with the fish, and the remainder spread upon the top, and ornament with blanched lettuce leaves or celery.

THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA OR SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, which is often oppressed, sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and in the top of the shoulder, and sometimes mistaken for rheumatism. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite, sickness, and sometimes with vomiting. The bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternate with pain, and sometimes with a dull, heavy sensation. The head is affected with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is sometimes a pain in the region of the kidneys, and a frequent desire to pass the water, which is often high colored and deposits a sediment on standing. The patient is troubled with a dry cough, sometimes mistaken for consumption. The system becomes much debilitated, subject to frequent attacks of chills and fever, sometimes a slight chilliness, more generally a chill, succeeded by fever, which assumes a typhoid character, with great prostration of mental and physical energy, the blood becomes impure, the whole system is affected, and if the disease is not arrested by the use of proper remedies, Dropsy, Consumption, Epilepsy or Fits, Paralysis, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Fever and Ague, Typhoid Fever, Yellow Fever, Bilious Fever, Inflammation of the Bowels, Piles, Inflammation of the Kidneys, and many other painful diseases will follow.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN cases of Ague and Fever, when used in connection with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this distressing complaint to give this pill a fair trial, and all bilious complaints, and liver complaints, and dyspepsia, they are unrivaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin,
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.
PRICE REDUCED.

THIS GIN has been in use for the past six seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the end of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same amount of seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while economizing steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton, on that account, of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 100 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

IMPROVEMENTS OF THE SAHARA.—For some time past there has been considerable agitation in Europe over some plans for cutting a channel from the Mediterranean into the Desert of Sahara, in order to flood a vast depression that has there been discovered, and return it to its supposed original condition of a landlocked sea. The latest advices from Paris indicate that the conversion of the Desert of Sahara into an inland sea might not, after all, be so much of a blessing to the Continent of Africa as was claimed when the project was first broached. Its shores would be as arid as those of the Mediterranean in Tripoli, and if the climate should change, the date crop, which is the principal support of the natives, would be ruined. The routes of the caravans from Tunis and Algiers to the interior would also be destroyed and the whole inland trade deranged. It is also predicted that the pressure of the mass of water would produce perturbations in the subterranean currents which feed the artesian wells in the oases, and might cause them to fail, and this entail the loss of hundreds of thousands of palm-trees. It is now probable that this project will be abandoned, and a railway from Algeria to the mouth of the Senegal River constructed. The distance from Algiers to Timbuctoo is about 1,600 miles, and the cost of constructing the road is computed at $80,000,000. Soudan contains magnificent rivers, large lakes and innumerable shade-trees. Rice, sugar-cane, cotton and indigo can be easily produced there, and it would be merely a question of time before Algeria and Marseilles would reap the benefit of this cultivation of the Sudan territory. According to surveys made from Affreville to Laghouat, where the Sahara proper begins, there appears to be no more difficulty in the construction of the road than is now met with on the Algerian railways. The French exploring parties have not been further than El Goleah yet, about 220 miles from Laghouat, where a dry valley, known as Oued, stretches to the oasis of El Goleah. The Sahara Valley contains a hard, rocky soil, and the hills, of which at one time were believed to occupy its whole length and breadth cover, it is now known, only the ninth part of its territory. These sandy hills are not even considered obstacles in the construction of a railway, and wherever they are occasionally swept away by the violent winds trifles could be built so as to protect the road. The supply of water for the use of the engines is easily, as at least three trains per day will have to traverse the desert, is what puzzles the minds of those who attempt finding it is railway; but they expect to overcome this by placing on the various trains tanks sufficiently large to contain all the water required during twenty-four hours. A railway across the Sahara, and a tunnel through the Isthmus of Panama, certainly ought to gain for French engineers a reputation for boldness and originality in design, nothing more.—Christian Union.

Dynamite has been used with economy and success in removing the snags which obstruct navigation in the Waikato River, New Zealand. By means of a plain wooden tube having a piece of glass to fit the bottom the part of the snag to be found for the insertion of the charge was easily selected, and especially in the action of the explosive matter urged the stumps were invariably found clean at the bottom of the water hole, leaving a surface as flat as that which would be left by a cross-cut saw.

Since writing the note on the introduction of vegetating spores on Wright and on Dr. Maunder's belief that the spores of the common mushroom never vegetate unless they first pass through the stomach of an animal, Mr. Worthington G. Smith, one of the leading mycologists in England, has published a statement that he has known of an instance where some mushrooms grew on a piece of dead grass. It appears therefore, that the theory must be given up among the rejected in this case, as in so many others.

Some bulbs preserve their vitality for a long while, and instances are on record where valuable plants have been introduced to cultivation from herbarium specimens. Prof. Supton, of the Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, recently exhibited a specimen producing the Mexican sapindus saponaria, which had been dry for over a year. Prof. Supton says the root is used by the Mexican women for ordinary purposes of washing.

There is every probability that the Eastward tunnel will be completed by the end of November. The point now reached on the Arvolo side is 1,281 metres, that on the Chestelmon side 661 metres from the centre of the mountain; and it is expected that the junction of the two galleries will be made some 300 metres from the centre on the Chatillon side.

The number of asteroids has now risen to 201. Several of the missing ones have been rediscovered, among them Eriga, which after being lost for more than twelve years, was found by Peters, some six degrees away from her proper predicted place.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. Its unanimated disease, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic, and other poisonous minerals form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial acid, their own drug poison in the system, producing phthisic, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, Ayer's Ague Cure, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

EDUCATIONAL.

Alabama Conference Female College,
TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA.

THE first session of the next scholastic year will open on MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1879.

Two hundred and two dollars will defray all the regular expenses of board, washing, lights and tuition and incidental fees in the literary departments, for one scholastic year. We make no extra charge for languages, calisthenics, drawing and vocal music in class. We offer good advantages in music and art. We spare no labor nor expense in taking care of the health of our pupils. We have employed the most competent and faithful teachers within the range of our knowledge. We return thanks for the liberal patronage of the past three years, and most respectfully solicit a continuation of the same.

For catalogue, address
JOHN MASSEY, President,
TUSKEGEE, ALA.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

The Lequet-LeRoy Institute

AN KINDERGARTEN, DAY AND BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES, 280 Camp Street. This institution has now reopened under the auspices of the Misses Louise Cecelia W. Sallie La and Corinne, the latter relicts of the late R. G. Riegel, daughters of Judge E. Warren Moise, deceased, successors of Mme Lequet LeRoy, whose good will and right to conduct the school under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the conduct and management of the school. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fatal effects are contemplated among the thousands of weak eyes, deafness, hoarse voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal distortions, and finally ending in consumption. In the first stage only a cure is possible. It may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, safe, certain and pleasant treatment is

FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness.
It does not require long explanations to demonstrate the value of Carbolate of Tar. The most healing remedy ever known to science. Balsams and Gums of the most healing and soothing properties are combined with Pine Tree Tar, that the mere breathing converts the whole system into a dense mass of vapor. This is inhaled (taken right to the diseased part). No Drugs, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. The treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by thousands, who have used it without fail or satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT—Circulars, etc., Sent Free—Sent, Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address, DR. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HOGUN CERTIFICATES.

It is no vile drugged stuff, pretending to be made of wonderful foreign roots, barks, etc., and puffed up by long bogus certificates of pretended miraculous cures, but a simple, pure, effective medicine, made of well-known valuable remedies, that furnishes its own certificates by its cures. We refer to Hop Bitters, the purest and best of medicines. See "Truths" and "Proverbs," in another column. —Adv.

MOUNTAIN MUFFINS.—One quart flour; two teaspoonfuls Kellogg's Baking Powder; a little salt; two eggs; milk enough to form a stiff batter. Pour in the muffin rings, and bake quick.

The Chinese Encyclopedia meets a long-felt want; no family should be without it. It is published in Pekin, and has only 5,020 volumes. Price, $7 500.—Columbia Spectator.

VASELINE.

You may hunt the world over and still will find
A need of the household which brings to the mind
The idea of value more plain to be seen
Than petroleum jelly, the famed Vaseline.

If a cut or a pain, or a wound or a burn
From pencil to scuffalon, the household shall turn,
On the shelf should be found the foe of all pain,
And quiet shall reign in the household again.

If our dearest and fairest are kissed by the sun,
And the touch of his lips is too rough to be borne,
Kind Vaseline comes as sun ally between,
And the cheek takes on velvet it had not else seen.

If the voice it is husky, the throat it is sore,
Take the jelly at once, and the trouble is o'er.
In fact read the circular, and from it glean
All the virtue and claims of the famed Vaseline.

MR. WESLEY AND THE BULL.—In the winter of 1763, during a very hard frost, Mr. Wesley visited Sheerness. His carriage could not cross the ferry, it being frozen over, and several friends went to meet him. When about halfway between the "halfway house" and Sheerness, they saw a bull coming towards them, foaming at the mouth, and a number of men running after it, and calling to the party to get out of the way; but this was impossible, there being a wide moat on both sides of the road. As the bull approached, Mr. Wesley saw their danger, immediately took off his hat, knelt down, and said, "Let us pray." The bull came up, made a dead stand, looking at Mr. Wesley for two or three minutes; it stood perfectly quiet, and seemed to be awed and restrained by a supernatural power. Mr. Wesley was at the head of the party and nearest to the bull, my grandfather and his son Thomas next. The men then came up, and the bull made a rush, passing by them without injuring any one. Mr. Wesley then gave out a hymn, in which all heartily joined.—A Correspondent in the Methodist Recorder.

—A small boy took it into his head to change the name of his dog to Infallibility. The first time his mother heard him call the animal she exclaimed: "Why, Jack, what do you mean by giving the poor beast such a name as that?" "Eh," returned Master Jack; "isn't infallibility a dog-ma?"

—An old bachelor was courting a widow, and both had sought the aid of art to give to their failing hair a darker shade. "That's going to be an affectionate couple," said a wag. "How so?" asked a friend. "Why, don't you see that they are dyeing for each other already?"

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer; and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, therefore it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5; $1 50 accompany the order and balance to be paid when the hair is delivered.

THE GOSPEL, NOT THE PREACHER.—"I want a little money for our preacher." "Our Quarterly Meeting will soon be here; can't you give me a little money for our preacher?" Such is the language in which most of our stewards solicit money for the support of the gospel. We are very much inclined to believe this phraseology should be changed. Money should be solicited and contributed not as a gift to any individual minister, but for the support of the gospel. We owe it to God the Father, we owe it to the Lord the Redeemer, and to the Holy Ghost, we owe it to the church, to our families and to future generations; we owe it to the memory of our sainted dead to support the gospel. The man who pays only to the individual preacher is apt to pay just in proportion as he happens to like or dislike the preacher. Moreover he considers that he is making a gift to the preacher, while he should feel that he is discharging a solemn obligation to God and the church. He can make as many gifts to the pastor as he chooses, but the amount apportioned to each church should be paid to the support of the gospel. It would be better the truth, and have a tendency to a proper education upon the subject to ask for money for the support of the gospel. Let the phrase, "support of the gospel," be in every solicitation for money by the stewards. Stewards as well as ministers may help to educate the people upon this subject.—Georgia Advocate.

TESTIMONIALS FROM WELL-KNOWN PERSONS.

From Mrs. Gen'l Sherman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 21 1879.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very much pleased with the Piano you made for me. It is really a fine instrument in every respect, and is admired by all who have seen and heard it, for its fine tone, richness of touch, and beauty of finish. Many good musicians and distinguished persons have called since it has been in our parlor, and all pronounce it a fine instrument. We ourselves are pleased with it, and shall most cordially recommend it to my friends who may wish to purchase.

I am, very truly and respectfully yours,

ELLEN B. E. SHERMAN,
235 I Street.

St. James, December 27, 1873.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—I am very happy to be able to rank your Pianos among the very best I ever had and know. I think the power and brilliancy of tone required to perform the great pieces of modern and the ancient masters are equal to any I ever had in this country. Hoping that your Pianos will understand our Climate as well as any other manufactured at the North, I shall with pleasure recommend them wherever I have an opportunity. Very respectfully yours,

ANTHONY WIMMER,
Professor of Music, St. Mary Jefferson College, St. James La. (Co. Vent. P. O.)

From the World Renowned Artist, Camilla Urso.

NEW YORK, May 27, 1878.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen—After giving our Pianos a fair trial I am happy to congratulate you upon the excellent qualities you have made. Your instruments possess rare merits, and it gives me much pleasure to recommend them to the public.

Yours truly, CAMILLA URSO.

Extract of Letter from W. H. Aldrich, Esq., Paris.

We are delighted with the Piano. The tone is loud, strong and full, yet soft and mellow.

THE REST OF EVENTIDE.

With wo strong shafts of red and gold the sky
Hid sweet good-morrow to the westering sun;
Across the tops of the hoeing daylight slants;
And gathering mists of evening steal up the land.
The busy world is at rest, for work is done.

Within the old gray hall a watch is still;
All living things alike seek welcome sleep;
And man rests calmly, feeling naught of ill,
Trusting in Him by whose Almighty will
Night by and night they varying hours keep.

But when I fall asleep in the west,
And shadows of the dimly round us creep;
All be equally weary as down we rest,
Like tired children on a father's breast,
"For so He giveth His beloved sleep."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—The Haytien Minister here has received intelligence that another revolution took place at Port au Prince on the 3d inst. The provisional government was deposed and another chosen. The consular office of 1876 was nominated, and the Chambers were called to meet on the 15th inst., to elect a President and amend the constitution.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 23.—The official count of the vote for Governor in the recent State election gives Foster a majority over Ewing, of 17,129. In a total vote of 668,367.

NASHVILLE, Oct. 23.—The Grand Lodge of Good Templars have adopted reports urging that the Legislature be petitioned to pass a stringent prohibition law, making it a criminal offense to make, buy or sell intoxicating liquids to be use as a beverage.

DIXIE, Utah, Oct. 24.—Advices from Park City, Utah, report that Ute Indians and Snakes are on the war path, with about three hundred warriors. They have killed a number of settlers on Ashley Fork, and are coming toward Bronco Lake, on Green river.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 24.—A Tucson dispatch says:—A special to the Star from Silver City, New Mexico, 19 day, states that no depredations have been committed by Indians since the 15th.

There are reports that the Victoria band divided; one party going to the other then of the Florida mountains and the other toward Barro mountains. Captain Boyle has issued a warning to all settlers on the Upper Gila to be on the alert, but there is danger feared.

Major Morrow is in hot pursuit of Victoria with three hundred soldiers. The citizens of Silver City have organized a band of fifty men, well armed and ready to move at any minute.

YANKTON, D. T., Oct. 21.—Fifty-six lodges of Minneconjou Sioux, under Chief Burnt Face, left the Cheyenne agency last Friday, and on the 11th of the month Touch-the-Clouds, of the Eleventh battery, is in pursuit.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 25.—The following telegram was sent us this morning by Hon. A. S. Marks, Governor, Nashville, Tenn.:

The epidemic is declared closed this day. The camps will be broken up Monday morning. I thank your excellency on behalf of the people of Memphis for the material assistance rendered, and for the further and prompt aid if necessary.

We have sufficient in de to carry us through, and will not be compelled to draw on you for any.

C. T. POTTER,
President Taxing District.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 25, 10 A. M.—Another heavy frost fell last night. A thin coating of ice formed on the pools of water in the suburbs. Thermometer placed by the signal service officer on the ground as a test marked 32½ degrees at four o'clock this morning.

The steamer Hard Cash, from St. Louis, arrived this morning at nine o'clock, being the first boat to land at the wharf since July 21st. The weather is clear and cool.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 25.—Total cases reported for the week, 31; white, 21; colored, 10; total to date, 1511; total deaths from yellow fever for the week, 14; white, 12; colored, 2; total to date, 470. The Howards have eighty-five nurses on duty attending seventy-two white and nineteen colored families. This includes those sent to Forest City, Arkansas. One case was reported this morning, Alfred Barnez. Two deaths have occurred; W. M. Johnson, colored, at Bunyon station, and Joseph Lea, city, at the hospital. The following is the official announcement of the Board of Health declaring the epidemic ended:

"Owing to the fall in temperature within the past three days, there having been two good frosts, with prospect of a continuation of cold weather, the board of health hereby declares the epidemic of 1879 at an end; and announces that it is but little danger to be apprehended from yellow fever by absentees or other persons coming into the city, provided the instructions published September 28th have been complied with in regard to ventilation of houses, bedding, clothing, etc. It takes this occasion to advise people on their return to avoid infected places. There are a few cases of yellow fever yet in the city; a few cases may yet develop, but by ordinary prudence there is no danger of the disease now spreading from that source. By order of the board of health.

"J. CHANDLER, M. D., Secretary."

NASHVILLE, Oct. 27.—McKendree church, of the Southern Methodists, on Church-street, burned last night. Loss $30,000; insurance $25,000.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 27, Noon.—There was a general resumption of business this morning in all branches of trade.

Stores that had been closed since last July were opened by the proprietors, who have returned to the city, and the wheels of commerce are once again moving rapidly along.

Through trains on all railroads, excepting the Little Rock route, arrived and departed. The streets presented their wonted animated appearance.

The cotton exchange was open to visitors and members. Regular quotations, receipts, shipments and stock will be posted as heretofore.

But one case of fever is reported. Mrs Rosa Volkmar, who was stricken three days ago.

Weather pleasant.

Evening.—No new cases or deaths since morning.

Camp Marks was broken up to-day, and the people moved into the city. Camp Father Mathew will be broken up to-morrow.

But one nurse has been sent out by the Howards since last night, the sick person being Miss Bettie Bragg, residing fourteen miles east of the city.

Two hundred passengers arrived by the Louisville train this afternoon. The first through train on the Charleston railroad will arrive at midnight.

The Howards received $300 to-day.

Dr. J. B. Cummings telegraphs from Forest City, Ark., that two suspicious cases have developed there. The people are resting under quarantine regulations, and desire to return to their homes.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, Oct. 22.—It is officially reported that three-fifths of colored slaves imported have surrendered at Los Indios.

MANILA, Oct. 25.—The commission having in charge the subject of slavery have adopted, by a vote of twelve to six, to-day a report providing that slavery be abolished in Cuba, but that the negroes who are enfranchised shall, during the maximum period of five years, continue to work for their present master, receiving no less than ten pastres per month.

MADRID, Oct. 25.—Ministerial Journal, the Political says Senor Canovas Del Castello, like Martinez Campos, favors the immediate abolition of slavery in Cuba.

A terrible cyclone burst on Friday night at Membrillon, near Malaga. Forty houses were flooded. Twenty-four collapsed and two persons were drowned.

LONDON, Oct. 25.—Telegrams from Berlin and Vienna concur in stating that the alliance between Germany and Austria is not a written treaty, signed by the two emperors, but is in form of a memoranda, which Prince Bismarck took Count Andrassy exchanged and submitted to their respective sovereigns, who approved thereof.

LONDON, Oct. 25.—A dispatch to the Standard says:—General Gough's brigade has arrived here to-day to re-enforce the force holding the entrenched camp at Sultar Garden, the command of which, report states, the Ameers surround by thousands of Mongols.

He signals for help can hold his own, but from the heavy firing it is clear that he is badly engaged. General Gough will march for Sultar Garden Monday. If the position should prove untenable, it will be evacuated, but if the enemy dispute the line will remain at Sultar Garden and General Gough's brigade return to Cabul.

Advances to the same paper state that four regiments have been changed for completely by the massacre of the British embassy.

There has been fighting between Ali Kheyl and Sultar Garden, in which the enemy was defeated with heavy loss, and communications have since been re-opened.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

MONTGOMERY HILL, ALA., Oct. 18.—This is my second year on this circuit (Stockton) and the Lord has given us many evidences of his favor. Last year about forty members were added to the church. This year also we have had, from time to time, refreshing seasons from the presence of the Master. I have just closed a profitable meeting at Deans. Six accessions to the church, membership revived. A new church in prospect. Two camp-meetings to hold. The collections ordered by the Conference are being looked after, and though the finances are rather low, yet we hope to be able to make a respectable report at the end of the year. Congregations good and appreciative of the word. Health good. Crops good.

A. J. COLEMAN, P. C.

GUNTERSVILLE, ALA., Oct. 20.—We have lately had a revival in the Guntersville station—two or three conversions, and the membership greatly refreshed. Rainy weather. Health good. Crops about an average, with, perhaps, an improvement in the financial condition of the country.

J. W. NEWMAN.

RENFROE CIRCUIT, ALA., Oct. 21.—I have had two meetings since my last communication, which were "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Twenty-two accessions, and quite a number of conversions. Spiritual condition of the circuit good. Finances a little behind. Have raised the money to build a new church.

J. D. SIMPSON, P. C.

GOSHEN CIRCUIT, ALA., Oct. 25.—I closed a meeting at Sister Springs last night. It lasted six days. Twenty-six joined the church, and there was about the same number who professed religion. A part of the time the weather was very bad, but the congregations were very large. The rains have damaged cotton very much. The health of the country is very good.

C. MOSLEY, Pastor.

MISSISSIPPI.

MAYERSVILLE, MISS., Oct. 21.—The first sixteen days of October were remarkably warm. It is cooler now. Cotton is being gathered and sent to market very rapidly. I have not found a cabin vacant nor an acre of land uncultivated on account of the negro "exodus." Many people think the brokerage charged on cotton sold in New Orleans is sheer robbery. The weather is dry. Health is generally good. Churches and pastoral charges are more or less prosperous. In almost every part of this district good results have evidently attended and followed the preaching of the word. We gratefully acknowledge great blessings of many kinds this year.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

DEKALB CIRCUIT, MISS., Oct. 22.—New Hope camp meeting, on this circuit, commenced on Friday, the tenth instant, and closed on the sixteenth. The weather was unfavorable, though we had a good corps of preachers—some of the best in the country. Our meeting was not the best—about seventeen conversions, ten accessions to the church. Our accommodations were full and free. The tent-holders did their duty well. We think a good state of religious feeling prevails on our work. Four men were licensed at our last Quarterly Conference—one in his forties, a son of a preacher, going off to school to prepare for the ministry.

A. D. NICHOLSON.

LOUISIANA.

NATCHITOCHES STATION, LA., Oct. 21.—I closed a four days' service here last night; was assisted by Rev. R. S. Isbell, of Columbia, who preached with great earnestness and success, and won the affections of our people. Fifteen professed conversion, and twelve were added to the church. Some of the conversions were unusually bright and satisfactory. A deep interest is manifest. Several others speak of joining soon. We collected $25 from the Sabbath-school last Sabbath for the completion of the Sunday-school room. The basement of the church will be finished this week, and will be occupied next Sunday for the first time. My beautiful church edifice at Independence will be finished this year. I do not know much about the crops, and less about politics.

MISCELLANEOUS

LOLA, TEXAS, Oct. 16.—We have had the severest drouth here known for many years. No general rain since May 5. Creeks are dry and rivers fordable, and in some instances scarcely running. Light showers have fallen lately, enough to enable many to plant turnips and sow small grain, but not water for stock or household purposes yet. Religion has flourished. Great ingathering of souls all over Texas, and still the work goes on. The Sunday law is approved and enforced in most of the State.

Notes from Nashville.

MR. EDITOR: We are enjoying a visit from the Rev. James Osgood Andrew Clark, of Georgia. His polished name bewrays his origin. Dr. Clark is abroad in the interest of Wesley Monumental Church, Savannah, Ga. Our last General Conference recognized the brother and his meritorious undertaking. Coming with authority, he visited England, and was kindly received by our British brethren, who heartily indorse the enterprise. He obtained much valuable information concerning the Wesleys when he was in England, literary relics, etc., which will furnish the Monumental volume, which he has in press, the proceeds of which will be devoted to the Wesley Monumental Church. The doctor visited the Tennessee Conference, which heartily espoused his cause, and pledged valuable aid. We hope every Conference in the connection (why not every Conference in the world?) will do the like. Let us have one great ecumenical monument of Wesley, and let it be this Savannah Church. Dr. Clark delivered an eloquent discourse on Wesley and Methodism in McKendree Church last night, and in the afternoon he preached a masterly sermon on Christ as the bright ness of the Father's glory and the express image of His person. It was a fine specimen of exegetical preaching. The whole of that wonderful chapter (Heb. 1) being subjected to a keen and thorough analysis. There was no mitthashal theology in that discourse. How different from the Bashnellism which I find just read in a sermon by a Northern Methodist preacher, published in the New York Methodist, which seems to be the broad church organ of Northern Methodism. Just think of Pattipassianism, Theopaschism, Bushnell atonements and the like in the Methodist pulpit and press! You may well ask whither are we drifting? I can assure you there was no drifting from the old landmarks in Dr. Clark's discourse. There was no Sabellian or Swedenborgian confounding of the persons of the adorable Trinity, but a faithful echo of the beloved apostle's message: "The Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world." The Father's co-equal and co-eternal Son, begotten of the Father, in His divine nature, from all eternity, he, not the Father, for us men and our salvation became incarnate, and thus God was made man for man to die! While the preacher was eloquently discoursing on this great mystery, the sublime strains of Dr. Watts rushed into my mind:

Seraphs, with elevated strains,
Circle the throne around,
And move in charming the starry plains
With an immortal sound.

Hark, how beyond the narrow bounds
Of time and space they run,
And speak in most unlike tongues,
The Godhead of the Son.

How on the Father's breast He lay,
The darling of His soul,
Infinite years before the day,
Or heavens began to roll.

And now they suit the lofty tune,
And sweeter notes they play,
And bring the Eternal Godhead down,
To dwell in humble clay!

By the way, Watts was not tinctured with any semi-Arian pre-existence of the humanity of Christ—a day-dream which he had aforward for awhile—when he wrote that immortal "Song," and that other:

Ere the blue heavens were stretched abroad,
From everlasting was the Word;
With God he was, the Word was God,
And must divinely be adored.

But whither have I been betrayed? Dr. Clark explored the university, looking at everything with a cultured and practical eye. He expressed great satisfaction with what he saw. We hope he will repeat his visit.

By the way, the gymnasium is approaching completion; the edifice for the civil engineering department is well under way, and the deep and broad excavations are made for the foundations of new Wesley Hall. Everything is moving on in the normal way, except that Dr. Lipscomb is not yet in his place. I received a beautiful and touching letter from him the other day. He awaits the first frost to loose him and let him go. He wants to be in his professorial chair, and we want him there, too.

Dr. West opened his commission yesterday to an immense congregation at McKendree. God grant him a prosperous year! Bro. Sawrie has entered on his work as presiding elder of Nashville district. He is an indefatigable worker. Few men in the connection have done more work, perhaps, with less pay, than our old friend. Great success attend him.

The Rev. J. B. McNeilly has entered on the pastoral charge of Morse Memorial Church, Presbyterian. He preached a most seasonable and salutary sermon yesterday on John vi. 68: "Lord, to whom shall we go?" From last the words of eternal life. The search the times in which that question may well be asked; and who other answer can be given? The preacher, in forcible style, showed that no other answer can be given. To go away from Christ is to wander in apostasia amid the blackness of darkness forever. I conducted a part of the service while Bro. McNeilly went to the First Presbyterian Church to baptize a child of the pastor, Dr. Hoyt. We are neighborly here. The people at West End, including the Vanderbilt set, are delighted with the return of their pastor, the Rev. J. W. Hill, and his excellent wife. What could we do without them? They tread in the footsteps of their excellent predecessors, the Rev. William Green and his like-minded wife.

Will you be kind enough to inform your readers that Dr. Young is the publisher of the Quarterly Review? I receive a postal card from a late subscriber in Georgia, requesting me to stop his Review. I am not the publisher. The committee wish me to act as managing editor, and communications are pouring in upon me from various quarters urging me to render that service. I have heretofore, by request of the late managing editor and members of the committee, furnished several articles to the Review, and corrected the proofs of several others. Since I have not read, nor have I read any animadversions on the work. The book agent wished me to do what I might be asked to do for him, as the managing editor lived at a distance, and we had no professional proof-reader at the Publishing House. I never sought any office, though I have shunned some offices for sufficient reasons, but I am willing to do all I can to promote the literature of the connection, to which I have devoted my life. I may just say that the committee, with Dr. Young as publisher, were determined to make the Review a success. You may tell the friends to send on their subscriptions, but my sheet is full. God bless you.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Oct. 20, 1879.

Trip to Salem Camp Ground.

MR. EDITOR: We left the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Scranton. Our course is north, ascending on the east bank of Pascagoula river. A delightful ride of four miles ended at the parsonage (a model one by the way) now occupied by Rev. George F. Thompson and family, at Moss Point. On Tuesday morning, October 1, Rev. John Ellis, P. E., joined our company. We crossed a bold, full stream, with an ugly name, "Big river," at Rapid's ferry, leaving the city of hills Moss Point behind us. Twenty-two miles over a level pine region, now lay before us. Not a cypher seen during the trip. But was surprised at the numerous cottage homes of the farmers that flung the rural and quiet lifestyle. Agricultural is the richest county state. It consisted of seventy-three and odd, and owed its existence simply as the center of a county. The jail only remains. We passed in silence this grim sentinel, that suggests the fact: Sin hath its wages. Two miles more bring us to Salem. Here, thirty-one years ago, the Methodists pitched their tents, and gathered under the shade of native forest trees to worship God, and without scarcely a single missed year. Their children have annually left their homes to engage in the feast of tabernacles. Some one informed the world that these camp-fires were in a deplorable condition, that until his church sent him down here the gospel of Jesus Christ had not been preached. That correspondent could not have heard of old Salem. In this section the heroic Richmond Nolley came with the message of life when the only roads were bridle paths for pack horses.

Rev. Miles Harper, another pioneer, an Abernathy, a Nash, a Moody, a Pipkin, and many other now sainted men of God, made these woods vocal with their clarion notes of "Behold the Lamb of God!" and "Come ye to the waters." Why, sir, the songs now sounding in my ears, while I write, with their peculiar tunes, speak of Primitive Methodism with an emphasis that is unmistakable. That correspondent did not know, or else he ignores the Methodist labors of over a half century. The attendants of this meeting are now, some of them, gray-haired sires and mothers who made their first visit in childhood. The gospel of Christ is to them an "old, old story." One good brother told me that for twenty-five years he has made his conch shell bugle to summon the faithful to prayer and service. O, what a record such a camp ground must have made in fifty years! While the camp fires died out in Mississippi, during and after the war, here the horn sounded, camp fires were annually replenished, the gospel preached and souls converted. Bethesda's angel has never failed to trouble the waters of the pool established here in the long ago. The stranger will be quick to note the unostentatious and bounteous hospitalities rendered, the simplicity of manners, and style of dress, the hearty use of vocal powers in the matter of song, then the patience that listens to a fervid sermon of perhaps forty or one hundred and twenty minutes' duration, followed by the benediction, and still refusing to pull out its watch, but rather continues in holy song, praising God long after the weary preacher has passed into the realms of dreamland. It is a real luxury to preach to this people, as the widow full scope of application, a hundred beatitudes for joy of the imagination, and nobody shocked when your soul feels and behaves itself, glory to God, comes out in clarion notes. Mr. Editor, put Salem camp meeting down on your list of appointments for next year. The audience is seated in close proximity to the speaker; the attention is unwearied, the word is received as we come far country. Several new tents erected this year, evincing the fact of undiminished determination to let the gospel have its appointed work. Advances are from the secured you a new audience of twenty-six souls of more all January 1, 1880.

R. H. BOWER.

"That Disciple Whom Jesus Loved." John xxi. 7.

BY PROF. AUSTIN PHELPS.

Some Christians do not cultivate the temperament of prayer. Devout they are more fitfully in some temperaments than in others, yet in all is the principle of unity. Evidently it is the thing that prayer is in its nature emotive. It is an expression of feeling, not mere words of intelligence, though in the case of profound and thoughtful minds, and to its most perfect type, the abstract feeling. To enjoy prayer we must be trained by it. Every-where we must be used to the sensibility of which it is the expression. Devotion should shun spontaneously from an emotive state, rather than be forced out in fits of sensibility or great occasions.

The reason that this is often overlooked by spiritual guides who live, in other respects, are not visibly defective. They do not possess desires which may very naturally be expressed in prayer. They have not deep refusal of feeling from which prayer would be a natural growth. The religion of some of us, whatever may be true of our opposites in temperament is not sufficiently a religion of emotion.

We love not sufficiently cherished, our Christian sensibilities. We have not cultivated habits of feeling deeply which are buoyant in their working. We have not entrapped our hearts that a certain emotive current is always choicest, welling up from the depths of the soul, like the springs of the deepest sea. We think more than we believe. We believe more than we have faith in. Our faith is too calm, too cool, too single-sighted.

Our theory of the Christian life is that of a clear creed, but a dull head, not of a great heart, in which deep calls unto deep. This clear headed type of piety has invaluable uses, if it be tempered with meekness, with gentleness with, shades of mercy. But we must confess that it does not always bear well the grill which the world gives it in selfish usage. It too often grows hard, solitary. It reminds one of a swan with a "cold heart," whose blood never ran warm, whose eye was always glassy, whose touch was always chilling, to whom sympathy was always like an east wind. Such a religious temperament as this will never do for the foundation of a life of loving communion with God. We must have more of the earnest nature of the loved disciple, more of the spirit of the victims of Patmos.

Our Northern and Occidental constitution often needs to be restrained from an excess of phlegmatic wisdom. I must think that we have something to learn from the more impulsive working of the Southern and the Oriental mind. I must believe that it was not without a wise forecast of the world's necessities, and of insight into human nature all around, that God ordained that the Bible should be constructed in the East, and by the inspiration of minds, of an Eastern stock and discipline, whose imaginative faculty could conceive such a poem as the song of Solomon, and whose emotive nature could be broken up like the fountains of a great deep. I must anticipate that an improved symmetry of character will be imparted to the experience of the church, and more of the beauty of holiness will adorn her courts, when the Oriental world shall be converted to Christ, and Ethiopia shall stretch out her hands unto God.

Our unimpassioned, inchurn, and often cloudy temperament in religion, does need an infusion of the piety which will grow up in those lands of thorns. Such an infusion of the Oriental life-blood into the stock of our Christian experience, would bring us into closer sympathy with the types of sanctification represented in the Scriptures. It would be like streams from Lebanon to our cultivation. We need it to render the Psalms of David, for instance, a natural expression of our devotions. We need a culture of sensibility, which shall demand these Psalms as a medium of utterance. We need habits of feeling, disciplined, indeed, not effervescent, not mystic, but, on the other hand, not crushed, not fearful of emotion, not bereaved of speech. We need a sensitiveness to the objects of our faith, which shall create desire for the objects of prayer, not passionate, not devoid of self-possession, but fluent and self-forgetful in its earnestness, so that it shall have more of the grace of a child in its outgoings of such an experience. Intercourse with God in prayer would be the necessary expression. It could find no other so fit. Joy in that intercourse would be like the swellings of Jordan.—From The Still Hour.

Pacific Conference.

This body met at Sacramento, Cal., October 8-13, Bishop Keener presiding. We clip the following items and appointments from the Pacific Methodist:

W. F. Compton and R. F. Alden were appointed fraternal delegates to the Conference of the Methodist E. Second Church. H. A. Henderson and H. H. Avery were appointed delegates to the Presbyterian Synod of the Pacific; L. C. Rentro, delegate to the Grand Lodge I. O. O. F.; and J. C. Simmons, corresponding Sunday-school secretary.

It was determined to hold the next annual session of the Conference at San Jose.

Saturday night, it rained. And, notwithstanding, a fair audience gathered to witness and participate in the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Church Missionary Society. Rev. J. T. Pedder, past treasurer, read a statement of the finances, in addition to the society. The secretary presented his yearly report, in which was given full showing of the society's progress and accomplishments. Rev. C. Simmons was elected president, Rev. W. F. Compton, vice-president; Rev. George Sim, secretary; Rev. J. T. Pedder, treasurer. Bishop Keener delivered the address, and fired the hearts of his audience by the powerful appeal in behalf of the Church Missionary Society. The collection of nearly two hundred dollars was the result.

On Saturday Martin V. Howard was ordained deacon, and W. H. Howard ordained elder.

Reports were made by the statistical secretary, Book Boards of Finance, Committee on Books and on Education. The report showed the total church membership in the Conference to be 6,042; number of ministers, 89; number of Sunday schools, 59, with a membership of 3,770; number of churches, 72; value of churches, $46,500; value of parsonages, $ 7,275; value of other church property, $11,150.

W. M. Prohaska was granted a location at his own request.

W. R. Richardson, transferred to South Carolina Conference; L. S. Boniel, transferred to the Columbia Conference.

TO THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—You will please elect one representative each to attend the meeting of the Conference Society, to be held at Meridian on Saturday of the Conference session. Let all dues be collected, and all money in the treasury of the auxiliary societies be sent to the treasurer of the Conference Society by the first week in November, that we may make a full report.

Mrs. Annie DeMoss, of Vicksburg, is treasurer.

The officers of the Conference Society are expected to be present, whether they are delegates or not.

MRS. C. H. GALLOWAY, Pres.
A. E. LIGHTFOOT, Cor. Sec. of Conf. Soc.

NOTICE TO THE PRESIDING ELDERS OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—The presiding elders are most earnestly requested to send me the names of delegates and alternates elected to our approaching annual session. Ministers who intend to bring their wives will please report same also.

I trust that the brethren will give this matter their immediate attention, and thus avoid putting the minor delegated to the inconvenience of having to provide for any one after all his arrangements have been made.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"LET NOT YOUR HEART BE TROUBLED."

BY INVALID.

"Let not your heart be troubled;" O words of love and cheer!
They fall like sweetest music upon the listening ear.
They bring me rest and comfort at midnight's solemn hour,—
However loud life's tempests, I feel their soothing power.

"Let not your heart be troubled;" those words of Jesus bring Strength for each day of conflict, and to them I will cling.
They whisper to my spirit, when I in anguish cry,
Oh! had He never said this my heart would faint and die.

"Let not your heart be troubled;" believe and trust in God;
This soothes when I am wearied, with deep affliction's rod.
"Let not your heart be troubled," tho' He who pays should take,
He only wounds to heal us—no bruised reed will He break.

"Let not your heart be troubled," tho' all the world should frown,
The patient and the faithful shall wear the victor's crown.
And Oh! the Saviour's promise, "Ask and ye shall receive."
I've found Him true, and faithful—Oh! who could ever believe?

Even tho' He now should slay me, yet will I trust in Him,—
I'll follow where He leads me, till life and night grow dim.

"Let not your heart be troubled," would all the world could know,
Those cheering words of Jesus, in weeping ones to flow.
Would that all hearts now troubled with sorrow, pain and care,
Would flake to the Saviour—who would their sorrows share—
Would trust in all will Jesus that ever faithful Friend,
Who spoke, ere He returns, the Comforter to send.

Is Slavery Scriptural?

MR EDITOR: Slavery implies more than the ownership of the time of the servant, but absolute control over the body and the soul of the slave. Exodus xxi, 20: "And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die, etc; notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished; for he is his money." This interpretation is according to the doctrine of slavery as taught in the sacred Scriptures. Revelation xviii, 13: "And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men." Jeremiah ii, 14: "Is Israel a servant? is he a home born slave?" First Timothy vi, 1: "Let as many servants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honor, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed." Ephesians vi, 5: "Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ; not with eye service, as men-pleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart; with good will doing service, as unto the Lord, and not to men." In the passages quoted the apostle not only recognizes governmental authority, but makes the service rendered by the slave to the master a means of grace, not only binding the body, but the conscience, to obedience, by the phrase: "Whatsoever service any man render, it is unto the Lord and not to men." Next we notice the spirit and temper in which the apostle requires this obedience to be rendered. Titus ii, 9: "Exhort servants to be obedient unto their masters, and to please them well in all things; not answering again; not purloining, but showing all good fidelity." Ephesians vi, 7: "With good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men." It seems to be clear that the obedience of the slave is made a matter of conscience, and consequently could not by a possibility, be wrong. We quote again, First Timothy vi, 2: "And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort." The above is said by Paul to Titus to be sound doctrine.—Titus ii, 1. We argue, further, slavery to be a divine institution, from the fact that the patriarchs, prophets and priests held slaves. From Abraham, all along down the line, to the advent of our Saviour, these owners of slaves were the ones through whom God communicated His will to man. With Abraham He established His covenant; to Moses He gave His Law, upon Mount Sinai; and David He declared to be a man after His own heart, etc. The priest whose office it was to enter into the "Holy of Holies" held and bought slaves. See Leviticus xxii, 11: "But if the priest buy any soul with his money, he shall eat of it, and he that is born in his house; they shall eat of his meat." These men enjoyed such intimate communion with God, their being slave holders, we conclude, could not be wrong. We further argue that our Saviour, who was manifested to destroy the works of the devil, and to restore our fallen humanity, was out-spoken against sin in every form. But not one word do we see uttered by Him condemnatory of slavery as an institution. He recognized the authority of government and of law, and enjoined obedience among all classes, the high and the low. But the abuse of authority He condemned everywhere in unmeasured terms. Hence He commanded the people to "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things which are God's." And in the relations of religious life the child is exhorted to be obedient to the parent; the parents not to provoke their children to wrath, etc. The servant is exhorted to be "obedient to their masters according to the flesh, not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but with singleness of heart, as unto the Lord." And to the masters to "forbear threatening, knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven." Exodus xxi, 20: "And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand, he shall be punished." The only intelligent reason that Christ did not condemn slavery as a sin was that it was an institution of God, as we find in Genesis ix, 20: "And he said, Blessed be the Lord God of Shem; and Canaan shall be His servant." And, again, we find the principle recognized and clearly stated by the apostle, Galatians iv, 1: "Now I say, That the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all." Where it is asserted that the child and the servant are minors, and are held as such until the maturity of the child, but no intimation that the minority of the servant ever ceases, which is expressed fully in the words, "Servant of servants shall thou be to thy brethren." Leviticus xxv, 46: "And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a possession; they shall be your bond men for ever." The phrase "forever" in this place, evidently includes all future time. The apostle tells us, in First Timothy vi, 3: "If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strife of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness; from such withdraw thyself." Dear reader, shall I apologize for what I have quoted from the Holy Scriptures? No, rather when the Lord speaks let the earth be silent. Revelation xxii, 18, 19: "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city."

G. F. THOMPSON.

Camp Meetings.

Dr. Parker, in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of July 3 says: "Camp meetings are a great public blessing, purifying and benefiting society, and arousing and building up the church." This witness is true. I write to exhort the people of Grove Hill, Jackson, Suggsville and Coffeeville, in Clarke county, Ala., to camp at Union camp ground next year, and see that Dr. Parker is right. If the people of the four places mentioned above, distant eight, ten, fifteen and twenty-two miles from the camp ground respectively, will build and occupy tents there next year, many others at intermediate points will quickly follow suit, and a permanent camp ground will be built up, where very profitable meetings will be held each year. Already a commodious tabernacle has been erected. The present year there were only five or six tenters on the ground, consequently the meeting was not as profitable as it might have been. It was a good meeting though, and the four tenters who remained to the close of the meeting the last morning of the meeting decided to hold another camp meeting next year.

There is no country from the Chattahoochie river to the Mississippi like where the conditions are more favorable for a successful camp meeting than Clarke county, Ala. In Dale county, Ala., at a place called China Grove, camp meetings are held every year. In a country no richer in material resources, nor with a better type of Methodism, than Clarke county, Ala. In 1872 there were about forty plank tents, besides numerous cloth tents, booths and covered wagons, at China Grove. Thirty-one preachers and several thousand people were in attendance, and the conversions numbered nearly a hundred. The same kind of a meeting is quite possible at Union camp ground, Clarke county, Ala. The trouble and expense of tenting at camp meeting is not greater than is incurred by every hospitable family in the neighborhood, and at the time of a protracted meeting.

Let a few reasons be stated why a camp meeting may be expected to produce good results:

1. The camp meeting attracts the people for a considerable distance around to the place, and brings many within the range of gospel preaching who otherwise have not been induced to listen to preaching.

2. The camp meeting secures the services of ministers, who come to preach and labor, with a view to immediate results. Preachers love to go to a place where they have the privilege of preaching to large congregations of awakened listeners. And, when so many preachers attend, the most useful are selected to occupy the pulpit, and thus the best of preaching is assured.

3. The brethren and sisters who can sing and pray are brought together, and by concentrated effort much good is accomplished. What grand singing! Oh, it is soul-inspiring to hear the songs of Zion lifted up upon the united and harmonious voices of hundreds of people filled with the Spirit! It seems like heaven to me. And when many believing souls unite prayer is fervent and effectual to an extent rarely realized.

4. The experience meetings at camp meeting are very profitable. And here, let me say to the good people living within a few miles of the camp ground, you will enjoy yourself more, and do more good by camping on the ground, and attending experience meetings in the morning, and grove prayer meetings in the evening, than you can possibly do by going to and from your homes. Camp on the ground, brethren.

Let every family in the whole country, for twenty-five miles round, begin at once preparations to camp on the ground at the next meeting. Let every family provide for itself and the orphan children living near, and the meeting will be self-sustaining, and not at all burdensome to any. Go then, brethren, constructents, booths, etc, or go with covered wagons, or any way that suits you best, but go. Camp on the ground. Your children and neighbors will be converted, the Sunday-schools and prayer and class meetings will have a better attendance, family prayer will become more prevalent, vice and irreligion will receive a check, and the heaven of spiritual religion will pervade society.

Thus camp meetings prove indeed "a public blessing, purifying and benefiting society, and arousing and building up the church." People of Clarke county, consider the above, and build up a rousing camp ground at Union.

The Slanderer.

MR EDITOR: In the long catalogue of wicked men there is none more deserving of public and universal censure and condemnation than the slanderer. He possesses in himself some of the lowest and foulest traits of a depraved character. His very pathway is made slimy by the filth of his life. Like a maggot, he lives and fattens on putrid matter. Like a buzzard, he consumes carrion. As a man, he evinces, at least, three prominent depraved characteristics:

1. He is a robber. By his foul tongue he robs the innocent and pure of his or her good name. This robbery is meaner than that of taking the goods of another, because in taking the money or goods of another he obtains that which impoverishes the other and maketh himself the richer; but in stealing the good name of another, by slander, he makes his victim vastly poorer, and does not add to the wealth of himself.

"There is a thief in this man which no charm can tame,
Or kindly publishing his neighbor's shame."

Then

"On eagle's wings immortal scandals fly,
While virtuous actions are but born and die."

He steals and robs for the naked love of stealing, and being generally mean.

2. He is a coward. Being a coward, he conceals and hides himself from the presence of him whom he would injure, and utters in the dark, or behind his back, that which he has not the courage to say to his face. Like a most cowardly and contemptible bushwhacker, he hides in the woods, and shoots his victim as he passes down the highways of duty and honor. All brave and true men hate and contemn the dastardly and cowardly bushwhacker. So all upright and pure men despise and abhor the more dastardly and cowardly slanderer.

3. He is a dog. The dog will slip up behind and bite you. It is the cowardly dog that will do this. But the slanderer will get on your track, and slip and steal along, till he gets a sly chance, and then bites and runs. Well may he run, for Conscience makes cowards of all such. The Apostle Paul gives special advice against this class of men. He says: "Beware of dogs." The meanest of all dogs is the man-dog. He cannot enter into the kingdom of God on high. St. John says: "For without are dogs." The slanderer is not fit for heaven, and ought to be spurned from all good society, and is spurned from the household of faith.

Just Home from the Dance.

"Oh! mother, mother, I am so sick! My head aches so bad. I have danced myself to death."

These words were hurriedly spoken by a young lady as she entered her mother's apartment, worn down and sick, from the midnight dance.

Her mother said to her: "Go to your room, my child, and sleep, and when you awake you will feel better." But there was no rest, no sleep for the poor girl. She grew rapidly and violently ill, and in a short time that beautiful form which was seen whirling and whizzing around in the gloomy dance was borne away, cold, lifeless, dead, to the silent grave, and buried in the ground.

The above incident was related to me by a most estimable lady of one of my charges, as having actually occurred not far from where she then lived.

What a solemn warning this should be to all dancing young ladies!

If danger to one's health, however, were the only danger to which young ladies are exposed in the ball-room, it were not so bad after all, for with many persons a vigorous constitution might resist such violations of the laws of health, and carry them safely through. But the practice of dancing involves the ruin of both soul and body in the world to come.

In an experience of twenty-five years as an itinerant preacher, I have never known a single dancing church-member that was worth a nickel to the church. Their influence is harmful, against religion, and all such should either give up the dance, or withdraw from the church.

I was delighted, not long since, to hear an excellent Episcopalian sister say: "I have given up dancing." She had been led to believe there was no impropriety, even in church-members, dancing. But her conscience began to trouble her about it, and so she has abandoned the practice. Would that the lady members of all the churches might come to the same conclusion.

The young ladies of this country, and a few old ladies, are responsible for all the evils growing out of this custom. If they would give it up, the men, I think, would not be so foolish as to dance alone. The proximity of the two in the ball room and in the dance gives to it all the fascination there is in it. Separate the sexes, and you kill the dance.

Young lady, your presence in the ball-room may be the ruin of some young man, and he may be your own dear brother. After the excitement of the dance is over he may not return to his quiet home and to rest as you do.

The ball-room, the bar-room, the gambling room, are all places which alike sweep along close by the confines of the Infernal regions. The more constantly and passionately they are patronized, either by male or female, the more certainly and rapidly do they lead down to the world of fire and ruin, and death.

O that our young people might take warning from the unfortunate young lady referred to at the top of this article, and leave off these follies, and turn their feet unto the testimonies of the Lord.

Church-members in particular should desist from dancing, or go at once to their pastor, and request their names to be erased from the church-roll.

Alike, and Yet so Different.

There is beauty that "makes us glad," while there is beauty that strangely makes us sad! There is love that is almost as tender and unselfish as the love Christ gave His church, while there is love so exacting that its tyranny shadows and dooms the object of its devotion. There are Christians who are always happy; there are Christians that are always sad. While the one keeps his eye so steadily "looking unto Jesus," and is so lost in wonder at the beauty, and glory, and power of his now risen and exalted Saviour, that he hardly has time for penitence and tears, the other looks at his Saviour as marred and spit upon, and crowned with thorns, and crucified for his sins, and still despised and rejected by men, and in the depth of his soul he cries: "Oh, that my head were water and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." There are Christians that are "clothed with righteousness, as with a garment," and their lives are so beautiful, that when we associate with them we are forced to believe earth, as well as heaven, has its angels. There are Christians that can "talk with God," and their prayers bring down safety and blessings to many a home, and yet their exterior is so harsh and unattractive they can win but few souls for Christ. Sometimes I wonder if God does not withhold the outward adornments from some of his children that "all boasting may be excluded," and they may be kept always mortified and in the dust. Sometimes I wonder if God expects those Christians who were born with natures as fiery and restive as the lion ever to be as patient, and amiable, and quiet as the Christian who was naturally meek and gentle as the Lamb. What God has made no one else may be. He never intends to do alike. We hear a good deal now about holiness and sanctification, which means, I suppose, a sinner so saved by grace that he remains alive without sin. In some of the revival meetings, only last night, a day began to seek salvation, have testified before the great congregation that they were not only justified but sanctified. I wonder, oh! I wonder, if it is possible for a stone just dug from the quarry to be polished, and at once made a pillar in the house of our God!

Oh! if the shadows could all be lifted, and we could know "the truth as it is in Christ Jesus!" I believe it is possible for every lover of Jesus to live so near to Him that, though when we are tempted and tried, we may sometimes do wrong, we have only one step to take, and we are again nestling down at the foot of the cross, and ere the recording angel has time to write down our sin it is all washed out in the blood of the Lamb.

Rev. J. G. Miller.

MR EDITOR: If I had been called upon to point out a man likely to live to a given change it would have been Rev. John G. Miller, formerly president of Centenary College, Louisiana. When he took charge of South University, in November, 1876, he was in fine health, and in the very vigor of manhood. Accustomed to various climates, in physical build and extraordinary genial flow of spirits, all indicated many years of physical and mental activity, and extensive usefulness to the church and the rising generation. And although the war had shattered our prospects almost to the very foundation, yet we had something left; we had a fine building, beautifully located in the richest part of the great State. President Miller took hold of his work with a vigor seldom equaled, and for the short time allotted, in the order of Providence here, no man within my knowledge had succeeded in making so fine an impression upon the public mind. He had traveled extensively through the State, filling some pulpit almost every Sabbath, to the edification and delight of all who heard him. Laying the foundation for his future usefulness, but man proposes and God disposes. A strange order of Providence, that we cannot comprehend, removed him to his reward. On the twenty-ninth of January, 1878, he ceased at once to work and live. The writer being an old acquaintance, and having a high regard for one so worthy, by permission of his family, placed his remains beside my own little, family group. And a month since, by our agency, there has been placed at his grave a beautiful little monument at the cost of $150, to mark the place where he rests, and as a token of our high regard for him.

CHINA GROVE CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: The camp meeting at China Grove, Mississippi, commenced September 21 and closed September 30, 1879. Much interest was manifested from the first service to the close of the meeting.

God's people came praying, and the Holy Ghost was with us in power to awaken sinners, convert penitents, reclaim backsliders and strengthen believers. The ministers in attendance were P. Howard, B. S. Raynor, J. W. Sa[illegible]dell, M. C. Callaway, G. W. Brown, Warren Cammack and —— Avers. All of them rendered effective and appreciated service. The preaching was pointed and searching; the altar work was conducted with feeling and zeal. The best of order prevailed within and around the encampment during the whole time of the meeting. We received thirty-four into the church, and number forty-two conversions. The China Grove camp ground has, through the success of this meeting, become a fixture on this work. God be praised for the success with which he has crowned the labor and effort of the church here in establishing this camp ground!

The church is very much encouraged and revived.

Obituaries.

MY VENERABLE and venerated mother-in-law, Mrs. SARAH HARRIS RIDDICK, was born in South Carolina, October, 1794, and died in the city of New Orleans, October 17, 1879 in a few days of completing her eighty-first year.

While she was but a child her parents became members of the Methodist Church, which at that time was but a weak and unhonored branch of the church of Christ. In her youthful years she united with the Church of Christ, the Rev. W. McMahon, to see her a devoted Christian, which blessing, God granted, and she ever after lived a consistent member of the church of which she could boast a faithful member for sixty-four years. She was for many years a generous helper outside of her family circle, hence poverty, or bad crops could not prevent her from doing good. She was a widow for forty-seven years, and during that time she was called to part with her husband and seven children, all of whom preceded her to the better land. She was a widow indeed, living entirely for the Lord. In spite of all this sorrow she was cheerful, and ever ready to speak a word in season to the weary traveler. She was a kind mother-in-law, and a sister beloved by all who knew her. In regard to her personal appearance, she was modest and unpretending. She was a believer in Christian perfection, and for the last twenty-four hours before she died she was shouting for joy some of the time. She could not be persuaded to be still, but would have us enter into the spirit and enjoy the sentiment of the songs I used to sing. Mother, we do not know how long you are to live. You can't speak to us when you are dead. Now is the time to speak a word for your Lord. Let us meet the weary and heavy laden and help them up. She sleeps well, embalmed in the fond recollection of many hearts.

JOSEPH A. WILKES.

DIED, in West Baton Rouge parish, La., September 29, 1879, AGNES S. DESORMEAUX, the fifty-first year of his age, after an illness of only a few days. Mr. Desormeaux was born in Baton Rouge parish, August 5, 1828, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, May, 1855, at Jones' Creek Church, during the pastorate of the Rev. Joe Nicholson, came to Port Hudson parish in 1857, and consequently lived in the family with the church at Felicity. Of all the members of his family, only two are left, his wife and one son, Mr. Desormeaux was a man of high moral principle, and was highly esteemed by all who knew him. He leaves a wife and six children.

MRS. ANN E. ROUSE was born in 1818, in East Baton Rouge parish, La. She was first married, in 1842, to Samuel F. Gayle, a Christian gentleman and a kind husband, who received her to the spirit land the next year. One child, a daughter, was the issue of this marriage, who still lives. Her second marriage, which took place in 1847, was to Thomas H. Rouse, who was also a member of the Methodist Church, a native of Mississippi. He also preceded her to the land of the blessed. She had five children by her second marriage, three boys and two girls, of whom three sons and two boys living, prominent men and members of the church.

Sister Rouse joined the church when young, but did not have the opportunity of enjoying church privileges as the country was quite a wilderness in the days of the pioneer days. She suffered much and somewhat indifferent, but never forsook the Lord. In 1878 she again united with the church in East Baton Rouge station, under the pastoral work of Rev. N. H. Young's pastoral work here, and was baptized by him.

Sister Rouse she was afflicted with a cancer in the breast, and ever since she has been a great sufferer, continually confined to her house, and the greater part of this year to her bed. I visited her the evening of her death and prayed with her, she said she was ready to go, quoted that scripture with her hand, no fear of death, and asked me to sing that had not been forgotten. She requested me to sing the hymn "Jesus, my all to heaven is gone," with the chorus, "I am going to serve the Lord, I am going to serve the Lord, I am going to serve the Lord, I am going to stay no longer here." She also joined in singing another hymn, with the chorus: "Lord, remember me." All who knew Sister Rouse will remember her. She was ever ready to do what she could to relieve the suffering and needy.

ANNIE E. MEADOR, daughter of John T. and Kate Meador, was born in Pikeville, Ala., October 9, 1858, and died there while on a visit to her relations, September 23, 1879. Dear Annie about thought ago she was a blooming girl, full of life and vigor, but consumption laid its fatal hand upon her, and she failed like the early flowers. She is gone, failed to that heavenly clime, of which she loved to sing. When but a child she was converted and joined the Methodist Church in Columbus, Miss., where she lived for a while, and remained a consistent member until her death always striving to "let her light shine" so that others might be led to love the Saviour. She was patient and never murmured during her sickness, and was asked by an old friend, a few days before her death, "If she was prepared to die," her reply was, "Yes, I am prepared to meet my Saviour." This dying testimony of our "gem the Annie" consoles us greatly, and we bow in submission to our Heavenly Father's will, knowing that "He doeth all things well."

MARTHA A. MCGEHEE, wife of John H. McGehee, closed her earthly mission at the family residence in Crenshaw county, Ala., September 20, 1879. She was leaving children, but her death was unexpected. She was sitting up, and was in the act of taking a dose of medicine, while her husband was holding in his hands, when she dropped down upon her face and expired. Thus was an dying testimony, but also leaves a bright living testimony. She leaves nine sons and five daughters, the most of whom are on their way to heaven, where they anticipate a happy union.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1879.

IF I SHOULD DIE TO-NIGHT.

If I should die to-night,
My friends would look upon my quiet face,
Before they laid it in its resting place,
And deem that death had left it almost fair;
And, laying snow-white flowers against my hair,
Would smooth it down with tearful tenderness,
And fold my hands with lingering caress.
Poor hands, so empty and so cold to-night!

If I should die to-night,
My friends would call to mind, with loving thought,
Some kindly deed the loy hand had wrought,
Some gentle word the frozen lips had said:
Errands on which the willing feet had sped—
The memory of my selfishness and pride,
My hasty words, would all be put aside,
And so I should be loved and mourned to-night.

If I should die to-night,
Even hearts estranged would turn once more to me,
Recalling other days remorsefully;
The eyes that chill me with averted glance,
Would look upon me as of yore, perchance,
And soften in the old, familiar way.
For who would war with dumb, unconscious clay?
So I might rest, forgiven of all to-night.

Oh, friends, I pray to-night,
Keep not your kisses for my dead, cold brow.
The way is lonely; let me feel them now.
Think gently of me; I am travel-worn.
My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn.
Forgive, oh, hearts estranged, forgive, I plead!
When dreamless rest is mine I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long to-night.

The Tanganyika Mission.

If the London Missionary Society had not counted well the cost, both in money and life, of founding a mission in Central Africa it would now be inclined to give up the enterprise in despair. When the large sum of money necessary to the establishment of the mission was raised, the easiest part of the great task had been accomplished. The long, costly, wearisome, dangerous journey of mis-sionaries and caravans was a stupendous undertaking, which even commercial enterprise would have hesitated to enter upon. No wonder that some of the missionaries who had had experience in Africa best knew about going so far from the confines of civilization, and disappointed the society, which had need of their wisdom and experience. Then, after the journey had been finished by those whose courage and determination and devotion would not allow of retreat, one of their number fell a victim to disease. Next, the foreign secretary, Dr. Mullens, setting his heart on the success of the mission, and going out himself to help organize it, passed from among the savages of Mpwapwa to heaven. Now, a week after his death is published, comes the announcement of the death of the Rev. Arthur Dodgshun at the Lake. The dispatch states that Mr. Dodgshun died seven days after reaching the Ujiji. He died in the prime of life, being only thirty-two years of age.

He left England for Zanzibar in March, 1877, with five other missionaries, and it was thought that they might reach the Lake by the end of the year. The opening of the year 1878 found them, however, at Kirasi, only 160 miles from the coast. Here they had to abandon their teams, on account of the tsetse fly, and procure porters. June 12, 1878, Messrs. Thomson Hore and Utley left Mpwapwa with 250 men, leaving Mr. Dodgshun to come on with Mr Broyon, a trader, who had contracted to convey the rest of the mission goods, amounting to about seven tons, to Ujiji. They accordingly returned to the coast for the goods, and left Bagamoyo August 19, 1878 with a large caravan, for Mr. Broyon also had charge of the goods of the Belgian expedition and the French Catholic missionary party. They arrived at Mpwapwa October 1, and passed on to Mawere Ugogo. Hence the progress was slow. At Mukondoka, in the large country, the party was attacked by 100 armed natives, and it was only by paying a large tribute of cloth that they escaped without loss of life. Mr. Dodgshun wrote that they were in risk constantly. "It is," he said, "a daily dodging of fate." He arrived at Ujiji in April, 1879 and only survived, as we have stated, seven days. Mirambo, the fierce chief whose men murdered Mr. Penrose and plundered his caravan, Mr. Dodgshun and party avoided by going to Unyanyembe. This famous chief had been visited, however, by the Rev. J. B. Thomson and party, the advance party to the Lake, and Mr. Thomson, since dead, writes an interesting account of the visit. "Mirambo," he wrote, "received us most kindly, and has treated us very handsomely while we have been here. He has certainly done his best to show himself friendly to us, but when the novelty wears off I think he will not be so kind. His missionary will have to treat him with much firmness and kindness, never getting too familiar with him, but always treating him with respect."

The chief is thus described:

"Mirambo is about forty years of age, five feet ten inches, or five feet eleven inches in height, not stout, but firmly and well made; very active, far seeing and clever; mom, if anything, but makes himself very agreeable. He had none of the put on dignity which kings so often assume. He has twenty wives and five children. His name is much feared among the natives, and I believe he will do good in his way. He is gathering together the many scattered tribes who live by plundering all they can. Already he has done a good work in this way between this and Uvinza. He says that two years ago caravans could not travel this road, but now travelers can go safely. As a boy, the chief was brought up among the Wangeni or Watuta. By the way, there are some of them here just now, and they speak Zulu, and I can converse with them. Mirambo can also speak Kanguni, and I can converse with him very well. We have had many conversations together on religion and morals. He seemed much interested to hear that God was the Father of all men, and that He loved all, and that He was the Maker of everything, and that in Him everything lives, moves and has its being. I took an early opportunity of explaining to him the object of our coming into the country and the nature of our work. He seemed pleased with what I said, but he thought the Wajiji would not learn. The Arabs had been too long among them. He said he wanted white people to live with him, and I told him there were some on their way now, who would soon be here, who were going to live with him. The chief has given us seven head of cattle and one fine sheep. I gave him two muskets, two pound tins of powder, two boxes of caps, my own camp chair, one woolen blanket, five colored cloths and ten rupees, and £1 10s. in gold, which he asked for specially. He sent for my two head men, and told them to tell me that he loved me very much; but now he saw that I did not love him, or I would not have kept the good guns to myself and given him these poor things. He said he was not a pagaz' to use such guns. I sent back word to him that we did not measure a man's love by what he gave. But the chief did not see it, and nothing would please him till I had given him my own good rifle; and he returned the two muskets, the powder and caps. I was unwilling to part with this good and expensive gun, but I felt, if it would aid in securing his friendship and help our work, it would pay us in the end to part with it. It will be of the utmost importance to our work on the Lake, and to our communication with the coast, to retain his friendship. At present the chief is extremely pleased with the gun, and says he will do everything he can to help us, both now and hereafter."

Some recent letters from Ujiji give the following intelligence respecting the work of the mission:

"With regard to our work as a mission party, we have seemed to progress rather slowly with the people whom we came to deal with more especially. However, when we first came here the Wajiji passed us by without looking, and, on asking an explanation, I was told they were afraid. Now, I am glad to say, they come to see us very frequently—some for the purpose of trade, others out of curiosity. One old Ujiji elder visited me some days ago, in company of a young Arab, who is a friend of his. After relieving him of various things—not forgetting our most precious one, the Bible—he declared, in his own language, that from the time of his great grandfather till now no one had seen such wonderful things as he had seen in this our day. You will be pleased to hear that by our simple presence here our influence is felt, and we are doing some good. Only yesterday I was told that since we have been here there have been very few floggings among our landlord's slaves, and he has a great number; and the slaves say it is because of our presence here, and that before we came he had thrashed a slave to death. A caravan, also, which left a few days ago, taking with it a number of slaves for sale at the coast, conveyed most of its human merchandise out of the town before daylight. One of our men told me that they were marched in chains, with a gun in front and one behind. Thus by degrees we are making ourselves felt, and ere long the poor, down-trodden African may have cause to rejoice that we are here as his friends. God grant that the day may soon come when they shall rejoice that we are here, not only as their friends but as their instructors in the path of life, and of that God of whom now their notions are so very vague."

On the ninth of December Mr. Hore wrote:

"I have endeavored to make the acquaintance of the Wajiji in many ways. I am already on visiting terms with Abe, and with the Medo of Bangwe, both of whom I have doctored. We also have several acquaintances who visit us occasionally, but the great attraction is the children. By its means we have already made many friends among all classes, and in this work, considering my inexperience, I have had wonderful success. Abdullah bin Salimani and Muniyi Heri, the leaders of two opposing factions among the Arabs, both expressed their gratitude to me one for relief from rheumatism, the other from fever—while Muniyi Alida, a third leader (an old patient of Dr. Livingstone's) rejoices in a considerable increase of eyesight, due to the collyrium I administered to him. Nor is the fame of our medicines confined to the town. It has spread far and wide. Not a day passes without a patient of some kind, and in this way we are getting many friends."

Writing on the fourth of January, Mr. Hore remarked:

"I am anxiously awaiting the arrival of Mr. Dodgshun, both in order that we may together select a site or otherwise arrange for our permanent station, and that I may, without further loss of time, get about my work on the Lake. If we do not stop in this house, there are several sites around, the possession of any one of which would enable us to comply with the instructions you have given us with regard to position. Both in Kasimbo, Casha and Kigoma are numerous real Wajiji villages. We shall probably have to purchase the land, notwithstanding the promise of the chief; but I think it would be cheap. I have been busily engaged in getting up housekeeping, in keeping our landlord up to the mark with the work of completion, in keeping up friendly relations both with the natives and the wily but friendly-faced Arabs, and in laying the foundation of a medical mission; for I am able now and then, while giving medicines, to say a word or two as to the goodness of God in supplying in Nature the remedies for our diseases, as to the need of thanking Him for all such mercies, and the necessity of that only which shall please and glorify Him."

Messrs. Hore and Utley are all that remain now of the original band of eight missionaries. Two new appointees, Messrs. Griffith and Southon, are on their way to the Lake, starting in company with Dr. Mullens from Zanzibar. At last accounts they were at Mpwapwa, with the worst part of the journey before them. As soon as they arrive at Ujiji a site will be selected and the mission organized. We hope that the four may be preserved to do this. —Independent.

PROTESTANTISM IN ROME.—The correspondent of the Times at Rome, writing on the seventeenth, says: "The negotiations between the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel and the Roman Municipality regarding the site of the English Church have been definitely concluded by cession to the society of between 1,100 and 1,200 square metres of ground at the corner of the Via Babuino and the Via Gesu e Maria, formerly belonging to the ex-convent of that order, in exchange for the site outside the Porta del Popolo occupied by the building wherein the English Church service has been celebrated since 1818, and against which Cardinal Wiseman, battling for a moment on leaving Rome, delivered his famous anathema. The new site is certainly not as central as could have been desired; but, taking into account the many impediments in the way, it is difficult to see how a better was to be had. Considering the matter, however, from the broader view of the interests of the Anglican Church, irrespective of the convenience of the English in Rome, the site may be said to have peculiar advantages. With a church built by the English on this spot and the church already erected by the Americans at the further end of the Via Nazionale, the Anglican Church will possess a place of worship at both extremities of the area along which her children are scattered; and if their clergymen pull well together each may more or less gather within its walls the members of the Anglican Church nearest to it, without regard to nationality, without loss to the Society of duties, and with much increase of good Christian feeling. At the same time there is, midway in the Piazza San Silvestro, the building called Trinity Church, erected some sixty years ago for the use of the afore-mentioned members of the Church of England."—The London Watchman.

THE AUSTRALASIAN WESLEYAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The Sydney Weekly Advocate states that the income of the Foreign Missionary Society for last year is £7000 in excess of the amount obtained in the previous year, and this in the face of the fact that the giving power of the people in the Friendly and Fiji Islands was considerably diminished—the one case by a hurricane having almost destroyed the nut crop, and the other by the unusually heavy claims of the government for revenue purposes. Notwithstanding the great commercial depression in Victoria, and the increasing difficulty that is experienced in meeting local claims, the mission contributions from that colony are equal to the average of previous years; while those from South Australia show a very gratifying increase. This state of things is owing chiefly to the vigorous carrying out of the deputation system. The board of management engaged the Rev. Thomas Williams and a native minister from Fiji to act as a deputation principally in the southern colonies during the past year; the financial results prove that the step was a wise one. At the same time, it is right that our readers should know that the expenses of our missions are largely in excess of the income that is received from the colonial auxiliaries churches to support them. And if we are to maintain the position we have got in Polynesia, we must fan our mission zeal into a livelier flame."—London Watchman.

—The Berlin Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews reports receipts of $4,180 for the year, a sum too small by thousands of dollars for the needs of the society. Of this sum about $2,385 was the result of a simultaneous collection in all the Prussian Protestant Churches. An appendix to the report estimates the number of Jews in the world at between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000. There are in Europe about 5,000,000; in Asia, 200,000; in Africa, over 80,000; in America, from a million to a million and a half. More than half of the European Jews (2,621,000) reside in Russia, 1,375,000 in Austria (of whom 575,000 are in the Polish provinces of Gallicia), 512,000 in Germany (61,000 in the Polish province of Posen), Roumania is credited with 274,000 and Turkey with 100,000. There are 70,000 in Holland, 56,000 in England, 49,000 in France, 35,000 in Italy, Spain and Portugal have between them 2,000 and 4,000, 1,800 in Sweden, 25 in Norway. In Berlin alone are 15,000. Most of the African Jews are found in Algiers. Butchey are to be found in Abyssinia, and all along the north coast, and even in the Saharan oases, frequently acting as intermediaries between the Mohammedans and Christians. Of the Asiatic Jews, 20,000 are assigned to India and 25,000 to Palestine. The population of Jerusalem is given as 7,000 Mohammedans, 5,000 Christians, and 13,500 Jews. These last are classified as Germans, Spanish, or Arabic Jews.—Independent.

—The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions held its seventieth meeting in Syracuse, N. Y., last week. The summary presented by Dr. Clark was generally of an encouraging nature. The Scriptures are circulated for the first time amongst the Moslems, who are now beginning also to attend Christian assemblies. In Western Turkey the number added to the churches has been larger than ever before, and in Central Turkey the congregations are larger. In India nearly 700 have been added to the mission churches under the Board, and in China "the story of the heathen temple transformed into a Christian Church by the authorities of a Chinese village belongs to the romance of missions, and suggests a new rebellion of questions of church building." In Japan the translation of the New Testament has been completed; and Christian literature is extensively used and widely appreciated. From papal lands alone come discouraging reports—ground lost in Mexico, opposition not yet overcome in Spain, and state persecution thus far successfully preventing forward movement in Austria.

—The Indian Mission Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was held recently at Double Springs, Choctaw Nation, by Bishop Pierce. The Conference reports 108 local preachers, 588 white, 4,785 Indian, and 215 colored members—a somewhat mixed Conference. The increase was 107. There were 472 baptisms of infants and 279 of adults. There are 61 Sunday-schools, with 1,608 scholars. The churches raised $273 for missions. The Conference has four districts—the Cherokee, the Chickasaw, the Creek and the Choctaw.

—The recent movement among the Baptists to bring them into line with the supporters of the American Bible Society seems to have stirred up their "American and Foreign Bible Society" to new activity. It has been somewhat reorganized, and the Rev. F. A. Douglass, known by his success as a missionary among the Telugus, has been appointed general agent, with Mr. J. N. Folwell as treasurer. The office of this society is at 116 Nassau street, in this city.—Independent.

—The Mennonites, as is well known, hold to close communion. Their reasons for so doing are given in their organ, the Herald of Truth. They believe that those who commune together should be of one mind and one faith. Their objections to communing with members of other denominations are: 1. They uphold war. 2. They indulge in the pride and fashion of the world. 3. They swear oaths. 4. They belong to secret societies. 5. They defend infant baptism.

—The missionaries of the American Board have had to withdraw from Austria. Individuals have been fined for reading the Word of God to their neighbors; they have also been imprisoned for having their neighbors present at family prayer. The Papacy has not yet gained the ascendency—so far as the use of the rack and the stake—but whither they will go "knows only to Heaven," both said, "Hitherto shalt thou go, and no further."

—A Sixth Annual Christian Convention is to be held in Dexter this month, when the Rev. R. W. Hayden, Bishop Hiley (another reported Bishop of the Zion M. E. Church), and Lord Kinnear are invited to speak. Sectional meetings will be held after the manner of the British Association. The first of these conventions was held in connection with Mr. Moody's visit in 1874.

—Half a century having elapsed since Dr. Duff was set apart by the Free Church of Scotland as its first missionary to India, the church proposes to raise a Jubilee Fund, having for its objects the relieving of the committee from their present anxieties, and also the permanent benefit of its missions in India, Africa and Manitoba.

—Mr Spurgeon has made arrangements for the formal opening in October, with a public festival, of his new orphanage for girls, which is situated on premises adjoining his similar institution for boys. So soon as the house has been furnished, fifty girls will be received into the institution. Seven cottage homes have been guaranteed by various contributions.

—The first Presbyterian Church in Alaska has been organized at Fort Wrangle by the Rev. S. Hall Young, missionary, assisted by Dr. Sheldon Jackson and others. The church consists of 21 members, of whom 18 are Indians, including four chiefs of the Sitkine tribe.

—An English Catholic priest, chaplain of Cardinal Manning, and brother of six Jesuits, if not one himself, has visited Mexico for the sake of Bibles. They are printed with Popish comments, it is true, but they are Bibles—at least New Testaments. The sales have reached 25,000; and this in Mexico!

—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America consists of 38 synods, 137 Presbyteries, 4,938 ordained ministers, 5,115 churches, 574,486 communicants and 614,774 children in the Sunday-schools. The total amount expended annually for all religious objects is about $8,250,000.

—They say there are three great preachers in Hungary—Cardinal Haynald, a famous botanist, formerly Bishop of the Catholic diocese in which Kossuth Lajos is situated; Peter Nagy, the present Reformed or Calvinistic Bishop of Klausenburg, a man of liberal views and tendencies; and Joseph Ferenez, the Unitarian Bishop.

—Rev. William Taylor announces that his first recruits for the present season for South India sailed from New York, October 9. They consist of Revs. James Lyons, Ira A. Richards, B. A.; Henry F. Kastendieck, B. A.; V. M. Bovard, B. A.; M. B. Kirk, B. A.; Wellington Bowser, B. A.; and Granil Shreves.

—London has a City Bible Class Union, and at a meeting about two weeks ago of the representatives of Bible classes in houses of business in the city, the secretary, Mr. Stalnes, reported that there are now forty-one such classes, and that the number is increasing.

—The Free Church of Scotland intends to send its best men to the coming Pan-Presbyterian Council at Philadelphia. The delegation will probably include Principal Rainy, Sir Henry Moncrieff, Dr. Begg, Dr. Baikie, Dr. Adam, Lord Kintore and others.

—The communicant roll of the Reformed Episcopal Church shows an increase of over three thousand members during the last twelve months. There are now eight bishops and upwards of one hundred clergy, besides many candidates for the ministry.

—The Presbyterian preachers of Rochester have set their faces against Sunday newspapers.

BABY'S WALKING MATCH.

Hurrah! Baby's on the track!
Got the word to "Go!"
Straight of limb he does n't lack,
Toddling to and fro.

Mother is the judge on hand;
There's no doubt he'll win.
See the pretty bell of mine
Round his waist to pin.

Many strides the race to take
In the shade and sun;
Many miles he has to make
Ere the match be won.

Brave! Up and down he goes,
Holding fast to chairs;
Rosy fingers, rosy toes,
Pretty little airs.

This is but the first two miles,
Just the speed to try;
A much better gait he'll reach,
Walking by and by.

Here he comes, the prompt, wee sheep,
Beating all the others!
Now he takes his final lap:
But that lap is mother's!

Extravagance in Speech.

"Good mamma! I'm just tired to death!" said Mary Keever, as she ran in one evening and threw her books, hat and shawl on the sitting-room table, and herself on the sofa, in a very untidy-like manner.

"What have you been doing?" asked her mother, very quietly.

"Bessie and I saw a snake at the foot of the hill, and ran about six miles—we went round the big road! Oh! we were scared to death! You never have heard us scream for two miles!"

"It's not more than three hundred years to the foot of the hill, and I did not hear you, and I've been sitting in the window all the afternoon."

"Well, you were not looking, or didn't think of it's being too cool to take a notice of the girls. But I'll now you could have heard very plain, and oh! mamma, such an enormous! It was as big as a—as a—about twenty yards long!"

"Twenty yards! My dear child, have you any idea how much twenty yards is? It is not twenty-yards from here to the gate. Please run for papa and the police to hunt up the snake. Have a good time to-night, for to-morrow it must be replaced by some lazy creeping from some menagerie, and I never heard of a snake over a yard long."

"Oh! mamma, don't be so very particular about every little thing. I say, let me tell my story when I'm excited and so tired, you are unjust to me, for I know you don't intend to tell for anybody—not even papa."

"Well, Mary, think a little—how long do you suppose the snake really was?"

"I don't know, for I just had a glimpse of it. I was startled across the street. I could not see its head or its tail. I know it was tremendous large! and I think it was tremendous long! Don't you think it was a awful adventure, for two little girls?"

"It was right hard on two little girls to meet an ordinary snake. You had better write a description of your adventure and send it to one of the editors for the sensational column."

"Oh! mamma! I don't like to be made fun of. You ought to sympathize with me."

"My daughter," said the mother, quite seriously, "I do sympathize with you in all real and legitimate trouble or danger, for I wish to bring you of exaggerating. Now you have told four or five falsehoods, for the result of that little incident."

"Why, mamma! I don't tell falsehoods," said Mary quite indignant.

"I don't know any other name for them," said Mrs. Keever.

"First—you were tired to death, then you ran six miles, were scared to death, could have been heard two miles, the snake was as large as the pond which is, I think, about a—two in circumference, and twenty yards long."

"Well, mamma, if you call it telling falsehoods, we will have to stop talking. Everybody tells that way. Of course they don't mean everything they say."

"Beg your pardon, my dear, everybody don't tell so. There are undoubtedly some exceptions to this wide-spread story telling. It is sad to add to children. I am sorry to say, many grown persons talk that way, and I always think they had better stop talking."

"Well, I can't help talking that way," said Mary, "and what's the harm? Everybody knows how much of it to believe."

"No, everybody don't know how much to believe, everybody knows it is not all true, and if you go on so, I fear, very soon no one will believe even a part of what you say. I fear you will be a by word in the community. People will say, 'Oh, if Mary Keever told it; you needn't pay any attention to it. It's one of her stories.'"

Mary was completely humbled and was crying, as she said:

"I didn't know it was telling stories."

"I know you don't mean to tell stories, nevertheless you do tell them, and tell them very often. Though I have talked to you so much about it, still the habit grows upon you, and I think it is time you were making an effort to overcome your propensities to enlarge upon everything. Last night I heard you telling your brother something, and you said, you died laughing, and that Jhamie Brown made a thousand mistakes in reading, and that after the last rain the creek was a mile wide. I said nothing at the time, but wondered if it was half that wide, how you ever crossed. Only think a little, how such talk sounds, and you will try to stop."

"Mamma, I will try, but I don't think I ever can, unless you cut out my tongue or sew up my mouth."

"Oh, yes! you can, by patience and perseverance and prayer."

"What, mamma! pray for such a thing as that!"

"Yes, surely, pray for what we most need. You need strength to resist your inclinations to speak untruths, and if you really wish to be helped, God will help you."

Mary did try patiently and prayerfully, but she made very slow progress.

A few days after this Mary had another lesson, that made as much impression upon her, as her mother's words.

Just after tea, Mr. and Mrs. Monroe came in, and at the door asked how Harry was, and seeing him at the table with his books, they looked confused, and said they had heard he was very ill. Lula and Lila Monroe were passing that evening, and heard Mary say—"Brother fell down, somewhere, and was dying." They ran home and told their mother and she hurried over to see. When they found out just what it was all about—that Mary had said, her brother had fallen on the sofa and was dying with laughter, both Mr. and Mrs. Keever felt very much mortified. Harry laughed, but poor Mary crept out of the room, and was seen no more that night. She cried herself to sleep, and she got up the next morning with new resolves. With divine assistance she was enabled to keep them.—Brandon Republican.

RESPECTABILITY A TROUT.—Estimated by their game qualities and the difficulty sometimes experienced in even landing them, the larger specimens of our mountain trout weigh like a salmon. This fact is established when we see the trout hooked in a pool with sufficient depth and spread of water even for him to use in his native element the full resisting force of his remarkably strong and active tail. In illustration of this, a story is told of the experience of two professional fishers who recently went out from Helena to Big Blackfoot—some a dozen miles or the other side. In a very brief time they had a basket of beauties for their pains, but the fascination of the sport led them to cast for the trout in the clear waters of the main current. Finally one hooked a "whopper," one of which he had many times seen by the river side. The pool was deep and broad, and the trout took to the water as the fisherman, the contest to the death commenced. Now the trout would rush to the bottom, then to the surface, then to the opposite side of the pool, and then down stream. Time and again the fisherman was compelled to follow after him. After a short, but exciting struggle, the hooked fish was brought to the gaff and tackle with one hand, lifted with the other his antagonist's head above water. But the lawyer found he could not bring his trophy to shore, and only by a superhuman effort could he keep himself and companion from sinking. On the very point of drowning, the trout came to the rescue straightened out the line, and, after a few spirited pranks, hauled the two men out of the pool to shallow water. Grateful for the service thus obligingly rendered, the fish was permitted to disappear over the rill-adown stream. This story is confirmed by the testimony of both the gentlemen concerned, and by the trout itself, which has since been seen towing the tackle and showing the waters of the Blackfoot.—Helena Herald.

A WONDERFUL LAKE.—One of the wonders of Florida is the Weiffenbach Lake, about one mile west of Deland, Volusia City. The lake is from two to three feet higher than the surrounding land, and is also about three miles in circumference. Its depth is unknown, as no bottom has been found at the depth of 100 feet. The water is clear as crystal, and cold as ice. It is said that no fish are found in the lake, and that no one has ever been able to ascertain where the water comes from nor where it goes, yet it is always clear and fresh.

HOW NUTMEGS GROW.—Nutmegs grow on little trees which look like little pear trees, and are generally over twenty feet high. The flowers are very much like the lily of the valley. They are pale and very fragrant. The nutmeg is next of the fruit, and mace is the thin covering over the seed. The fruit is about as large as a peach. When ripe it breaks open and shows the little nut inside. The trees grow on the islands of Asia and in tropical America. They bear fruit for seventy or eighty years, having ripe fruit upon them at all seasons. A fine tree in Jamaica has over four thousand nutmegs on it yearly. The Dutch used to have all this nutmeg trade, as they owned the Banda Islands, and conquered all the other traders and destroyed the trees. To keep the price up, they once burned three million nutmegs, each of which was as large as a church. Nature did not sympathize with such meanness. The nutmeg pigeon, found in all the Indian Islands, did for the world what the Dutch had determined should not be done—carried those nuts, which are their food, into all the surrounding countries, and trees grew again, and the world had the benefit.—Boston Journal of Commerce.

The Weeping Sower.

There are differences in temperament and in the outward circumstances. Some gospel sowers seem always jubilant, and their path appears to be one of joyful triumph. And yet, it will probably be found, that the most successful have trodden the path of sorrow, and that their work has been done in the midst of the sorest trials, and in the face of deep discouragements. They have been afflicted in body, laboring in pain and weakness; they have contended with poverty and want, and the cloud of bereavement and of domestic trouble has darkened their sky. In order to do the work of God they have suffered the loss of all things which the world prizes. They have had inward struggles of soul in interpreting Providence, in confronting opposition, and in patient waiting for the fruits of their toil. The conditions of sorrow, common to all, belong to those whose vocation it is to sow the good seed of the kingdom. And, in addition, they have tribulations which are incident to their peculiar calling, so that, were they exempt from the ordinary sufferings of life, there is for them a burden which others know nothing of.

But do we misread the spirit of the hints which the divine record gives us when we infer that these conditions of sorrow are a noteworthy element of power, and of the truest success? There is a discipline in them that qualifies for the mission on which Christ sends His servants—a discipline that develops a robust faith, a perfect patience, and a tenderness and sympathy which would be otherwise unattainable. The school of suffering would seem to be necessary to the highest effectiveness. It is needed by the disciple, in a sense in which it was not needed by the Master, as a preparation and training for the duties to be performed. He that comes again with the sheaves is he that goes forth and weepeth. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." Possibly others may sow and reap, and yet the sowing in tears would seem to be the normal condition of all fruitful sowing. The faith, sacrifice, anxiety, must be ever present with the husbandman who commits the precious seed to the ground. It is his bread that he casts upon the waters. It is his treasure and life that go into the sowing. In the spiritual these analogies are formulated into a law that holds in the kingdom of heaven.

We cannot readily conceive of a servant of God going forth with precious seed and sowing to any purpose, while he revels in ease and wealth, and moves smoothly and comfortably along a path of flowers. We have only to call to mind the great sowers whose labors have been most conspicuously blessed, to see how trial and obstacles and sufferings have had to do with the sheaves they gathered. Luther, Wesley, Baxter, Bunyan, Robert Hall, and, above them all, Paul, were men of suffering, familiar with sorrow. It might be said that they persevered and triumphed in spite of their trials, but the soundor conclusion is that they were great and strong and wise in winning souls, because of their trials. They became what they were through the chastening and ennobling afflictions they were called to encounter.

The ministry of every Christian is enriched by the personal ordeals of trouble through which he passes. He has lived and labored, it may be, without weeping. No persecution has been awakened, health and prosperity have attended him, and he has been a stranger to domestic grief. Circumstances change, and he goes forth weeping. With the same field, with the same seed, with the same authority, he is invested with a new and higher inspiration, with an unwonted power, with a more complete consecration. The weeping sower is she who anguishes out a life of pain and weariness, and whose prayers and work for Christ are accompanied with sighs and tears. It is he who, with a deep sorrow in his own heart, carries the balm of consolation to wounded and suffering souls, and who, though himself poor and straightened, makes many rich. If there be sowing without tears, earnest, useful lives without suffering, there is a special fruitfulness and a more generous harvest for those who go forth weeping. The lack in many Christians, especially of the young, is this ingredient of suffering. It is a character that has its mission, and yet it is perfected by the maturity and mellow opulence of that suffering which imparts its own peculiar glory to the soul. Wisely is it ordered and appointed that, for the most part, our sowing must be done in tears.

Turning to another aspect of the weeping sower, we have the deep feeling of pity and concern for souls. The state of mind is that which Christ was in when He wept over Jerusalem. We cannot measure the depth of His compassion, because we cannot fully apprehend, as He did, the value of souls, and the fearful peril to which they are exposed. But are we worthy the name of Christian sowers, unless in some degree we are possessed of His absorbing love and pity for the lost? How far such a feeling is from a mere desire for the well being of others, and how far it is above the petty conceit and ambition of a professional ministry, it is needless to explain. Jeremiah, the weeping prophet, is not generally regarded as the highest and best type of Christian character, and even Paul's tears are considered as doing little credit to his Christian manhood. But it is this concern, earnestness, tenderness and agonizing that is demanded. Until there is travail of soul, neither pastor nor people have reason to expect the conversion of sinners. As Christ saw of the travail of His soul and was satisfied, so must it be with His disciples.

It is the weeping sower that comes again with joy, bringing his sheaves with him. It is the Christian, in whatever sphere, who feels deeply the preciousness of the gospel message, and the utter and endless misery of the impenitent who gathers the fruit of his toil and prayers. Where there is no yearning to save souls, no heartache over sinners, no heaviness nor sorrow, on account of dying men, there is little promise of a joyful reaping. All over the wide field of gospel work in our pastorates, our home missions and foreign, there are earnest, self-sacrificing men and women, who count not their lives dear, so they may win souls to Christ. But we need more of this terrible and invincible earnestness, and of this type of devotion which the weeping sower represents.

North and South.

It is not to be wondered at that much of the sectional animosity engendered by the war, and by causes lying back of it, should continue. It will take time to heal the wounds, and for the spirit of strife to die out. Considerable progress has been made in the direction of, harmony, and in the growth of a common national feeling. The circumstances under which the slaves were emancipated, and the investing of them with immediate and unqualified suffrage, were calculated to lead to more or less trouble. In no country in the world could these measures have been imposed upon a people with less of strife and violence. Whatever social and political disorders have grown out of these great changes will gradually pass away as the negroes become more enlightened, and as the whites become more accustomed to the new order of things.

Negro domination, however much our enemies desired it, was certainly intolerable and ruinous, and placed life and property in jeopardy. It is right and just, and in the interests of civilization and humanity, that these States should be under a white man's government, and that they should not be remanded to the semi-barbarism of negro ascendency. These views would meet the approval of nearly all Northern minds not influenced by partisan spirit or fanaticism. Whenever these influences come to direct and control public opinion at the North, there will be peace and good will, so far as this question is concerned.

There have been outrages, more or less, arising from a conflict of races, and from political passion, but these have never been approved by the great body of our people, and there is a deep and abiding determination that they shall cease. Lawlessness, engendered by conditions following a bitter war and emancipation, will be overcome in time. It was to be expected, as the earliest result of a great social and political revolution, that there would be occasional outbreaks and deeds of violence. The North, a generation hence, will be better prepared to do the Southern people justice, as to this matter, than they are now. They will then see that the measures of reconstruction, adopted by themselves, made inevitable many of the evils for which our people are blamed.

If there were no political ends to be gained by exaggerating the crimes that happen on Southern soil, and by systematic mendacity in regard to facts, there would be little sectional hatred left. Political and religious agitators and demagogues are the people who keep up the spirit of sectional strife. Their work and influence, it is to be hoped, will come to an end some time. Then there will be peace. Sectionalism will always exist in a territory as vast as that of the United States, but the issues will be made upon questions of commerce, and other local interests. These questions will not, however, have in them the food upon which fanaticism feeds, and they will be divested of those asperities which have characterized the struggle between the North and the South.

So far as we can see, the only real sin in the South, as judged by the average Northern mind, is our unwillingness to be governed by our former slaves. If they were capable of a just conception of this question, they would applaud rather than censure. Under like circumstances, their convictions on this subject would be the same as ours.

Good men on both sides of the line are liable to prejudice, and to be influenced by distorted statements and by a partisan spirit. But, with the great factor of Time to aid in the solution, the good people, North and South, will work out the problem of a peaceful and happy country, in which all sections, races and colors will feel secure in their rights, and in which all lovers of God and truth will fraternize in the work of spreading the gospel, and in promoting peace everywhere. May the Prince of peace hasten the day.

The Unconverted in the Church.

Mr. Editor: It is likely the General Conference of 1866, which met in New Orleans, was the most radical body that ever legislated for the Methodist Church. Certainly it went to the root of matters in changing old usages and introducing new economies. Nothing seemed specially sacred except the doctrines and General Rules of the church. Provision was made for lay representation in the Conferences, the pastoral term was extended, the class meeting test of membership was abolished, a form for the reception of members into the church was adopted, measures were inaugurated looking to the establishment of church and District Conferences, two distinct Boards of Missions were provided for and appointed, provision was made to try ministers by a committee instead of by the Conference, a committee was appointed to revise the arrangement of the Book of Discipline, and to point out redundant words and phrases, to be expunged by a succeeding General Conference, and last, but not least, the arbitrary six months' probation was changed, and the time of the reception of applicants for church membership was left entirely with the pastors.

That some of these measures were wise experience has fully demonstrated, but that the church would not have been damaged, had we paused a little longer, with regard to others, is highly probable. We are constantly learning that change is not necessarily progress, and the light of experience shows mistakes we would have avoided could we have looked into the future. In the polity of every church there are certain features that ought to be as immovable as the hills.

The fathers were in that body and did the work. Bishop Andrew said he had never seen as many old men in a General Conference, and that it was an assembly of unusual ability. Some of us who were younger can testify that they did most of the planning and speaking. We sat in mute amazement as they tore the old ship to pieces, and put in here and there a new timber. However, in private there was a great deal of earnest, anxious talk about these changes among some of us, who took little or no part in the public debates.

Dr. W. A. McCarty and myself occupied the same room, and agreed on most points; especially were we of the same mind about conforming the law to the usage of the church with regard to class meetings. The law required all to attend class, and affixed a penalty for habitual neglect of the duty, but usage and public sentiment opposed the strict enforcement of the penalty, and made the law in many places a dead letter. It thus became an element of weakness, and we thought it best to expunge it altogether.

More than thirteen years have passed since then, and much light has been thrown on the matter, and I now rather incline to the opinion it would have been better to let the law stand as it was, and to have made some provision for its strict and general enforcement. How a pastor of a large charge can, with the limited time allowed us, become acquainted with the spiritual condition of his members, is a problem I have not yet been able to solve to my satisfaction. I know it may be said the class meeting has not been abolished, and pastors may yet utilize it as the father's did. Let the preachers follow the Discipline, and then see the results. Some have done this, and but few attended the meetings. It seems to be a law of our natures that a little pressure must now and then be brought to bear to cause us to see and follow that which promotes our spiritual interests. As to the policy of abolishing the six months' probation, there was much difference of opinion. I thought the present or some similar plan ought to be adopted. It seemed to me we were constantly losing valuable members, who, being a little cold at the end of six months, would decline being received into the church. I had many examples before me to justify my conclusions. One of my early charges, a year or so before my time, was blessed with a "mighty revival." The pastor was of ardent temperament, and believed in the doctrine of accessions as an evidence of growth and success. At the close of every service, in the midst of great excitement, the door (not doors) of the church was opened, and between eighty and ninety were enrolled as the fruits of the "gracious work." But, under the operation of the six months' rule, nearly all went back. If memory is not at fault, I found four, of all who had joined, true to the faith. Now here was a tremendous loss. That it was exceptional I will admit, but it disclosed a startling fact, and I thought the abolition of the probation plan would greatly benefit the church by enabling us to retain many we would otherwise lose. Dr. McCarty differed with me, and contended the result would be the introduction of a large class of unconverted persons into the church. As the great object of some preachers seemed to be to enroll members, they would make haste in times of revival and religious excitement to receive into full connection as many as possible. After awhile these would be so numerous they would fill the offices, and actually legislate for the church. I, however, believed our ministry would be equal to the responsibility of their position, and would guard the church against the admission of those who did not have the root of the matter in them. But I fear I was too sanguine, and that my confidence in the sagacity and prudence of some of our ministers was probably too great.

Our condition of membership is "a desire to flee the wrath to come," but there should be some stronger evidences of that desire than a simple declaration, before one is formally inducted into all the privileges of the church. It seems to me a pastor ought to be fully satisfied of the correctness of the faith of the applicant, of his knowledge of our economy, and of the fixedness of his purpose, to persevere in a holy life, before giving to him the right hand of fellowship. In some but little time would be required for this, in others it might take six months or six years; and this, I submit, was the idea of many who took part in framing the law.

That at present we have many unconverted members no one acquainted with the facts will deny. Many of these, because of social position, wealth, intelligence, general cleverness and popularity, are made stewards, and called to other responsible trusts. Sometimes their spiritual status is not even inquired into. They may be prayerless, worldly-minded men, and by no means examples to the flock in spiritual life and power, but this does not influence the matter of their appointments.

I have been led into these statements and reflections by a letter from a brother who this year is serving one of the largest and most important circuits of the Alabama Conference. He writes pleasantly and cheerfully of the country and people where he labors, but adds: "I am getting along only tolerably well as to the true work of a minister. I do not see the results I desire. Indeed, I am puzzled to know how to manage or even to get at these people. I like them as a people, and they seem to like me, but there are few of them who claim ever to have been converted. Three of my most efficient stewards and brightest men say they know nothing of it; don't pray, don't see much as say grace at meals—that is, the most prominent one does not do so. Female members tell me they never pray, or even read the Bible. Somehow I can't reach them either from the pulpit or privately. What shall I do? It seems to me somebody is to blame for this state of things. It is a loose sort of Methodism, and they seem to be satisfied with being in the church."

Now the brother puts to me a very hard question. What to do in that case I am not prepared to say. They are satisfied with being in the church, and he hints that drinking, dancing, etc., are the indulgences and pastimes of some of them. They can't be reached from the pulpit nor at the fireside. Being asleep in the church, Sinai's thunders do not awaken them, and, never having known Christ, Calvary's radiant glories do not attract them. We can but sympathize with our brother, notwithstanding there is a mutual liking between his people and himself, for what are all our joys, and what is our success, if souls are not brought to Christ, and the church not built up in the most holy faith.

Of course we don't expect much from that charge in making provision for the general enlargement of Christ's kingdom. The minutes of last year show but a meager amount paid to the various collections ordered by the Conference, considering the numerical and financial strength of the work. Alas! it may be true that other works are in a similar condition. To properly sympathize with and work for the Redeemer's kingdom, one must know Christ, and, like the sun, he is seen only in His own light.

Those Books Again.—How to Defeat Proselyters.

Mr. Editor: Our Publishing House has a full catalogue of the best, purest and safest books in the world for all religious purposes, and on all subjects calculated to make our people sound in the faith, and to build them up in holiness and usefulness. These books have been written by men well versed in the Holy Scriptures, and deeply experienced in all that pertains to the salvation of the soul, and they have been read with great profit by multiplied thousand of the great Methodist brotherhood. Our doctrines and church polity—the grade of Christian experience required in order to a qualification for heaven, with its manifestation in the appropriate discharge of all our Christian duties—are so clearly set forth and proven by the word of God that to read with honest care is to admit the truth of all, and to place ourselves in a condition not to be "carried about with every wind of doctrine." But somehow we are slow in getting our denominational and religious literature into the hands of our people, and the consequence is we lose many from our church that ought to be orthodox and useful Methodists all their lives; but they do not get to read our books in time to become sufficiently indoctrinated and established in the faith to escape the persistent ingenuity of the experienced proselyter. There are some ministers in our cotemporary denominations whose habitual occupation seems to be to proselyte the ignorant, inexperienced and unstable of our church, in order to fill up the membership of their own. If through Christian courtesy we invite them into our families or pulpits, the next thing we know is they are taking advantage of our courtesy by efforts to proselyte the imperfectly read and inexperienced of our families or churches. The consequence is that not only individuals, but sometimes whole families, are lost to our church for all time to come. Now how are we to prevent this? Mainly by putting suitable books, in due time, into the hands of our children and uninformed young church members. Bishop Asbury once discovered that a sneaking proselyter was trying to lead off some of his Methodist flock, and he said "suitable means must be promptly employed to subvert him, for if God gives us spiritual children He holds us accountable for their safe keeping." We can keep our spiritual children in no better way than to get them to read suitable books when their hearts are young and tender, and before their minds become pre-occupied with dangerous and misleading errors. Brother preacher, did you not feel very sorry when those members left your pastoral charge, without even calling to bid you good-by, and joined another church? And was not their perversion more the result of ignorance of our doctrines and church polity than any other cause? What a pity you did not get into their hands, before it was too late, one or more of those little books easy of comprehension, but convincing in argument, which have relieved the doubts of so many sincere minds, and established so many in the true faith.

Missionary Meeting in London.

The English Wesleyans are justly celebrated for their missionary spirit and their liberal giving. At the anniversary meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society of the London districts, held in Exeter Hall, October 6, the chairman, Mr. Alderman McArthur, and others, delivered very impressive addresses. We quote from the London Watchman, as follows: The chairman, Mr. McArthur, said:

Success had been the trouble and difficulty of missionary societies. In former times they used to pray that God would open up doors for the introduction of the gospel; He had heard their prayers; doors had been opened; and now from almost every part of the world the cry arose: "Come over and help us." As the report stated, it was impossible for their own Society to maintain its present position, or to go forward as it ought, with its present means. Therefore they had to consider the question of retrenchment or to provide increased means. Which should it be? Were they to go forward in the name of the Lord, or should it be said of them, as was said of those of old: "The children of Ephraim, being armed and carrying bows, turned back in the day of battle." He trusted they would go forward leading the van in the warfare against sin and superstition, endeavoring to win the world for Christ. In order to do that they must consider their responsibilities and their duty. The world gave them credit for being a liberal people, and they very complacently took great credit to themselves for the amount of money they contributed to various objects; but he had no hesitation in saying as a church they had not done their duty to the missionary cause, nor had their givings been at all in proportion to their means or obligations, or the wants of the world. Let anyone look at the missionary report and see there the contributions given by their people. It was true there were some honorable exceptions, but one guinea was the usual subscription. Was this the estimate they were to form of the interest taken in the conversion of the world, or as a manifestation of their love to Christ? The number of members, as given in the last Minutes, was 377,612, and the contributions to the Missionary Society about £100,000. During the last six years we had directly spent upon intoxicating liquors, the sum of 850 millions, or 80 millions more than our national debt, and 150 millions more than the total value of all our railways. The sum which the nation devotes annually to the evangelization of the world is less than £300,000. Think of it, Christian men and women, £142,000,000 a year to the god Bacchus, and only £800,000 to the God of missions! We spend as much every two days upon Bacchus as we give to the God of missions in a twelvemonth. Was it too much to expect that every member should contribute something, and that when the large and small sums were added they should have at least an average of £1 per member? Then if they took their congregations they ought to get from them a large additional amount, so that instead of £100,000 they would have at least five times that amount, or half a million a year. Now, he did not consider that too high an estimate. It was possible they might not reach it all at once, but they should set it steadily before them, and never be satisfied until they accomplished it. There was one thing, however, which they could do, and which ought to be done at present, and that was for each subscriber to double his or her subscription. Might they not appeal to the Connexion generally and ask for this? They must also try and improve the organization of their branch auxiliaries so as to largely increase the number of subscribers. If all this were effected it would place the Society in comparative comfort, and enable it not only to maintain its present position, but to embrace those openings which presented themselves in every part of the world. Money thus given was twice blessed. It blessed him that gave and him that received. How wonderfully had this been exemplified in the history of the Society! What blessings at home as a Connexion had they not received! Think of the men whom God had given them first to the foreign field, and now filling high and important positions in the church at home. What multitudes were now before the throne from every kindred and tongue and people and nation, besides those that were now in our churches, rescued from sin and heathenism, and living in the enjoyment of the blessings of the Gospel. He need not refer to the debt of the Society's operations, or to the openings which presented themselves on the continent, Africa, India, China and Japan. These would be dwelt upon by other speakers. He might be permitted, however, to say that during the past year it was his privilege to visit some of its earlier missions on the other side of the world. He was in the Sandwich Islands where a vestige of heathenism did not exist. He spent some time in New Zealand and in the Australian Colonies. In those places they had now healthy and vigorous churches not only sustaining themselves, but, imbued with the same missionary spirit, taking charge of the several stations in the Pacific, and carrying the light of the Gospel into the regions beyond. He hoped the Methodist body would prove that they were determined by their contributions and prayers and efforts to maintain the work which God had given them, until the earth was subdued and the universe filled with the glory of God.

Rev. E. E Jenkins, M. A., speaking of mission work in India, said:

Hindûism rested upon ignorance, and as ignorance was becoming impossible in India Hindûism was becoming insupportable there. He wanted that to be understood—to the Hindûs Hindûism was becoming insupportable. Therefore those who talked about it being unjust and improper to molest the native faith in India talked nonsense; they might as well speak of entering a room with a candle at midnight and being told to keep the darkness intact. (Laughter.) When scientific knowledge came in Idolatry must go out. If Hindûism was becoming insupportable what was to take its place? He undertook to say, from his knowledge of India, that that was the question of questions among the leading minds of the country. What was to be the future religion of India? They could not make the Hindûs atheists. He was sorry to say that some who rushed in this country had tried to make atheism agreeable to the people, but the Hindûs could never become a nation of atheists. There never was a nation of atheists, for the simple reason that a nation was composed of families, and there could not be atheism with a family life. Men must have religion, and the only faith that did not fear science was Christianity, the mother of science. The question, What is to be the next religion of India? was being answered by the people themselves. Mohammedans did not intend to be Brahmins, and Brahmins did not intend to be Mohammedans, and therefore the only alternative seriously contemplated by both was this—the religion of Christianity. (Applause.) The Brahmo Somaj comprised in it the leading men of India, who said they were seeking for a pure faith, and with a Bible the New Testament to see whether there was a pure faith in that. (Applause.) The most earnest readers of the words of Christ, and the most earnest students of the life of Christ, were the members of that theistic church of the Brahmos. What was the result of their study? They had come or were coming to this: "No man spake like this Man," and in a recent lecture Chunder Sen astonished a Calcutta audience by saying: "It is not England that is coming to reign over us, but Jesus of Nazareth." (Applause.) He (Mr. Jenkins) had said that Christianity had been marching with increasing swiftness every decade during the last forty years. In 1830 the number of native Christians in India, Burmah, North and South Ceylon, was 27,000; last October an eminent statist told them the number was 450,000, and at the present time it was probably half a million.

The following extract from the speech of Mr. S. D. Waddy, Q. C. M. P., is highly suggestive:

He thought they were some men in great danger of neglecting the ordinary means, and resting to too great an extent on special efforts. They would get into difficulties as soon as they forgot that the real work of the missionary societies was not to be done by attending a May meeting and enjoying a whole day full of speeches, or by any of the—he could not help using the word—almost sensational means to which they sometimes looked. They wanted a great deal more of steady, plodding work all the year through without any inducement except the love of God. There was the same misbelief in the world as in years gone by, and they must meet it by the same old remedy. Some people had endeavored to make men better by other means than the gospel, and they had always failed. He was not going to talk politics, but we had been trying, as a nation, to better the world in a most extraordinary fashion. We had been trying what we could do with the world by means of treaties and wars; we thought we should improve matters by turning missionary stations into the advanced outposts of our arms; and he did not think on the whole that the success which had attended our efforts had been such as to make us proud of them. (Laughter.) Sometimes there had been on the part of their missionaries themselves an impatience which one could not approve, and which had led them to wish even that the sword might open for them a way to the dark places of heathenism. So far as there had been any success vouchsafed to any such schemes, what he had heard on that platform that night would be a telling answer to it, and the missionaries in South Africa would not be of opinion that the conversion of John Dunn—a Scotchman with a large number of wives—was very satisfactory, for he had laid down a rule that no missionaries shall come into his place at all. What was wanted was the quiet, calm, persistent labor of such men as William Shaw, who, without any of the munitions of war, and with a diplomacy far higher than any diplomacy of earth, brought nation after nation to the feet of Jesus clothed and in their right mind. He (the speaker) did recognize the desirability of what was called a spirited foreign policy—in missions, a very spirited one; a policy of aggression. They had in their time seen a good deal of it, and, by the mercy of God, accompanied with a good deal of success. They were told years ago by the Romanists that the Pope must be the head of the nations as well as the head of the Church; but he believed that Rome had been fatally struck; and just as the beast had been struck on the one hand so had other false systems. Everybody would recognize this fact that the end of Mohammedanism was rapidly coming—it was merely a question of time—and he believed whatever their different views of our home and foreign policy might be they would all agree that in Turkey, with regard to Mohammedanism, the bayonet-and-baggage policy was the one that ought to be carried out. (Hear, hear.) It could not be delayed much longer; it could not stand, either as an empire, a religion, or a power of any kind; it was founded on a false religion, on blood and cruelty, and the denial of God. Only one thing could stand, that was the eternal purpose of God Almighty with regard to this world, and because he looked to that he had a perfect hope and confidence in the future of the world.

From editorial correspondence of the Holston Methodist, we clip the following:

Some of the works have paid up pretty much all their assessments. This shows that the preachers are better collectors than the stewards. For this strange state of affairs there must be some other explanation. It is strange that Methodists will meet every claim but that of their pastors. They will pay the bishop in full, pay the foreign missionary in full, pay the superannuated assessment in full, pay everything in full, and only pay the pastor in part! Why is this? One reason is patent: The bishops are beginning to seem to make a man's standing depend on having up his collections. Collections threaten to "snow under" conversions. The jingle of money is about to become louder than the shouts of new converts. Let us stop and reflect. Is the preacher's efficiency in the other departments of church work to be ignored? Is the inquiry never to be made, how many souls have been converted on your work this year? Or is the whole inquiry to be, how much money have you raised for church purposes? The money interests of the church should not be neglected, it is true. Money is "the sinews of war" to the church as well as to the world; but if we attach excessive importance to the mere receiving of money, are we not resisting in the means and forgetting the end? There may be a great deal of mere secular ambition in the activity of some men who always pride themselves in full connections. A report of that sort will please the bishop, and is imagined to be the "open sesame" to place and honors. There is danger of simony right here. These collections should be raised on their own merits. The character of the circuit and the standing of the preacher should not be the prime motives. The glory of God and the good of the church should be the moving considerations. Many a poor fellow has raked and scraped his circuit for the bishop and the "heathen Chinee," and left but little for himself. He has stinted himself and family, perhaps gone in debt, without the probability of paying, all to ensure full collections and to make a big show at Conference.

I mean not to say a word against these collections, as such. Their importance, in their place, should not be overlooked. But prominence should be given to the spiritual instead of the secular.

"Bishop Kavanaugh organized the Indiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, with seven preachers, at Gosport, Indiana, on the twenty-fifth ultimo. And yet some pretend to believe that the Methodist Episcopal Church ought to withdraw from the Southern States while the Church of the Confederacy is trying to push its way into the North."

We clip the above, says the Southern Methodist, from the Atlantic Advocate, edited by Dr. Fuller.

The organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Indiana, was a necessity. A political gospel, preached from Methodist pulpits in that State drove from that church hundreds who were unwilling to see the house of God used for partisan political purposes, or the pulpit become the arena for political strife. Ministers and members who were Democratic in politics were proscribed and held and dealt with as heretics. Forbearance was no longer a virtue. These people were Methodists. Many of them had been brought up in its lap and nurtured at its breast. They loved its doctrines, and could not turn away from the church at whose altars their fathers and mothers had worshiped.

Besides, many of them were Kentuckians, and it is not surprising that they looked to the home of their childhood, where they knew the church maintained its integrity for a pure gospel teaching without any political alloy.

Our preachers crossed the river and found a welcome, and now hundreds have gathered to their standard.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Indiana, preaches only Christ. Any preacher who would introduce politics into his pulpit would be sent from the State. God is blessing their labors, and among their members are persons who vote the Republican ticket, and who are laboring side by side with us in our mission of good. We are not there to abuse the people to whom we preach, and among whom we live. We are there to point them to Christ, and will endeavor to meet our responsibilities as Christians. Will your record in the South vindicate your appearance in that region?

Dr. Summers, president of the Board of Missions, in a communication to the Nashville Christian Advocate, October 16, says:

It will be seen by the appointments of the Tennessee Conference that Dr. Kelley has been appointed assistant treasurer of the Board of Missions. This appointment was made by the Bishop in conformity with a resolution of the Board of Missions, as follows: "That the Bishop presiding at the Tennessee Conference be requested to appoint Dr. D. C. Kelley assistant treasurer to this board; and that Dr. Kelley be charged also with the part of the financial accounts committed to the secretary."

The secretary is obliged to be absent a large part of his time attending the sessions of Conferences, etc., and the treasurer is so confined by his pressing engagements as a merchant, that it was necessary to procure assistance in the bureau work of the board. The state of Dr. Kelley's health forbade his taking regular pastoral work this year, and his familiarity with the work of the board indicated him as the proper man for this service. There will be no additional expense to the board.

CHRIST AND THE THEATER.—Mr. James M. Sutherland, a converted actor, recently gave the following experience:

"For twenty years I struggled to be a Christian. I would go to my room and try to pray; but would end in sticking to the old life, and go to drinking. Not till I left the theater, never to return, did I find Christ. The other day a young man asked me if he could go the theater and be a consistent Christian. I answered the young man, 'If I could not induce Christ to go into the theater with me when I was earning bread for my wife and little ones, you cannot do it if you go for pleasure and pay fifty cents extra for your seat.'"

BE SHORT.—We have on hand a number of excellent articles, for which it is difficult to find place on account of their length. Four pages of ordinary foolscap is as long as any article ought to be for our use. Three such pages are a more available length. When an article runs up to six, eight, ten and even fifteen pages, we confess we are appalled and greatly perplexed.

—We do not know the history of all the churches which are located at camp grounds, but we do know the history of a few such, and they cannot truthfully boast of a very enviable record. The home with them is camp meeting. They talk about camp meeting from one year's end to the end of another, and this is about the most that may be said for them. They are usually destitute of prayer meetings, love-feasts, Sunday schools, and all other social meetings. They rarely say anything about missions, or the poor of the church, or the pastor's salary, unless it be to provide to raise money for all these claims at camp meeting.

Camp meetings are good in their place, but you cannot live spiritually on camp meetings. The soul will perish if it has only this one yearly feast, just as surely as the body would perish under similar treatment. You cannot live on one meal a year. Cease to talk so much about past camp meetings and the one yet in future, and go to work to live every day. Have prayer meeting, love-feasts, Sunday schools—do mission work, and all the varied Christian duties, that your soul may live and not die.

Watchman, Boston.

—Be careful about making vows. Be careful to keep them. Many persons make solemn vows of amendment when suffering from the immediate consequences of sin, when smarting under the lash, when overwhelmed with remorse. Perhaps it is partly on this account that life is strewn with the fragments of so many broken promises. The best time to make a vow of amendment is when we stand midway between the pleasure and the pain of sin, able to weigh both, and to form a determination in view of both. A resolution formed when pain is present, and when all conception of the pleasure is lost, is apt to be revised when the opposite sort of feeling is created in its turn. Conversions which proceed wholly from emotion, though the emotion be as sacred as that of penitence for folly and crime, are not so apt to prove permanent as those which proceed from a mingling of emotion and reason.

But there are other causes of violated vows. Not seldom does the soul promise to begin a new course at some future definite time, in order to escape the urgency of conscience. Pressed to give itself to God at once, it resorts to the diplomacy of delay. It does not mean at the time to be false. It really fancies that next month or next year will be a convenient season, and it acts upon the fancy hastily without taking time to consider. But behind the thought, and suggesting it, is a spirit who knows better; and were Christ present in the flesh, He would recognize the mask, as He did when Peter dissuaded Him from His crucifixion, and would say: "Get thee behind me, Satan."

But the duty of fulfilling such holy vows is clear, no matter when or how they were uttered. The soul that refuses lies, and that not to man, but to God who will remember and judge. Christian, did you promise at the last covenant meeting that you would be more circumspect? And are you going on in the old way, forgetting your closet, neglecting family prayer, silent about religion when with your children, late at church, careless about your pew-rent, disposed to nag your pastor, or to suffer him to toil without your sympathy, untrustworthy in your business? Sinner, did you last year fix some period as the time when you would seek the salvation of your soul? And has it come only to find you reluctant and disobedient still? Are you inventing more excuses? Did you make a truce with your conscience, and do you now seek to break it? You cannot do this without guilt. The Holy Spirit, mocked with your words, may leave you forever. He does not endure such trifling without indignation.

—Not even the Sunday school, nor any other school, however good, can make amends for the defects, the faults, the vices, the negative and positive evils which spring from lack of home education. The parents whose home is not a school of morals and manners, and above all a school of religion, need not expect their delinquencies to be counteracted in any school. The impressions first made, and especially if evil, are well-nigh, if not altogether, ineffaceable. It would require a miracle to undo what has been done at home—done by neglect, or unwholesome examples and unsound precepts. Extreme indulgences, low if not base aims in life, selfish lusts, sentimental as well as fleshly, pride and vanity—O how these things seen in parents and heard from them, absolutely and entirely forbid and prevent both self-formation of a true manly character, and education such as deserves the name at the hands of others, however well qualified for their work. It is a very serious fact that for the most part home education is but a name, or, worse still, an education involving evils of stupendous magnitude, entailing not blessings, but curses, failure in life, anguish of spirit, and ruin forever.

Richmond Christian Advocate.

—A man who busies himself in work for Christ, and, specially, if he be a man of "gifts," is in danger of pride. The temptation will constantly come to exhibit himself, and then service will degenerate into performance. Watchfulness, heart-searching, and, especially, growth in grace, are imperatively demanded, if a man would "give no place to the devil." Especially growth in grace! Yes; no man is so humble as the man of largest attainments, because no other man sees how much there is to learn. Enlarge the circle of light, and you, at the same time, enlarge the boundary of darkness. The more a man gains of the knowledge and love of God, the more diminutive do his acquisitions, in contrast with the possibilities of his life, appear.

While we continue to do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements from the ADVOCATE, parties must judge for themselves as to the real value of the goods advertised. In ordering please mention the ADVOCATE.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.—January next the ADVOCATE office will adopt the cash system and business thereafter will be conducted on the basis of all the leading papers published. Subscriptions being payable in advance for such length of time as desired. The date of expiration of months will appear opposite the name of each subscriber. Immediately the subscription expires with the close of that month, at which time the paper will be discontinued, unless renewed. This will materially simplify the office work, as the printer will drop the names according to monthly expiration, and as individual partiality be shown, as every subscriber will have a standing notice of expiration. It will also facilitate agents in giving receipts in accordance with office records, corresponding with printed dates. Where advance payments exceeding one year are made the year to which paid will also be inserted. Errors in names and dates will be promptly corrected when advised, and we must ask you to notify the office of such cases when known, as our desire is to avoid all friction, or causes for complaint, and have everything as nearly perfect as possible. Accounts will be kept with agents as heretofore, to which payments may be made, or sent direct to this office, if preferred.

CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES.—The names of Messrs. Anderson, Harris & Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, are familiar to our numerous readers, and it is hardly necessary in saying that they are gentlemen to be relied on. Their aim is to present to the trade, and those requiring carriages or buggies for their own use, first class work at low prices, and at the same time by the introduction of styles not now made by other manufacturers. They employ none but the most skilled mechanics, and use only the best quality of stock. The work is done in the most substantial manner, the trimming, painting, finishing, etc., is of a superior order. This concern is personally known to us, and hence we take pleasure in recommending these estimable gentlemen to our Southern friends. Write and get their catalogue, and you will be astonished at their prices.

MARBLE.—The readers of the ADVOCATE wanting monuments of any kind should patronize R. L. Rosebrough Sons, of 1121 Broadway, St. Louis, Mo. It is almost a quarter of a century since this reliable firm came into existence, and they have an establishment to-day which turns out as much work as any in the West. They are looked upon as honorable merchants, and their prices are as low as any first class concern in the country. See advertisement, and get their prices. We heartily indorse them to any who may require their services.

ST. JAMES HOTEL, ST. LOUIS, MO. On a recent visit to the above city it was our good fortune to stay at the "St. James Hotel," kept by Maj. Thomas P. Miller, proprietor, and Capt. L. D. Watson, manager. The major is an experienced hotel man, having been in the business all his life, and the captain one of the best managers in hotel life in the West. Our friends visiting the "Mound City" will find this the best hotel for the money in that city. You can get excellent board at the restaurant for very reasonable prices. The rooms are large and well ventilated, and the situation everything to be desired, as it is almost in the heart of the city. So if you want to live well, at prices that it is impossible to get elsewhere in the city for the same accommodation, suitable for a moderate income, and at the same time to feel at home, for you cannot feel otherwise with two such gentlemen as those already named, go to the St. James.

TO THOSE who wish to purchase anything in the musical line, we recommend the well known establishment of Mr. Philip Werlein, where full satisfaction will be given as to price and quality of any instrument. Call and see for yourself.

THE ladies all know by this time that Messrs. E. H. Adams & Bro. have received their season's fall and winter goods. Just glance at the advertisement on this page and see the chaps they make; but these are only a few of their goods. Their large store is packed full of goods, and you don't see what you want any more for it.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—Fruit Jars Mason pints, $1; quarts, $1 25; two quarts, $1 50 per dozen; American China dinner sets, $15 $18. Equal in looks and usefulness as French China. 49

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well regulated establishment. To those desiring to combine this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so thoroughly a first-class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3 50 per day.

Indigestion, Dyspepsia, nervous prostration and all forms of general debility relieved by taking Mensman's Peptonized Beef Tonic, the only preparation of beef containing its entire nutrition properties. It is not a mere stimulant like the extracts of beef, but contains blood-making, force-generating and life-sustaining properties; is invaluable in all enfeebled conditions, whether the result of exhaustion, nervous prostration, overwork or acute disease; particularly if resulting from pulmonary complaints. CASWELL, HAZARD & CO., Proprietors, New York. Sold by druggists.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, chap, blister or leave black spots in the pores. Nothing can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 507 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel).

LADIES DELICATE AND FEEBLE.

Those languid, tired, nervous sensations rarely you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet; that constant drain that is taking from your system all its former elasticity, driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces, rendering you irritable and fretful, can easily be removed by the use of that marvelous remedy, Hop Bitters. Irregularities, depressions of your system are relieved at once, while the special cause of periodical pain are permanently removed. Will you heed his? See "Hop."

Wilbor's Cod Liver Oil and Lime.—Persons who have been taking Cod Liver Oil will be pleased to learn that Dr. Wilbor has succeeded, from directions of several professional gentlemen, in combining the pure Oil and Lime in such a manner that it is pleasant to the taste, and its effects in Lung complaints are truly wonderful. Very many persons whose cases were pronounced hopeless, and who had taken the Cod Oil for a long time without marked effect, have been entirely cured by using this preparation. Beware and get the genuine. Manufactured only by A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

Yellow Fever Startles

The nervous hit never depresses the thoughtful or judicious. If it comes, the latter will provide a supply of Maguire's Camphrange, and by the judicious use of this wonderful Liver Regulator, Blood Purifier, Stomach Cleanser, Purgative and System Renovator, secure safety and happiness.

THE reason why medical practitioners do not hesitate to prescribe Dr. F. Wilbor's Anti Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic is as follows: Messrs. Wheelock, Finley & Co., of New Orleans, its proprietors, have published its composition, and physicians have approved it because it contains no dangerous drug, and because it invariably proves successful. It is for sale by all druggists.

BILIOUS PERSONS should avoid the use of coffee, and nervous persons the use of tea. An agreeable and healthful substitute is found in Cocoa. Walter Baker & Co.'s Chocolate and Cocoa preparations are highly recommended by the most eminent chemists, and are sold by all grocers.

QUERIPEL'S COD LIVER OIL JELLY.

APPROVED by the Academy of Medicine of New York for purest cases, being that and all other cod liver oil preparations, scientific and general medicines. The most vital therapeutic virtues belonging to cod liver oil can be retained, and will be found secreted in the purest form in the jelly. One teaspoonful of this jelly daily is equal to the quantity of the liquid oil, and the most delicate stomach will not reject it. For sale by all druggists, and at 16 QUEEN & CRESCENT pl., New York.

USE OF LIME.—The advantages of the use of lime are so many and so great that it is almost impossible to enumerate the whole of them. Their effects may be described as being both chemical and mechanical, as being exercised both on the organic and inorganic constituents of the soil. The following may be taken as a summary of the principal benefits:

"1. A large produce of cereal crops of superior quality. This is especially the case with wheat, which becomes thinner skinned and yields more flour. The peas grown upon limed lands are better boilers.

"2. Upon deep alluvial and new soils it increases the crop of potatoes and renders them less waxy. Sprinkled over potatoes in the store heap it preserves them, and when riddled over the cut sets, it wonderfully increases their fertility.

"3. Lime eradicates the finger and toe disease in turnips, and gives great soundness and more nutritive qualities to the bulbs.

"4. It gives, when applied to meadow lands, a larger production of nutritious grasses, and checks foot rot in sheep pastured upon them. It also exterminates bent, as well as coarse and sour grasses, destroys couch grass and acts powerfully upon the rye grass is.

"5. Upon arable land it destroys the corn marigold, and weeds of various kinds.

"6. It rapidly decomposes vegetable matter, producing a large amount of food for plants in the form of carbonic acid gas.

"7. It destroys or neutralizes the acids in the soils, hence its advantage to sour soils.

"8. It acts powerfully upon some of the inorganic parts of soils, especially on the sulphate of iron found in peaty soils, and sulphates of magnesia and alumina.

"9. It proves fatal to worms and slugs, and the larvæ of injurious insects, though favorable to the growth of shell bearers.

SALT FOR POULTRY.—The question as to whether salt is injurious to poultry has often been mooted. To get at the true facts I have been feeding a dish all my fowls, young and old alike, and closely watching the result. I have oil to cold mush and hot, in bran and everything else, all the spring and summer (so far) with the following results: The poultry will eat all kinds of salted food in preference to unsalted; they are better in general health and, as a use of any kind to young or old, the first year I have been able to say so, and they are all beginning to moult, many of them laying as though for pudding. Eggs are cheap now, and the hens will be very few fall laying when the weather is cold and eggs scarce.

This may, or may not be, the reason of feeding salt largely to hens, but I am compelled to believe this to be so, as are some other peculiarities. I have noticed one feature which may not be in favor of salt—hens have seemed to be more persistently inclined to sit, or being very difficult to break off the inclination; they sit much closer than usual. All keep voraciously fond of green food of any kind, and have eaten a large quantity of pepper, grass, young corn, and other such foods. My observation leads me to the conclusion that salt is a healthful condiment for all poultry, and in all points is beneficial to them. Pigeons are extremely fond of salt in any form, and why should not our poultry be also? Such being the true state of the case, it behooves us to consider their needs and attend to them.—Country Gentleman.

PINKS AND DOLLS.—Mary Wager Fisher asks "whether he can tell us all about double-fringed fragrant pinks?" I should think will be a difficult question to answer, as I have been making inquiries of the best seedsmen, at home and abroad, for many years, and have not been able to obtain them. They were very common fifty years since, and were seen in most of the gardens in town and were called garden pinks; they were hardy perennials, and continued many years on the same roots, requiring much less care than carnations and picotees, and were nearly as handsome; they grew readily from seed, most of which came double, of various colors and very fragrant, a portion being clove-scented.

The Iris, or Flemish Lis, is propagated from seed or division of the roots; neither very readily, yet by the latter mode a good supply can be obtained in a few years; there are now many handsome varieties of the English, German and Spanish and the new Japanese kinds which I have not seen are said to be very beautiful. Lilium longiflorum is usually hardy, but it is well to cover it with two or three inches of dry muck, tan bark, or any of the refuse on the rubbish in the garden, on the approach of winter. The bulbs should be planted three or four inches deep—from the top of the bulb—and if the soil is not of a light sandy nature, put nearly an inch of sand under and all around the bulb.—N. Y. Tribune.

DISEASE IN POULTRY.—A serious disease is prevalent among poultry. The symptoms are: Bowels black and gangrenous; the liver soft, disintegrated and filled with black spots, which under the microscope show mass of broken up cells with dark blood-globules. It is a true enteric or intestinal fever, originating from gastric disorganization, as in the typhoid fever in horses, cattle and swine. Generally the dead fowls are exceedingly fat about the intestines, although not plump as to general contour. The symptoms are a yellowness of comb, wattle and skin about the eyes, dullness, and disinclination to move; difficulty in swallowing; great heat of body and costiveness; drowsy, lethargy, drowsy green, frothy, or black fetid discharges. The disease is a true blood disorder, and, in all probability, results from overfeeding and forcing for the production of eggs; just as the typhoid fever of swine is caused by corn; an effort of nature to excrete, by intestinal discharges, the excess of nutrition from sufficient pasture, or the feeding of dry herbage. A remedy has been found in bleeding in full-grain doses, given three or four times, followed by proper nourishment. In some cases relief has been found, and the disease stopped, by giving a teaspoonful of soda freely, or copperas to each dozen fowls, either dissolved in the drinking water or mixed with food, such as meal mash. The latter treatment will afford a reliable check in the early stages of the disease, and has stopped the disease in my flocks.—N. Y. Times.

TO MAKE HARD CUSTARD.—Put into three pint of milk in heat; when just at the boiling point take off and let it stand to cool. Have ready to use three eggs beaten up with half a teaspoonful of sugar. Beat eggs and sugar gradually into the milk, mixing thoroughly; flavor and pour into a baking dish. Set the dish upon a dripping pan, with about an inch of boiling water covering the surface of the pan; as the water evaporates renew it. Bake half an hour in a medium oven. Four eggs to a quart of milk is not sufficient for a custard. Use eight if you can, but no less than six. Scald the milk first, beat the eggs well, and stir them thoroughly into the milk. Do not cook it too much, or it turns to curds and whey. If cooked in cups set them in a dripping pan half full of hot water and watch them when they are done to a turn. If seasoned with vanilla, and kept a few hours in an ice chest, such custards are very nearly as good as ice cream. Bake custard by setting dish in a pan of hot water while in the oven, and you will have a better tasting custard.

VENTILATING ROOMS.—A simple device for ventilating bed rooms is within the reach of every one having an ordinary window in his room, by which fresh outer air can be admitted in small quantity with such an upward current as will prevent its being felt as an injurious draft by the inmates. It is particularly adapted to sleeping rooms, when the weather is too cold to admit of an open window. Thus: start both top and bottom sashes of the window half an inch, which is not quite enough to clear the rebate or stop-beads at top and bottom, but which leaves an opening of an inch between the meeting rails, through which a current enters, but diverted upward by the glass, as it should be, so as not to fall directly to the floor, as its coolness might otherwise induce it to do. It thus becomes well mixed with the air of the room without being felt as a draft.—The Plumber.

SETTING STRAWBERRIES IN AUTUMN.—Although Spring is the best time generally for transplanting strawberry plants, yet it often becomes desirable to do the work later in the season. The plants if set in August, make some growth, and obtain a good foothold before Winter. One of the difficulties with late planting later is the liability to be thrown out by frost. The work will succeed well in September if the following precautions are observed: Procure strong plants of the same season's growth, with abundant roots, and set in a rich, deep, and mellow soil which has a good surface and bottom drainage; spread the roots out well like an umbrella, which will prevent heaving out better than if crowded together; if the soil is dry, settle it about the roots with water when the hole is partly filled; mulch with manure and keep the surface well pulverized with such a mulching in Winter, taking care not to cover the crowns of the plants. If the soil is heavy or clayey make it slightly convex about the plants, and press it firmly with the foot, leaving a smooth surface to throw off the water of rains.—Country Gentleman.

CHOWDER.—One peck of green tomatoes chopped fine; soak over night in a strong brine; then drain and add one large head of cabbage chopped fine; cover with vinegar, and cook slowly one hour. Prepare one pound of sugar, one tablespoonful each of cinnamon, cloves, allspice and pepper, four tablespoonfuls of ground mustard, and a pint of grated horse-radish; mix all together with two quarts of vinegar; bring to the boiling point; drain the cabbage and tomato, and pour this mixture over. Put it tightly in a jar, and set in a cool place. Two red peppers and six onions may be added if liked.—Rural New Yorker.

APPLE PRESERVE.—Peel, halve and core six large apples selecting those of the same size having prepared a syrup made of one pound of granulated sugar, and a pint of water, when it boils, drop in the apple with the rind and juice of a lemon, and two or three cloves. As soon as they are tender, care must be taken that they do not fall in pieces; take the halves out one by one, and arrange on one side upon meat in a glass dish; drop a bit of currant jelly into each piece; boil down the syrup, and when cool, pour around the apples. This makes a very nice preserve for tea.—Cultivator.

MUTTON CUTLETS AND PEAS.—Lay the cutlets, ready trimmed, into a saucepan, with some butter and pepper and salt. Cook them on a brisk fire, taking care to turn them as soon as one side is done, and not to overcook them. Boil some peas in plenty of water, as fast as possible with salt to taste and a small handful of mint; do not cover the saucepan. When done remove the mint, strain off the water and give the peas one boil up in a saucepan with a piece of butter, a tablespoonful of flour and a pinch of sugar. Serve with the cutlets round them.

PIE CRUST CRISP.—In making any pie which has a juicy nature, the juice soaks into the crust, making it soggy and unfit to eat. To prevent this: Beat an egg well and with a brush, or dish of cloth, wet the crust of the pie with the beaten egg. Just before you put on the pie crust rim. For pies which have a long crust also, we brush with the same before baking, which gives them a handsome yellow brown. Apples beaten to a pulp, ginger cakes, and so just the thing for pies, by putting in a little sugar.

EVE-DOOR CAKES.—One pint of milk, three eggs one tablespoonful of sugar and a little salt. Stir in five pints of flour in the consistency of pone cake. Bake on buttered cups, or saucers. Indian flour.

THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
Celebrated American
WORM SPECIFIC
VERMIFUGE.
SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance becomes pale and sickly, or a circumscribed redness of one cheek, while the opposite one is pale; the pupils dilate; the eyes become dull; a slimy mucus gathers about the teeth; the breath is fetid; there is a swelling of the upper lip, sometimes of the nostrils, with occasional bleeding at the nose; the appetite is variable, sometimes voracious, at others entirely gone; occasional nausea, with vomiting of slimy mucus; bowels alternately costive and lax; belly tender to the touch, sometimes swollen and hard, with occasional griping pains about the navel; the stools are variable in appearance, sometimes containing worms, at others mucus in considerable quantities; the urine is pale and copious; the patient is restless, grinds the teeth during sleep, which is disturbed by frightful dreams; the hands frequently find their way to the nose; the upper lip is frequently drawn up, showing the teeth; the breath is sometimes very offensive; the patient complains of headache, dizziness, and sometimes has fits.

When any of the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. C. McLANE'S VERMIFUGE

will certainly effect a cure.

IT DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY in any form; it is an innocent preparation, and may be taken with perfect safety by the most delicate infant.

The genuine Dr. McLane's Vermifuge bears the signature of C. McLane and Fleming Bros. on the wrapper.

DR. C. McLANE'S
LIVER PILLS

are confidently recommended as a reliable remedy for all the diseases of the liver, such as Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Constipation of the bowels, Piles, and all diseases arising from a disordered liver or stomach. Such diseases as Bilious Colic, Bilious Fever, Inflammation of the Bowels, Worm Fever, and Worms of all kinds, will be speedily relieved by taking a dose of these Pills in small quantities.

AGUE AND FEVER.

No better cathartic can be used preparatory to, or after taking Quinine.

As a simple purgative they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated. Each box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

Each wrapper bears the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS.

Inferior and worthless imitations are often palmed off upon the credulous, by dealers, who, for the sake of gain, will recommend them as "just as good as McLane's Liver Pills," or "McLane's Pills in another wrapper." Do not be deceived by such statements, but insist upon having Dr. McLane's Liver Pills, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

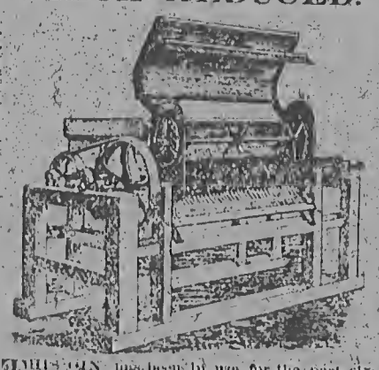
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin,
PATENTED JULY 16, 1873.
PRICE REDUCED.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past six seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It overlooks all friction at the end of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same amount of seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work with the same time with less running steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed, being cleaner every case, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton, on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, will be an extra profit over Gin, added to increased amount of work done more than covers the cost of Gin. Gin is very reliable, and guaranteed to be made as well as any Gin in the country. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

EDUCATIONAL ITEMS.

—Yale has now 909 students.

—The buildings for Mr. Holloway's College for Women in London will cost $350,000. The whole expense contemplated is over $2,500,000.

—Williams College has received from the late Judge Rice, of Iowa, a bequest of $20,000, of which some $5 000 is to be applied to the establishment of Latin and Greek prizes.

—Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill., was attended by 80 students in theology during the past year. Diplomas were conferred upon thirteen, and the degree of N. D. upon five. Under the presidency of Dr. Nindé the institution will no doubt enter upon a career of increased prosperity. The next term begins September 18th.

—Dr. M'Cosh, in a recent address before the New Jersey State Teachers' Association, held at Long Branch, advocated a closer relation between high schools and colleges, a larger introduction into high schools of obligatory education, and a class of schools intermediate between the high schools and colleges. He urged the necessity of religious teaching as a permeating element of the whole system.

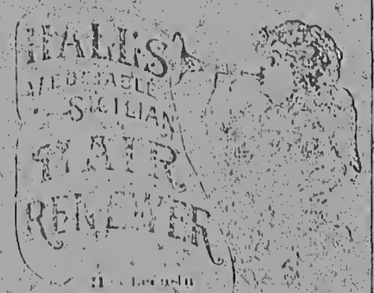
—The American Philological Association, which met at Newport recently, adopted a set of rules for simplifying our spelling. The rules recommended are these: 1. Omit u from ough or gh when pronounced as o short as in though, helth, etc. 2. Omit silent e after a short vowel, as in hav, giv, etc. 3. Write f for ph in such words as alfabet, fantom, etc. 4. When a word ends with a double letter, omit the last as in shal, cliff, eg, etc. 5. Change ed final to t where it has the sound of t as in hi-ht, impresst, etc.

—The death of Lewis B. Monroe, A. M., the late Dean of the School of Oratory, Boston University, has created a vacancy which it will be found difficult to fill satisfactorily. It has been decided to discontinue the school for the present. It is hoped that its work may be resumed in a year or two in a modified form in the post-graduate department, the "School of All Sciences." For the first time in its history, the College of Liberal Arts will this year be open to a limited number of qualified special students not members of any department.

—The rich Cambridge University prizes, amounting to £1,250 a year, are about to be increased. It is rumored, to the annoyance of many throughout the institution, that no more fellowships will be awarded for six years, and the emoluments of the six £250 a year. It is possible, also, that the minor fellowships will be awarded only for one year at a time, and their continuance or exchange for foundation scholarships will be dependent on conduct and success in study at the university, and that the maximum amount of these minor awards will be fixed at £150. There is also talk of the creation of a new office of "Professor of Instruction."

—All regulations for the government of the Women's College of the N. W. University, Half Acre, Evanston are made by the Faculty of the College of Liberal Arts. All cases of discipline requiring suspension or dismissal, are referred by the dean to this faculty for its judgment and action. The dean herself is a member of the Faculty. It has its own by-laws and full rights. Its departments of study, rules, and methods of study or management and instruction, and the power to confer degrees and honors, are identical with those conferred by the Trustees of the Northwestern University. Students have also always required to enroll in the college of liberal arts, unless excused by the Advisory Committee to go elsewhere. The organization of the Women's College makes available for connection of women all the means of a well-equipped and well-endowed college for men, and has been sought at Harvard without success. Instruction in the organized classes of the College of Liberal Arts.—Western Christian Advocate.

—It is reported that the ten infidels nominated by the French Chamber to succeed the legislators removed by the primary instruction bill will not be introduced several important changes in the French schools. Primary instruction will be made gratuitous, obligatory, and non-sectarian. The "Ave Maria" will be allowed in the schools. No public teacher will be asked from the books of a religious order; but all clergymen not belonging to authorized religious orders will be permitted to open private schools. All religious instruction in the public schools is prohibited; but such instruction may be given between lessons, should the parents desire it. The report of the committee provides that instruction shall be given in the primary schools in morals, reading, writing, elements of French literature, geography, history, elements of natural science, physics and moral sciences, their application to agriculture, health, and the industrial arts, with manual labor and the use of various implements, the elements of drawing, modeling, and military gymnastics. In addition to these, for the boys, is to be exercises; and for the girls, needle work. Independent.



BUCKINGHAM'S DYE FOR THE WHISKERS

The Lequet-LeRoy Institute

A NO KINDERGARTEN DAY AND BOARDING School for Young Ladies and Children, 2486 Camp Street. This institution has been reopened under the auspices of the Misses Wolfe, Estelle W. Wolfe, L. and Corinne, the latter pupils of the late Mrs. Raoul, daughters of Judge L. Wolfe. Miss Corinne Wolfe assumes the name of Mme Lequet LeRoy, whose good will and right to conduct the School, under the old name they have purchased. Except in so far as the proprietors may enter into active service, there will be no change of teachers. No change whatever in the records and management of the school. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the patronage heretofore so liberally extended to the institution, and that of their friends, and the public generally, promising strict devotion to every interest of the pupils committed to their charge.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corruption tending down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, offensive odors, mental deformities, and, finally, consumption. These first to last it is ever aggressive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. The only just and certain cure is possible. It may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is

It does not require ten minutes to demonstrate the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing remedy of every known to science. Balsamic and Cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar, that the more breathing converts them into a dense smoke or vapor. This is inhaled taken right to the diseased parts. No heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. This treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by thousands, who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT.—Circulars, etc., Sent Free—Mail. Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address, DR. M. W. CASE, 938 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

BOGUS CERTIFICATES.

It is no vile drugged stuff, pretending to be made of wonderful foreign roots, barks, etc., and puffed up by long bogus certificates of pretended miraculous cures, but a simple, pure, effective medicine, made of well-known valuable remedies, that furnishes its own certificates by its cures We refer to Hop Bitters, the purest and best of medicines. See "Truths" and "Proverbs," in another column. —Adv.

Ginger Snaps.—Two cups flour; two teaspoonfuls Kellogg's Baking Powder; half cup butter; half cup sugar; half cup ginger; one cup of molasses, and one cup of water.

A little Vermont girl called at a drug store, and said: "My mother wants ten cents' worth of jumps." This astonished the clerk. The child insisted that it was jumps she had been sent for, but returned to her mother for instructions. Very soon she came back and said it was hops that she wanted.

VASELINE.

You may hunt the world over, and still will not find
A maid of the household, which brings to the mind
The idea of value, more plain to be seen
Than petroleum jelly, the famed Vaseline.

If a cut or a sprain, or a wound or a burn
From peace to confusion, the household shall turn,
On the shelf should be found the foe of all pain,
And quiet shall reign in the household again.

If our dearest and fairest are kissed by the sun,
And the touch of his lips is too rough to be borne,
Kind Vaseline comes as an ally between,
And the cheek takes on velvet it had not else seen.

If the voice it is hoarse, the throat it is sore,
Take the jelly at once, and the trouble is o'er.
In fact read the circular, and from it glean
All the virtue and claims of the famed Vaseline

Another course of the decline of morals has been the publication of the disgusting details of crime by many even respectable dailies. The drunken brute who beats and kills his wife or child is exalted into notice by head-lines, by a column of intensely written paragraphs. The progress of his wretched, sinful life, the particulars of his crime are wrought up in attractive sentences, intended to catch and hold the eye. No crime is too filthy to be spread out in all its vileness, and to be returned to again and again as new particulars are discovered. A morbid appetite has been created in the young, and fed day after day upon fresh horrors, daintily and skillfully served up. The art of describing vileness by suggestion has been studied and acquired, and the man of such an accomplishment has no need to beg for a place. Everybody is familiar with the argument that the exposure of crime acts as a preventive. The testimony of experience is that the newspaper exposures of the past twenty or twenty five years have had no preventive influence, but have debased and polluted the minds of the young, have made men familiar with crime, have given to criminals a fame they are proud of. One of the most thrilling passages in one of the orations of Mr. Gough is that in which he expresses his longing for ability to blot out of his memory the scenes he witnessed and the words he heard in the days when he associated with the dissolute. So many a man has reason to long for ability to drive from his recollections the descriptions of vice which he has read in the daily paper.—Christian Intelligencer.

DISCOVERY by which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the Hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Comparative Truthfulness of Nature and Revelation.

When a man looks into the water or a mirror nature tells him that there is a man on the other side, and tells him this as plainly as anything can be told by facts or words. It shows him the man—his head, his body, his limbs, his motions; it shows him there not once merely, but many times, and shows them to him as long and as minutely as he cares to look at them. It is a plain assertion by nature that there is such a man, as plain as that there is a rock or house or anything else of which nature informs us. And yet in all this nature tells what is not true. There is no man, or indeed anything else. It is a falsehood entire, that has not even the partial justification of a misrepresentation. It is a lie made out of the whole cloth. It once deceived the race, and still deceives every child that is born, and would deceive us all if we did not know that nature was lying; it having ceased to deceive us merely because the lie is found out. Nature still, however, continues to utter it every day, and, though it fools nobody now but children and an occasional simpleton, it is the continuous voice of nature on that point, as fixed and unmistakable as anything to be found in Scripture.

So nature tells us that the sun goes round the earth. It shows him rising, moving, setting. It makes him appear like anything else we see moving. The rate of his motion is given, and his course, and effects on day and night. It is one of the most common and important facts in our experience. And yet in this nature tells what is not true; and, for all else she tells us, we would never under ordinary circumstances find out the mistake. For six thousand years she made the world believe the lie, and makes half the world believe it to-day. And though we have discovered by an intricate process that it is not true, and that, perhaps, nature does not mean it, still it is what she says plainly to every one that looks at the sun; and her insincerity does not make it any the less a false statement. The Book of Nature tells us as plainly that the sun goes round as the Book of Revelation tells us that it was once commanded to stand still. The false assertion of the Bible, if it is false, is simply based on the previous false assertion of nature; and if we can believe nature implicitly, without any doubt that she always speaks the truth when rightly understood, it ought not to be so hard to believe the Bible when it merely takes up and repeats an utterance of nature. For the Bible, though it says some things as its own, says others on the authority of nature; and if they are not true it is nature's lie, and not the Bible's; the Bible merely gives them as it got them, and gives nature as its informant. If, therefore, nature says to the Bible you are a liar, the Bible can respond, so are you. In all the discrepancies between science and the Bible, where the latter is supposed to have lied, nature lied first, and if the Bible is to be charged with a mistake it results from believing what nature said, that nature which is admitted by most scientists to be infallible.—Good Company.

A Crane with a Wooden Leg.—In London—in St. James's Park—there once lived a crane. By some accident he broke one of his legs, and a kind doctor who saw him in pain cut it off above the knee. The bird got well, but how was he to get about in the world? He couldn't use a crutch, as a man with one leg can, nor had he any friends to wheel him about in an invalid-chair, as some sick people have when they can't walk.

I don't know what the poor bird would have done; but a soldier, who knew how to do a good many things saw the crane's trouble, took pity on him, and went to work to help him. He made a wooden leg, with a joint for a knee, and he managed to fasten it to the poor cripple, so that he could walk about and take care of himself. It was not a pretty leg, like his other, but it was useful, and he was satisfied with it. For a long time this wooden-legged bird was one of the sights of the park, and very proudly he bore himself before the crowds of curious boys and girls who came to see him.

My stock consists of the unrivaled
Chickering Pianos,
The Excellent
Mathushek Pianos,
The Reliable and Fine Toned
Hale Pianos.

These Pianos possess all the desirable musical and mechanical qualities of first-class Pianos, and have reached a point of excellence which it seems scarcely possible to surpass. They are constructed of the very best material throughout, and are of the finest workmanship. Their tone is sonorous and brilliant, and possesses a peculiar singing quality found in no other Piano. All improvements developed in the art of Piano-making during the last ten years in Europe and this country have been applied to the above Pianos. As to DURABILITY these Pianos are unsurpassed. Not only will they last during a lifetime, but their tone will actually IMPROVE by use for many years.

Prices lower than they have ever been, and my terms to suit every purse.

TESTIMONIALS FROM WELL-KNOWN PERSONS.

From Mrs. General Sherman.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21, 1870.

Messrs. Lynch & Gomien:

Gentlemen—I am very much pleased with the Piano you made for me. It is really a fine instrument in every respect and is admired by all who have seen and heard it, for its fine tone, delicacy of touch, and beauty of finish. Many good musicians and distinguished persons have called since it has been in our parlor, and all pronounce it a fine instrument. We ourselves are charmed with it. I shall most certainly recommend it to my friends who may wish to purchase.

I am, very truly and respectfully yours,
Ellen B. E. Sherman,
205 I Street.

St. James, December 27, 1873.

Messrs. Lynch & Gomien:

Gentlemen—I am very happy to be able to rank your Pianos as one of the very best I ever had and saw. I think the mouth and brilliancy of tone required to perform the finest pieces of modern and classical masters are equal to any Piano made in this country. Hoping that your Pianos will also stand our climate as well as any other manufactured at the North. I shall with much pleasure recommend them wherever I have an opportunity. Very respectfully yours,

Anthony Wimmer
Professor of Music, St. Mary, Jefferson College, St. James, La., (Convent, P. O.)

From the World Renowned Artist, Camilla Urso.

New York, May 27, 1873.

Messrs. Lynch & Gomien:

Gentlemen—After giving your Pianos a fair trial I am happy to congratulate you upon the achievements you have made. Your instruments possess rare merits, and it gives me much pleasure to recommend them to the public.

Yours truly, Camila Urso.

Extract of Letter from W. H. Aid to Geo. Fonts Tea.

We are delighted with the Piano. The tone is loud, strong and full, yet soft and mellow.

And stooping up the terraced steps below,
Chased laughter-shapen shapes of the golden days.

In matchless beauty, tenderest of green,
The king no regal, in hood purest queen.

One sudden break, half down the lengthening slope,
Revealed a dark rimmed circle, steadfast-blue—
Here one lifted that supplanted glade,
So inside the enchanted solitudes there grew
Touches on above their wickedest outlook,
And steeped the light, the western fog, to gland ships.

Pale blonde, Crimson fringed Heaven-spaces,
Her tinted eyes pass all sky-tints and three,— Ecstatic in adoration of the Graces.

Each individual in pure intense and perfect kind.

Alone and yet alone in her strange,
Her chaste fraction of the sun's ring chain.

Now we know why, about the forest eaves,
Nor I, in grows cold—death cold—and dreary days.

And rustling ankle deep in fall of leaves!
The bleak, desert wood-path haunted in the frost;
Yet, guarded and well, of youthful charm bereft,
The last forsaken gentian still is left.

A week goes by, and o'er the pasture wet,
Scarcely calm beneath a sulph'rous sky,
But half a fair, in autumn's wildest hour,
The distant Eve that caught wholly die.
To me or radiant youth now forth dying,
Yet, to her pallor seems a higher tinge.

Death by her gaze, I deem no fancy wild
Where spirit grace outleaps the reaper's way
For gentle natures last and loveliest child
Takes no revolt, now her harm'ng charms away.
But when cold storms have stripped the flaming snow-
clad hill,
Dearest, fair presence lingers still!

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 27.—The State Board of Health today issued quarantine notices against all boats in the State.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27.—Postmaster General Key has issued instructions to the Postmasters at New York city, Louisville and New Orleans, to refuse hereafter to rent boxes to the said offices to lottery companies or lottery agents.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 27.—The City of Pekin brings the following news:

YOKOHAMA, Oct. 11.—The cholera is rapidly subsiding. Official returns show 108,000 attacked and fifty thousand cases since the outbreak and eighty-five thousand deaths. Its suppression is now attributed to the energetic efforts of the Government and the unprecedented expenditures for sanitary purposes.

BRENTVILLE, Miss., Oct. 29.—The physicians at Concordia pronounce the epidemic stayed.

No new cases reported in five days.

One death reported—Henry Clay, colored, Rev. Dr. Pierce and child not expected to live.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 29.—The third biennial meeting of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States commenced in the Second Presbyterian Church here last night. Delegates were present from all parts of the country. The programme for last evening was an address of welcome by Rev. Mr. Rhodes and responses, also an account of the Conference at Basle, Switzerland, by Rev. T. W. Chambers, of New York. The session will continue to-day and Thursday, and among the speakers will be some of the most noted divines of the country.

CHICAGO, Oct. 30.—The American Missionary Association, now in session here, heard today the report of the Committee on Church Work in the South, showing that the increase since 1864 has been from almost nothing to 4000 members; and this having been accomplished in the face of open opposition, literal apathy and ignorance of the oppressed negro race. The report was of a very cheerful tenor, both as to the past, present and prospective work in the South.

GALVESTON, Oct. 31.—The Board of Health today established all quarantine restrictions hitherto enforced at this port, to take effect November 1st.

FARMINGTON Me., Oct. 31.—Jacob Abbott, the eminent author, died here to-day, aged seventy-six.

GARDEN CITY, L. I., Oct. 31.—Major-Gen. Joseph Hooker died here this afternoon.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 31.—The Committee of Safety adjourned sine die this afternoon. Since organization they have expended $40,000 in maintaining people in camp and providing for the indigent poor of the city.

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—Senator Zachariah Chandler, of Michigan, was found dead in his bed at the Grand Pacific Hotel this morning. He had been speaking in Wisconsin, and last night addressed an immense audience at McCormick Hall, in this city, and spoke with his usual earnestness.

CAIRO, Nov. 2.—A fire at Mound City this afternoon destroyed over one-third of the town. A telegram was received here at 3 P. M., asking for assistance, and in response, three fire engines were promptly dispatched by railroad.

The firemen gained great headway and it was impossible for the fire department to do anything more than prevent its spread. From sixty to eighty houses were burned.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 3.—Ice formed this morning in all the gutters of the city and today is by far the coldest of the season. Fifty-five telegrams have been sent by physicians, advising that all can return with safety. This ends the epidemic of 1879.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—The Journal says: Walter Hastings, recently deceased, has bequeathed the bulk of his fortune, after the death of his wife, to Harvard College. It is estimated to amount to half a million dollars, which is the largest bequest the college has ever received.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Oct. 25.—A dispatch from Simla, via Fort Kohl announces the arrival there of a convoy from Shutargardan. The officer in command states all is there has been rapid sledding, the latter part for several days, and that many of the men, by their own confession, have suffered much from snow blindness. Provisions are plentiful.

HAVANA, Oct. 27.—The Spanish Consul-General at San Domingo reports that the Government of the Republic of Puerto Plata and Monte Cristo, during a period of hostilities on account of the rebellion, has made claims for losses from the United States to thirty thousand pesos. It appears that forty-two consular accounts from these Republics have been sent to Washington for settlement.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—A dispatch from Cetinje to the Daily Standard, says: The population of Crete is quiet, but there is a sullen determination which is hidden from the eyes of British dominators. The Cretans are kept down simply by fear, and would rise if they saw a chance of success.

MADRID, Nov. 1.—Since yesterday the principal railroad lines of Arragon, Catalonia and Navarre have been interrupted by gales and heavy floods in the valley of the Ebro, where the water has risen several metres above the ordinary level and destroyed the line between Saragossa and Casteuda for fifteen miles, floated away houses, mills, bridges and carried away boats to the extent of several hundred tons.

In Upper Aragon and Huesca the River Alcondre overflowed several villages, and the railway embankment at Canfranc was washed away, leaving the line suspended in the air.

LONDON, Nov. 3.—A Cabul dispatch reports that eight lacs of rupees have been unearthed in the city of Candahar. All has been confiscated for the present.

Eleven Egyptian officers have been exiled for participation in the massacre of the British Embassy. Sixty persons are under arrest awaiting trial.

It is expected the Afghan ministry will not be reconstructed for two or three months, and several provinces.

The surrender of the Ameer is still far from certain.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

MOUNT HOPE, ALA., Oct. 11.—I have been sick one week; confined to my room; but am glad now to write and strike out a little. One meeting more and then Conference year ends. Finances are far behind, but most of the stewards are hopeful of yet being able to settle the preacher's claims. Am working for the parsonage and for the paper. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is popular with all who read here. Hope to send a large list of subscribers to you.

T. F. RANDELL.

BUCK SNORT, ALA., Oct. 22.—Three years ago I asked a location of the North Alabama Conference, and settled in Fayette county with the view of working out of debt, and preaching the gospel on the Sabbath. Most of the time, however, I have spent in the itinerant work. This year I have charge of Fayette circuit. The Lord has greatly revived His work, at every appointment, in some degree. Over sixty members have been received into the present Church. One new church has been formed. The crops are generally good, but the rains are hurting the cotton.

B. S. M'DONALD.

JONES' VALLEY CIRCUIT, ALA., Oct. 24.—I have closed a wonderful revival at Taylor's Chapel; thirty conversions and twenty-four accessions. Also a good meeting at Oak Grove, in connection with the District School. Students were converted, backsliders reclaimed, and the church greatly revived. Rev. E. C. Hardy assisted, preaching with great power.

W. C. M'CRAY.

LIMESTONE, ALA., Oct. 25.—We have had this year, on the Lentsville circuit, twenty conversions, forty accessions to the church, and sixteen infants baptized. Finances are much behind. Number of Advocates taken on the increase. Educational interest rather poor. Crops fine. Health good. Plenty of work to do. No time to spare.

B. W. COONS.

MERIDIANVILLE, ALA., Oct. 27.—A very pleasant episode occurred yesterday at Bethlehem, in this charge. At the close of the morning service, the Rev. D. P. Turner, with an appropriate address, and in behalf of the society, presented the pastor with a most elegant family Bible and the first subscription in good letters, which speaks for itself: "Rev. S. M. and L. Bonner, presented by Bethlehem Society, Madison circuit, North Alabama Conference." Have held protracted services at all my appointments, resulting in thirty professions and forty accessions; twenty-two children baptized. We now have a good parsonage, paid for and partly furnished. Much is due to the ladies of this charge for their energy and zeal in the Master's work.

S. M. BONNER, P. C.

MISSISSIPPI.

CLOVER HILL, Miss., Oct. 21.—My fourth quarterly meeting closed yesterday; had a pleasant and, I think, profitable meeting. Some fruit visible after two years' anxious toil. Three persons joined the church, such as we regard valuable additions. I think others will join before the year closes. Finances are yet greatly behind, but we have hope they will be brought up before Conference. We have had a pleasant pastorate among kind people.

H. J. HARRIS.

CANTON, Miss., Oct. 22.—Our charge in Canton, Miss., has been greatly revived. Sixteen accessions and as many conversions have crowned our efforts. Rev. R. F. Mitchell, of the North Mississippi Conference, and Revs. B. C. Langford and W. C. Black, of the Mississippi Conference, did most faithful, acceptable and successful preaching. The church is most wonderfully revived.

H. D. NORSWORTHY, Pastor.

MARION STATION, Miss., Oct. 23.—The Lord most wonderfully blessed us about two weeks ago with a glorious revival of religion. We had twenty accessions to the church and the whole community revived. The good people here repaired the church and cemetery, and the Giver of all good paid us richly by blessing their souls. We report close up to one hundred additions to the church this year.

J. C. BROOKS.

TRENTON CIRCUIT, Miss., Oct. 24.—Since my note of September 21, I have held two protracted meetings which resulted in nine or ten professions, fourteen new members added to the church, some backsliders reclaimed, the church very much built up and spiritually strengthened. Among those who joined were eleven heads of families, prominent persons in communities. Most all I see going into the church bend in prayers. The circuit is in a very good spiritual condition as a whole. Finances are very far behind. Thanks to Bro. McIlhaney for valuable aid at Raleigh.

B. A. SMALLEY.

EDWARDS, Miss., Oct. 21.—Assisted by Bros. Nesworthy, Galloway and Jones, I have held a meeting at each of my churches with good results. Forty-five have been added to the church during the year. No final ingatherings will be reported to the Annual Conference I think. At this place a weekly prayer meeting is held by boys between seven and eighteen years of age. They govern in business like style, having their own by-laws, and keeping a record of their proceedings. We are still making progress in the way of parsonage improvements.

W. C. BLACK.

HENDERSONVILLE, Miss., Oct. 25.—Rev. J. A. Godfrey preached an excellent sermon in Commerce the 5th inst. He visited in Jerry and Perry, at the same time and place Rev. Enoch Lewis, Jr., of Amite county, to Miss Elizabeth J. Lewis, of Pike county, daughter of Rev. H. P. Lewis, of the Mississippi Conference. The wedding party then repaired to the residence of the bride's parents, where a nice dinner awaited them. On Saturday following my last Quarterly Conference came off at Salem. A glee time and interesting Conference. On Monday, the twenty-first, a Sunday-school picnic was held at Wilderness, Amite county, near dinner; good order; a fine address by Bro. Godfrey; excellent singing; weather fine.

H. P. LEWIS.

WESTVILLE, Miss., Oct. 25.—My meeting at Williamsburg has closed with good results. Eleven were added to the church. The older members were strengthened in the faith. Protracted meetings all held. Sixty-five persons have been received into the church this year. Conference money in hand. Missionary collections well nigh up. Preacher in charge and presiding elder's salary over half paid. Crops good. Health good.

M. C. CALLAWAY, P. C.

CANTON, Miss., Oct. 29.—Both corn and cotton are short in this section. We have had a camp-

"CRUCIFIED WITH CHRIST."

BY MANNIE KINSELLA.

"Deny thyself, take up thy cross,"
And bear it meekly, day by day.
Count every earthly gain but loss,
And walk the straight and narrow way.

In patience persevere. No grief,
Short struggle ends the contest here.
But days of pain and nights of grief,
Through weary week and month and year.

"Unto the end." How hard it dies!
This strong old life of self and sin!
In battle-hall, with watchful eyes,
It seeks unguarded points to win.

Yet, still, it must be crucified.
They who the cross in weakness bear
Shall, on the cross, to Jesus' side
Be raised, ere yet the crown they wear.

More sharp than thorn, or spike or spear,
Temptation's darts. Friends tempt with smiles,
Foes tempt with scorn, or flattery dear,
And Satan with ten thousand wiles.

And selfish plans, and hopes and fears,—
The pettiest the strongest, too—
Still crowd our weeks and months and years;
The Spirit's victories seem few.

Ah, Lord, our faith is weak, indeed.
We weary grow, and faint and fail;
Yet for Thy promised help we plead,
And Thou dost hear us when we call.

Help us to walk by Thy dear side;
Our hourly follies still forgive;
Oh, let the flesh be crucified,
And let Thy Spirit thus us live.

Tendencies of Modern Sensational Literature Its Evils and Its Remedies.

BY REV. E. P. BIRCH, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR EDITOR: There are two facts which enter largely into the civilization of every age, and the elevation of every community and nation. The first is: The development of the Intellect, and of the intellectual resources of its people. The second is: The proper cultivation and direction of the popular tastes into legitimate and conservative channels, and into that high mental refinement which gives to thought its most beautiful and elegant forms of expression.

These facts admitted, two others will follow as necessary results, or at least as inferential conclusions:

1. That all intellectual culture and development must be the outgrowth of the highest mental effort—that is, that the loftiest powers of mind, and the highest productions of thought, both as to individuals and communities, can only be called forth under the stimulus and pressure of the most intense exertion, and by the utmost taxation of our intellectual resources. In mind as well as matter the rank indigeneous productions of the soil are, for the most part, but a harvest of worthless weeds, or of dwarfed and insipid fruits. That state of society which contents itself with the poorest, stalest and most commonplace ideas, will always be productive of superficial minds and shallow intellects. It is only under the pressure of high aim, and of large achievement, that mind reaches its greatest excellence. Out of struggle and the antagonism of adverse conditions come the brightest revelations of thought, just as from the evolution and conflict of darkest storm clouds flashes the most livid lightning. It is through the resistance of warring winds that the proud eagle lifts himself highest in his sunward flight.

2. That as the growth and culture of mind and taste are apt to seek some adequate medium of expression, that medium is usually found in the literature and literary productions of all people and nations. The refinement and purity of a nation's literature will become the test and exponent of its advancing civilization and growing intelligence. But in the attainment of this high excellence it need scarcely be said there must be a conservative limitation upon the spontaneous outgrowth of uncultured intellect, and of its redundant productions. The rank and rude growth and products of undisciplined minds, the crude, uncultivated out-givings of superficial thought, the puerile plagiarisms, the bungling absurdities, or the vile and hurtful impurities of the promiscuous literature of modern times, these are not the elements out of which the mental wealth, the high intelligence, or the moral grandeur of a nation or community, are to be evolved. But it must be conceded, on the other hand, that there are but few things that contribute more to the elevation and advancement of communities and people, in all the higher forms of civilization and intelligence, than a pure, sound and wholesome literature. Minds and mental forces are influenced and developed by the contact and impress of other minds. Thought quickens thought, intellect quickens intellect, knowledge stimulates knowledge, and so the process goes on, ad infinitum. It is her great and gifted writers, more than anything else, that make the imperishable greatness of a nation, insomuch that one great author, one great book, often becomes the guerdon of her future generations, the benison of a national immortality,

"Whose voice sounds like a prophet's word,
In whose hollow tones are heard
The thanks of millions yet to be."

Thus it is that in the literatue and literary productions and culture of every country are enshrined the fairest ornaments that emblazon her history, the brightest gems that bedeck her coronet of royalty. The march of improvement, the progress of mechanical arts, the extension of commerce, the rush of enterprise, the mighty accumulations of wealth, the triumph of political factions, the pomp and blazonry of social grandeur, all perish with the age that gave them being. The noble deeds of immortal patriots, and the achievements of invincible heroes, live only in the transient records of history. The wisdom of philosophers and statesmen slumbers in the mournful silence of buried centuries, and the thunder tones of the orator's eloquence lingers only in the voiceless echoes of the sepulchered past. The noblest works of art grow dim and perish, and the loftiest monuments of architectural grandeur crumble to dust, but the literature of a nation never dies.

But waiving for the present this general survey of the subject, we come to the inquiry: What are the grounds and conditions of a pure, substantial and wholesome literature? and what are the elements of its influence and power upon the popular mind?

1. It must be the outgrowth and expression of prevailing intelligence among the people. It is born of high national culture, and finds its home amid the congenial elements of appreciative minds and gifted intellects. Great thoughts and great works are but the response of genius to the demands of popular taste. There must be motive, incentive, recognition, and due appreciation to call into existence the highest literary excellence. It is the time-worn question of supply and demand. Great intellects, and their literary productions, are but the expression of what is latent in the hearts and minds of the people—the utterance of what they meant, of what they, themselves, would have thought and spoken if they could, the manifested reflexion of the moral and mental atmosphere around them. These are as the electric spark, or the lightning flash that leaps from the silent heavens to meet the attracting clouds, or as the unfolding flower that waits to catch the glowing sunbeam, and reflect its gorgeous hues back into the surrounding fields of light. The conditions of manifestation must lie in the popular taste and appreciation; the man and the work will surely spring forth to meet the call and the occasion. If the people are satisfied with husks, and chaff, and dross, these will be abundantly forthcoming on demand. If they ask for "a stone," instead of bread, they will get the stone; if they ask for "a scorpion," instead of a fish, they will get the scorpion, and will feel its sting to their hearts' content. If the church of God itself, and her thousands of intelligent readers, is content with a poor, tame, meager and fruitless literature, she will never have anything else. But if her people rise to the high demands of our advancing intelligence, and send forth to her gifted men and cultured minds the "Macedonian cry" of old, there are many "burning and shining lights" who are ready to respond to the call. It is, as the mighty mandate of the human, echoing amid the unborn elements of mind and thought: "Let there be light, and there was light."

2. To secure a sound and wholesome literature there ought to exist a higher standard of literary merit and value in all the productions of press and pen. Such a literature must embody the crystallized results of the most profound thought, the most elevated conceptions of truth, and the most conservative and rational views of the great problems of life. The popular mind is either elevated and ennobled, or depressed and degraded, by what it reads.

To control the opinions, and to mold the judgments, the hearts, the characters of men, we must give them something to read which is both pleasing, attractive and malleable—something that will charm the imagination, elevate their feelings and sentiments, instruct their minds, convince their reason, and win them to the knowledge and love of truth. There are days in which everybody, from the romping school girl to the staid citizen in the marts of business, will read something, from the dime novel to the weekly newspaper and the penny magazine. If we would direct and sway the popular mind we must do so through the medium of an effective and attractive literature. Our Advocates (Heaven bless them all!) though doing a noble work, have not, as yet, we humbly and modestly fear, met in full the popular demand. The children of the church are seeking other and more hurtful literature, and feeling the impress of its pernicious influence. Thousands of Christian homes are filled with an overflow of vile and cheap literary trash, pamphlet novels, and illustrated papers and magazines too worthless and contemptible to name, where the Christian Advocates are rarely taken. Strange we build colleges and institutions of learning for the purpose of directing and controlling the minds and hearts of the young under conservative, educational influence and Christian guardianship, and yet leave them to the tender mercies of a false and enervating literature as poisonous and unwholesome as the exhalations of the pit.

TO BE CONCLUDED.

Reform in the Ministry.

MR. EDITOR: The cry of reform is heard ringing from every quarter, and all with as much fervor and solicitude as if we had gone far wide of the truth, or had fallen into the gross abuses characterizing the clergy before the first Reformation. Theories unsanctioned, so far as any beside themselves can see, by Scripture, and without support in the records of Christianity, are incubated and brought forth by otherwise inactive brains, and their acceptance urged with as much confidence as though they were gospel truth. When the editor of some review or literary journal has exhausted his catalogue of subjects, and finds nothing in the whole realm of science and literature with which to inflate his genius, he forthwith indites an article upon some imaginary defect or abuse of the clergy, and clamors for reform.

Almost invariably, too, this is done without pointing out those defects and abuses in which reform is so much desired. But we gather from the enunciations of both extremes that it is a desire, on the one hand, to maintain in the clergy conventionalnodes and pietistic ideas, which will always confine church profession to the chains of bigotry and ecclesiastical exclusiveness. On the other hand, it is an effort to obliterate all lines of distinction between the sacred functions of the gospel ministry and those of secular professions, thus annulling its spiritual claims, and destroying its right to the higher confidence of man.

It has been said that "men will be no better than the books they read." It is certain they will never be better than those to whom they look for guidance. The masses aspire to nothing higher than the characters of their champions. This is borne out by the ecclesiastical and political history of every age. Corrupt party leaders have vitiated their principles, and thus had a corresponding effect upon the morals of their constituency. "Like prophet, like people," would furnish an answer to the important problem of the moral darkness which has so often fallen upon the world.

There is a point at which truth and error meet—in some degree vaguely defined. This is the line separating the church and the world. The church was instituted as a means for the world's salvation. It must be aggressive, taking the initiative steps looking toward the final consummation of this salvation. How far the church, through its ministry, may move toward the world for its salvation, might form an answer to all these claims for reform, and taunts that there is the want of an over display of policy in preaching the gospel.

It will not do, however, to leave the answer of this question to human authority. Human wisdom and infallibility was the canker-worm which ate away the spiritual vitality of the Romish clergy. Rising, then, from this to a higher dictum, we have: "Please for good to edification." And again: "Be not conformed to this world." And in a direct command to the ministry: "Shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

What the church wants, then, is a ministry that is not hedged on the one side by dogmatical restraint, nor on the other divested of its spirituality and zeal by the innovations of philosophy and conformity to the world. Such a ministry, in the main, we believe we have in the Methodist preachers of to-day. We have not, it is true, the exclusiveness in minor matters, and the rigid conformity to fixed customs which distinguished our fathers, but we have the religion of the Master, and that is the watchword of every age. The means will adjust themselves to the necessities of the case, and He who sent forth His early disciples with the promise, "Lo, I am with you!" we believe will keep alive the spirituality and zeal of His ministry.

Duties of the Christian Citizen.

MR EDITOR: Your editorial in your issue of September 25, entitled, "Our Political Needs," is exceedingly timely, and should receive the careful consideration of every voter in the land. Partisanism is becoming the bane of our Southern civilization.

Let a man be nominated by a convention, and public sentiment demands that he shall receive the suffrages of all; and the man who has the courage to obey the behests of his conscience, and cast his vote for an independent, or a nominee of some other party, is stigmatized as a bolter, and incurs an amount of odium and ridicule which few are willing to endure.

But is not this all wrong? As you state in your editorial, very bad men often manage, by means of the vilest kind of trickery, to get nominations, and then because they are the nominees they must be supported by everybody.

A candidate may be a notorious gambler, or the greatest drunkard in the community, or living in open adultery. And yet men who call themselves Christians, men who are officers in the various churches, men who preach the gospel of Christ, not only support such candidates with their votes, but with all the influence they possess.

But it may be said that this is the less of two evils. Let us see. In some instances within the circle of my observation the opposing candidate is known to be a man of tried integrity and sterling worth—a Christian gentleman, possessing every qualification requisite for the office he seeks. But he is a Greenbacker or an Independent. Which is the less evil to have, a sheriff, or clerk, or legislator, who is known to be a man of pure morals, albeit, he is a Greenbacker or an Independent, or to have a Democrat whose private life is a stench in the nostrils of all pure men? Suppose we continue this course. Do we not thereby say to our sons and our daughters that integrity and morality are things of little worth? Do we not put a premium upon vice? Christians of all denominations, you are responsible to Almighty God for your votes. You cannot conscientiously cast your vote for a man of vicious life. You can not ask God's blessings on you in so doing. You cannot do this "to the glory of God." Moreover, you have this matter in your own hands, you hold the balance of power, you are in the majority in most counties in this section of country, and if you will only unite you can drive all the bad men from power, and secure rulers who "fear God and work righteousness." It is a sad reflection that the bad men who are in power all over the land are put in power by the votes of Christian men. I hope, dear doctor, you will write again on this subject. We need precept upon precept in this matter.

RAMBLER.

Tears.

Patter, patter, sounds the rain on the roof, while Infinity, Earth drinks in the drops ere we have seen them glisten a moment on her bosom. But, ere long the effects of these drops, poured from an unerring hand, will be noticed, for mother Earth is inparding them for the beautification of the vegetable world. Autumn will yield more abundant harvest. Spring shall feel its fertilizing worth, and rejoice in a new life of beauty, when these clouds shall have been forgotten—these refreshing drops, numbered with the things which were—or entirely erased from Memory's tablet. So our tears, which the clouds of sin, repentance or adversity wring from our aching hearts, disappear in the sands of Time, human eye scarcely noticing, human sympathy soon forgetting to count their but little. Yet there is One—our King—who does treasure them as pearls scattered at His feet by unworthy children—unworthy though we be whom He loves, and for whom His Son, our elder Brother, died.

"Did Christ o'er sinners weep,
And shall our cheeks be dry?
Let floods of penitential grief
Burst forth from every eye."

Yes, Christians, let your tears fall, for Christ has wept. Weep, penitent, for a Redeemer is now pleading at the mercy-seat of God for thee. Faint not, for soon thy tears of sorrow will be changed to tears of rejoicing. And oh, sinner! thou for whom a Saviour was offered on the cross of Calvary, deem it not a weakness, but seek that thy heart may be melted into tears—tears for past offences, tears which the crimson tide, flowing from His dear hands and feet and side, can forever wipe from thine eyes. And know that those tears will be among the gems that shall sparkle on thy brow, when thou shalt have gained a home in the mansions of the bright forevermore.

SNOWFLAKE.

Obituaries.

JOHN MILTON PICKENS was born in Clarke county, Ala., May 9, 1832, and died at his residence, of apoplexy, October 13, 1879, in his forty-seventh year. He left no dying testimony, as he was unconscious after his attack, but from his purity of character and blameless life we believe he now rests beneath the tree of life, "on the other side of the river." He was twice married, first to Miss Rachael Jane Smith. By this union they had three children, all of whom preceded him to that heavenly land. He was married the second time to Mrs. Mary E. Davidson, whose maiden name was Allen, and by this last union they had two children, one dying in infancy. Bro. Pickens was one of our best citizens. He was honest and upright in all his dealings toward his fellow-man. He served in the Confederate army during the revolution between the States, was captured at Missionary Ridge, and remained a prisoner until the "Lost Cause went down." After the war he returned home, and began again to farm, and two or three years later he entered into the mercantile business. He was a good farmer and a successful merchant. He will be greatly missed, for he was ever ready to help the poor or any in distress. Many of them visited him in his last sickness, and, while bathed in tears, said they had lost their best friend on earth. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Sinithland a good member of the Masonic fraternity at Hoboken Lodge. He connected himself with the church in 1867, under the ministry of the Rev. R. M. Powers, now of the Texas Conference. Bro. Pickens filled the office of steward and trustee for many years. He was liberal with his means toward the support of the gospel. After he had paid the amount assessed him by the stewards I have known him to pay the remainder of the amount assessed the preacher in charge at his church. He was one of the principal ones to build log Ouk Chapel. He gave, literally toward its erection, and then took the contract, and the amount not realized by subscription he paid himself. Bro. Pickens may not have lived for several years after his connection with the church as he should, but for the last two years he has been a zealous Christian. During the meeting at Oak Chapel, last August, he was greatly blessed at the grove. He had a fortaste of that joy that awaits the faithful. He was a true, Wesleyan Methodist. He loved the old landmarks, polity and usages, and believed its mission was the great means of spreading Scriptural holiness over our lands, and winning the world to Christ. He was a good husband and intelligent friend and neighbor. Many will miss him as a friend that he is gone. He will be missed by the weary traveler preacher who rested beneath his hospitable roof. But by all these him most who stepped to his cooling fountain among the green sod and heard that dear familiar voice that is now hushed forever.

J. M. ALLEN.

MRS SARAH VASHTI LACKEY, daughter of William S. and Mary Ann Glover, was born in Talbot county, Ala., July 7, 1851, in the very house in which she will be buried. During a protracted meeting held at Mount Zion church in August, 1870, Rev. R. A. Williams, now of the North Alabama Conference, she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the sixteenth year of her pilgrimage, in the more than two years afterward she was married to L. M. Lackey, of the above county, December 2, 1873. After nearly two years of happy married life she died, in Talbassee, Fluvanna county, Ala., July 19, the malarial fever, October 31, 1879, aged twenty-eight years, three months and seven days. She was preceded to the better world by two of her children. The first that died was little Sherwood McDonald. He was born December 16, 1875, and died October 28, 1877. The next was Mary Emily, who was born March 21, 1874, and, after an illness of twenty-four days, died of typhoid fever, September 29, 1879. Just three days after the death of little Emmie Sherwood Lackey has, of after only a few days' sickness, departed this life for the triumphs of faith. She leaves a husband and a little babe behind. The last hour of her life was one, indeed, of triumph. About an hour before she died she said, "Mother, I feel that I am going to get well." And then, after lying quiet about two minutes, she turned and, looking me full in the face, said, "Mother, I am almost home; only rising hills between heaven and me." Then I told her she must be prepared to meet Jesus, when she replied, "I am ready, dear husband, to meet you all in heaven." Then, turning to her husband, who was sobbing and weeping over her, she said: "Don't cry, my dear husband, for my dear husband, I am going to my sweet little babe. My work is clear; there is nothing in the way." Her husband then asked her if she could see little Sherwood. She replied that she did not see him, but that she could hear a voice, more than a year old, was then sitting in her lap, and put her in her arms and kissed her, and said: "O God, bless and take care of my sweet little babe." Then, turning to Lelia, her aged grandfather, Bro. Glover, who was standing at the bedside of his dying daughter, she told him to take her away. She then gave her hand to Miss Sarah Lackey, her sister-in-law, and said, to her: "Good-bye, Sarah, I shall be most gone. Take care of my little babe." After speaking other in the room farewell she again pushed her arms around her husband's neck, and told him not to grieve too much for her. Once again, in bringing little Lelia right, and up before her, she said: "I want to kiss my sweet, sweet baby." Then, after lying quiet a minute or two, she raised her hands and eyes toward heaven, and, clasping her hands together, said: "O sweet Life Eternal!" Then, again audibly, "Glory to God!" These were her last words. In a few minutes her spirit took its flight to the better world. She was an affectionate wife, a devoted wife, an earnest Christian woman of deep, steady piety of unusual sweetness of disposition, of a kindly, loving heart. Her devotion to her church was strong to the death. On Sunday, only two days before her death, when we heard her church bell ringing, she said that she wished so much she could go to church and that she might be able to attend service that day. In two days her spirit was in the church above. May the sorely afflicted husband be comforted in the hope of a glorious reunion, up little Lelia right, and meet her in heaven.

MRS MARY HELENE NEELY was born in Monroe county, Ala., February 23, 1849, and died in Pleasant Hill, Ala., August 19, 1879, in her thirtieth year. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the spring of 1875, under the pastorate of the Rev. J. Graves. From that time to her death she was a devoted member of her Master. In the month of March, 1878, she left her friends and relatives, with whom she had so long associated, and removed with the writer to the Robinson Springs circuit, a work assigned him by the Alabama Conference. She was never ready to aid her husband in preaching the gospel of Christ, and, when the time came for him to leave her and three little boys, to go to his appointments, she was always ready to bid him good-by with as much cheer, and when he returned home she always met him with a hearty welcome. She was everything that gives promise of being a beautiful itinerant's wife. She leaves a lonely husband, three little boys, an aged mother and three sisters to mourn her departure. About two hours before she died she looked the writer in the face and said: "What are you crying for?" My reply was that I did not know what to do. Then she said to me: "You must try to stop crying more; you have done all that you could. Will soon be at home." The intimations of death had come for her, and she was ready to obey it. She died in love with all that name, and beheld angels hovering around her bed to waft her spirit home. Yes, she met death with smiles playing over her countenance, and with a smile at the thought of being made the "harbor of rest for the peaceful shore of eternity." The life she lived and the death she died encourages us to believe that she is in the eternal gain.

May the all-wise Ruler of the universe, who doeth all things well, move away those dark clouds that rise up before me. May He make it a blessing to me; and may these little boys that she left behind one day prove an honor to her name, and ornaments to her church.

HUSBAND.

REV. FAIRFAX FINCH was born and raised in the State of Alabama, and died at his home in Montgomery county, Miss., August 18, 1879, aged seventy years.

Bro. Finch embraced religion in early life, and united with the Methodist Church, in which he was eminently useful. About twenty-five years ago he was licensed to preach; from then, until the Master called him from labor to rest, he came as near doing the work, both as a layman and a preacher, as any man with whom we have ever been acquainted. He was certainly a pure man; for none exerted a greater influence for good than he. Everywhere he went the people took knowledge of him that he had been with Jesus, said one, who assisted in the funeral services. I have been intimately associated with Bro. Finch more than thirty years, and have never been in the company any length of time, but that on parting from him I have resolved to be a better man." Bro. Finch carried his religion with him in every relation of life. He was, much of his long life, engaged in teaching. And in the school-room, with a pious example and words of wisdom, he made religious impressions which are now manifest in the Christian walk of those who were once his pupils, but are now themselves far advanced in life. Religion chastened his conversation, regulated his business and inspired his devotions.

How we miss him at Friendship Church, where he so long worshiped, where so many have seriously listened to his earnest exhortations, and where we have so often felt, while they were being offered, that those sublime prayers were answered.

The Whitton circuit has lost much in the death of Bro. Finch. The writer will never forget when he came a stranger to take charge of this work how much he was encouraged when he made the acquaintance of this good man. We could do no more than we then believed he was—a faithful Christian, a safe counselor. His illness was long, but suffered into sorely, but never murmured. We always found him cheerful, and anxious to talk on the subject of religion, expressing a desire to be able to attend church and enjoy the revivals of religion with whom the country was then favored. One Sunday, told one of us that many of the brethren who visited him, during his illness, spent the time in conversation about the reported speeches to be held at the different churches around him, but he could not do it one day in twenty. He said he loved right, and living right enabled him to say he lived right, and living right enabled her to die right.

Let us gather around the throne to take a last and farewell look at her cold and lifeless body before it was committed to the dark chambers of the tomb, and it was with thankful hearts to find they knew she had flown.

"Fearless through death's foam gate,
Nor felt the terrors as she passed."

DIED, near Scooba, Miss., Sept. October 29, 1879, GEORGE E., son of Dr. and M. M. Clements. He was born January 4, 1861, and died in his nineteenth year. Indeed, a golden link in the chain of a good, noble family has fallen out, for George was a grand boy, beautiful and extraordinary in every virtue that makes up the best and purest elements of young manhood. I knew him well, and a nobler and better young man I never knew.

Everybody that knew young George only loved to praise him. Now he is dead. John his parents, brothers and sisters in mourning that he is gone. Well may the old and the young sorrow at his death, for he was certainly a pattern to the young people; yet we have much in which to rejoice. He loved the church and the preacher as devotedly

JOSEPH WILLIAMS was born in Lowndes county, Ala., February 28, 1818, and died in Edgecombe county, Miss., August 19, 1879, in the sixty-first year of his age. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the seventeenth year of his age, and was converted in the twenty-fourth year of his age, from which time he was regenerated and devoted to God until a few days before his death. He was a useful member, but "blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

JOHN T. WILLIAMS, P. C.

JAMES CLAYTON WARD was born October 6, 1850, in the State of Georgia, and died October 1, 1879, in Red River parish, La.

Bro. Ward had lived in Union county, Ark., for some years, to the parish of Concordia, Lake's Creek, Red River. He had been an exemplary member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for many years. He moved to Red River parish about two years ago. The writer preached his funeral sermon on the Sparta circuit, to which he belonged. He served this church as steward and class-leader to the latest office he held until death. He married Miss Callie Clayton, who survives him. He was a devoted Christian man. His conversation was about heaven, he was a great friend of the church and his pastor. He had been greatly afflicted for several months, from which he suffered very much, and he endured all with Christian fortitude. In conversation and the application of a week of prayer at his church he often proved a great blessing to it. He was filled with the Holy Spirit during the service. He had always had a fear of death, but when it came he was quite reconciled to the will of God. He died July. A good man has gone to his reward. May God bless this sorrowing wife and children, and sustain them with divine grace.

W. P. HARRISON.

MISS LOUISA A. CURTIS was born January 9, 1857, and professed religion in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Jeffersonville, Ind., and died at her brother's residence, in East Feliciana, La., September 11, 1879, aged twenty-two years seven months and six days.

She had been for several years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, but moved to the cleaning process at Jesus' blood in her heart a few days before her death she was happily converted to God, during a protracted meeting held at Salem Church, by Rev. J. B. Wall, her pastor. Though she did not live long after she was converted, to show in the world by her daily walk that she was a child of God, yet in her last hours she bore her affection with Christian patience, showing that all the wanderings and fondness of her heart were given to Him who gave His life for her. And through the merits of the blood of Jesus she was enabled to say she feared not to die. This dying act enables us to say she lived right, and living right enabled her to die right.

Let us gather around the throne to take a last and farewell look at her cold and lifeless body before it was committed to the dark chambers of the tomb, and it was with thankful hearts to find they knew she had flown.

NOT FAR.

Not far, not far from the kingdom,
Yet to the shadow of sin,
How many are coming and going,
How few are entering in!

Not far from the golden gateway,
Where voices whisper and wait;
Fearing to enter in boldly,
Shrinking still at the gate!

Catching the strains of the music
Floating so sweetly along,
Knowing the song they are singing,
Yet failing not in the song.

Seeing the warmth and the beauty,
The infinite love and the light;
Yet weary and lonely and waiting,
Out in the desolate night!

Out in the dark and the danger,
Out in the night and the cold;
Though He is longing to lend them
Tenderly into the fold.

Not far, not far from the kingdom,
'Tis only a little space;
But it may be at last and forever,
Out of the resting-place.

Sunday Laws.

The following is from an excellent editorial in the Southern Churchman:

There remains, therefore, only one reason why the States have passed Sunday laws—viz: from prudential considerations; because, on the whole, it is better for the people they should have one day in the week that they should neither be forced nor permitted to buy or sell or labor.

It requires no genius nor learning to find out whether laws of this kind be for the good of the Commonwealth. We are not inquiring whether they be for the religious good. This, by the constitution of the States, is thrown out of the inquiry. The only question is whether it be for the physical good and happiness of the people. We do not see that any one doubts this. One day of rest in every week has been demonstrated beyond all cavil as indispensably necessary for the health and well being of men; and this fact is not doubted.

But it is said by those who wish these Sunday laws either abrogated or tightened up: "It may be true that it is for the physical good of the community to have one day of rest in seven, but as this is a matter of conscience for each man, let him decide how to keep Sunday." But it is not as a religious duty, or as a matter of conscience, that these laws have been enacted by the States, and therefore we have no right to put their enactment upon right or wrong ground toward God. Not for such reasons as we have shown did the States pass these laws. They, as States, have nothing to do with conscience, save only that every citizen should conscientiously obey the laws of the State.

But it is said by others: "Everybody wants a quiet Sunday as a day of rest; therefore let every person decide for himself how to keep it as such, so he does not interfere with the rights of his neighbor." So everybody in New York wants to prevent the city from being burned up, and as all are so deeply interested in it why enact laws which forbid the erection of wooden houses? But it is a well known law of human nature that its selfishness is so great that it overrides consideration for the good of all; and hence, without laws, frame buildings would be built, to the danger of the whole city. States, therefore, are forced to pass laws to prevent selfishness or self-interest from interfering with the general good. They have large parks in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, and a small one in Richmond. People approve of these parks, want these parks, and yet laws have to be enacted preventing any encroachment upon them by the public. And for the reason that, although the people generally want them, one citizen would prefer a building lot in the park rather than have no lot on which to build. His self-interest overcomes his interest in the public good; he takes a lot; and another, not knowing how much he will take, steps in for his share; and another and another, until no park whatever is left for the public good. Just so with Sunday laws. They are for the public good, but if abrogated, one man thinking far more of his own interest than that of the public, will open his shop on Sunday. "Why," he says, "cannot a little child be permitted to buy a cent's worth of candy on this day?" Miserable barbarians; scythians, hypocrites that ye are, will ye pass laws against the innocent little children?" But some one, with the least of common sense, will take the liberty of inquiring whether this shop-keeper loves the little children more than his neighbor, or whether he loves their pennies more? Another shop-keeper, thinking more of his own interest than that of the public, opens his shop on Sundays, and says: "Cannot the poor workingman be permitted to enjoy himself a little on this only day of rest he has, and have his little glass of lager?" Miserable barbarians, Puritans, hypocrites that ye are, will ye pass laws against the hard-worked laboring man?" Now, it does not require any genius to find out whether this man loves the workingman more than others, or whether what he is after is not that workingman's nickels. But the thing goes on. This little shop is opened and that. After awhile the larger shops are opened, until only one here and there is shut. If clerks are made to work on Sundays, why not others in other shops? Why not, indeed? The man who can make money on Sunday by selling cigars and liquors can make money by keeping open his carpenter's shop, his forge, his mill, his factory, and there will be no day of rest for the poor workingman. He will find out, after having been hoodwinked by bar-tenders and lager beer gardeners, that he has been cheated out of his day of rest. Dr. Bacon, in his late speech before the people of Norwich, told them: "I could wish you might stand with me an hour on Sunday morning in the 'labor market' at Geneva, and see the troops of dull, tired, sodden-looking laborers, in their ragged blouses, unwashed from the grime and sweat of one week's work, trudging off sluggishly and wearily like dumb, driven cattle to the work of the next week. Are these slaves? you ask. Bless you, no, my dear man! These are freemen. These are voters and citizens in a land of universal suffrage (Switzerland,) under the freest government on earth. * * * This which you see is liberty—complete, untrammeled liberty. Every one of these free citizens has a right—a proud, inviolable right—to work on Sunday if he chooses." And this is what it ends in for him. * * * The workingman who may work on Sunday when work is wanted has got to work on Sunday. For the liberty of rest for each one depends on a law of rest for all."

Let no citizen be deceived. Those who want these laws abolished are not the people who care for their fellow-men, but prime who want to make money out of their fellow men. Here, and here only, is the meaning of this cry for abolishing the Sunday laws." And, with them abolished, soon the poor man will have no Sunday for rest and recreation. Let every poor man, as he values his own health and the happiness of himself and family, protest with all his might against abolishing the Sunday laws, in order that bar tenders and lager beer sellers and whisky sellers can make money!

A Christian Colony in South Africa.

About six miles from Middelburg, in the Transvaal, is a large colony of Christian Kaffirs, whose establishment is known as Mr. Marensky's town. The following brief account of the origin of the colony, from the Times correspondent at Leydenberg, will be welcome to those who take an interest in the progress and welfare of Christian missions in the Kaffir of South Africa:

Mr. Marensky, some twenty years ago, came out under the orders of the Berlin Lutheran Mission. After many years of study he found himself established close by the kraal of a chief of Secocoeni's, near the hill of Mamefuke. Here for five years he persevered by labors, with varied success, amidst a sickly, ungovernable and occasionally hostile tribe in good work by Secocoeni and his followers. Then, when the white men came, and there was war with the highland chief, he got the order to go, receiving but twenty four hours' notice to quit, and, deserted by all but his faithful wife, he mounted his horse and rode away, while the flames were flickering round his new Kaffir home. Thence he rode to Middelburg, and for the small sum of £73 bought his present farm of 6,000 acres. At a spot where the river sweeps gracefully round some rocky hills he pitched his camp and commenced to build again. Some of his pupils and converts followed in his wake, and now, after fifteen years, he has established a little kingdom of his own. Three tribes from the Lydenburg district are here located, each in separate kraals; while a handsome church, built by Kaffir hands, of neat red brick, shelters and affords ample room for 1,500 Christian worshipers, who are now the followers of Mr. Marensky. Not only has this worthy missionary taught his disciples the truths in the Bible, rows of brick built work-shops resound the whole day with the noise of hammer, chisel, saw and plane, under European supervision these worthy Christians turn out wagons, furniture, and all kinds of wood and iron work, while neat gardens surround these brick houses, which they build with their own hands in substitute for the wood and mud huts of their ancestors. There are also three schools for the education of the little ones. In the first, or very young class, the half frightened or semi savage element seemed naturally prominent, as accompanied by some fifteen, we entered a room. Shrieks met our entrance, and, like timid lambs, the urchins crowded into the far corner, packed like sardines. The next class were being taught letters, and were decidedly tamer; but the height of pleasure which our visit afforded us was reached when we entered the last class-room. Seated at desks, the boys separated from the girls, were a clean, neatly-dressed collection of the more advanced pupils reading and writing, some English, others Kaffir, and, to our great surprise, at a word from Mr. Marensky, the whole class rose, and in beautiful time and tune, distinctly sang in English our own well-known National Anthem. Although everything around this mission station seemed to abound in peace and plenty, its careful master, profiting by former experience, is not unmindful of the safety of his tribe, and he has erected a strong fort on an eminence commanding his station to protect his flock and property from any onslaught made by Boers or Kaffirs. Mr. Marensky's knowledge of Secocoeni's country, and, indeed, of all this region of the Transvaal, is, perhaps, unequalled. Of the success of his labors it would be needless for me to speak, as at present over 30,000 acres of good land are possessed by the mission, which has been acquired at the small cost of £600. This property has been divided into smaller farms, placed under the supervision of other missionaries, and enclosed fields, orchards and mills now exist on the site of a once prairie wilderness.

"My burden is light," said the blessed Redeemer. A light burden, indeed, which carries him that bears it. I have looked through all nature for a resemblance of this, and seem to find a shadow of it in the wings of a bird, which are indeed borne by the creature, and yet support her flight toward heaven.—St. Bernard.

Religious Intelligence.

—Notwithstanding all that is said concerning the energy of the Roman Catholic Church in advancing her faith, she falls far behind the Protestant Churches in contributions for missions. The annual report of "The Association for the Propagation of the Faith" for 1878 is just at hand, from which it appears that the sum total of gifts for that year, from all countries, for the support of Roman Catholic Missions, is $1,318,318. And yet this is an increase over the preceding year of nearly $100,000. Of the $1,318,318 almost exactly two-thirds, or $876,778, were contributed in France, $126,291 in Germany, $58,227 in Great Britain and Ireland, while the United States and Canada furnished only $14,801. Two out of the many British Societies, the London and Church Missionary, gathered last year an income for foreign missionaries larger by $100,000 than that the Romanists gathered from the whole world.—American Missionary Herald.

—The Presbytery of Edinburgh (Church of Scotland) has received a complaint from four hundred and seventy-nine members and adherents of the North Leith Parish Church against certain steps alleged to have been taken to introduce an organ in the public worship of that church. The complaint says that the petitioners "strongly object to the use of such an instrument in public worship, as being at variance with the practice and traditions of the Church of Scotland, as offensive to the tastes and feelings of many Scotch Presbyterians, and as not conducive to the service of praise being taken part in by the whole congregation." The minister and session of the church have been cited to appear before the Presbytery and defend their interests.

—A struggle recently took place in Rome over a dying Protestant convert between Dr. Ruetti, a Waldensian pastor, and a Catholic priest. Francesci, the sick man, requested the ministrations of Dr. Ruetti, while his wife wanted him to have the priest. She drove Dr. Ruetti off, and the priest took his place. Ruetti secured in writing the declaration of Francesci that he was a Protestant, and called on the city authorities for protection. The priest installed himself, by the sick man's bedside, and, invoking the police, had Ruetti put out of the house. Now Ruetti's journals express great indignation at this violation of the liberty of conscience.

—D. Somerville, the Scottish evangelist, is meeting with wonderful success in Brittany. He appointed three meetings for Rennes, the capital of the department, engaging a hall for them. Here we were taken to avoid good singing as in St. Servan. The first night there were 250 people present; the second, 500; the third, over 1,000; the fourth, 1,500 or more, filling the whole building. At all the meetings most respectful attention was given and the original plan of only three meetings was of necessity given up. Bibles and tracts were in great demand, and a morning Bible reading was attended by eighty persons.

—Cardinal Deschamps, Archbishop of Malines, Belgium, has issued a circular of instructions in regard to Catholic schools. "Every parish," he says, must have its Catholic school by the month of October. The parochial committee must see that all the children are registered. All poor children will be admitted free of charge. Normal schools are more costly and Christian than the primary schools and must be shunned. All pastors will receive invitations to inspect the children in the primary schools."

—It is announced that the Catholic Church in Mexico has recently given their sanction to the printing and circulation of a Spanish translation of the New Testament in that country. It is regarded as one of the most remarkable and hopeful things that has occurred in Mexico for many years. There is said to be no especial difference between this translation and the one in ordinary use among the Protestants. There are entire chapters without comments attached to them; and on many of the passages especially relied upon by Rome to uphold her teachings, there are only a few brief words.

—Rev. S. Green, the Episcopal incumbent at Port Adelaide, Australia, has taken another step nearer Rome. In a sermon preached in St. Paul's Church recently, he boldly announced his belief in the propriety of prayers for the dead. This opinion is based, first, upon the notion held by many of an intermediate state in the next world—a sort of purgatory, without the torments; secondly, upon the practice of the Jews as indicated in the Apocrypha; and thirdly, upon the silence of the New Testament upon the subject.

—A special meeting for prayer and humiliation was held recently in Edinburgh. The Rev. Dr. Begg, of the Free Church, one of the chief speakers, expressed his conviction that the unseasonable weather was a judgment on account of national sins, among which he enumerated infidelity, the encouragement of Roman Catholicism by the government, the relations which Great Britain maintained with certain foreign countries, Sabbath-breaking and profane swearing.

—The Free Church of Scotland have received intelligence that natives in the neighborhood of Livingstonia and farther north on the west side of Lake Nyassa, at the southern end of Kaningina, are flocking under the protection of the mission stations in larger numbers. At the latter place upward of 2,000 are under the care of the missionaries. The rain fall this year on the shores of the lake is reported to be much greater than during the past two years.

—The Lutheran element of the Prussian State Church, as represented by a Conference held recently in Berlin, protests strongly against the present system of public schools, and demands, as do the Ultramontanes, separate denominational schools. It declares that the present system is opposed to the rights of the family and the church, to the wants of the people, and to the Prussian Constitution. Religion and education must not be divorced.

—The present head of the most celebrated Mohammedan college, the University El Azhar, at Cairo, is a Jewish convert, Abbasi—according to Ebers, a son of a prominent Israelite—whose conversion to Islam caused considerable excitement. Abbasi has held the position since 1871. He has 10,000 students and 300 professors under his control, and receives $10,000 yearly, and a palace for a residence.

—An All-World Sunday-School Convention will be held in London next year, in connection with the Raikes Centenary, the arrangements being carried out chiefly by the Church of England Sunday School Institute and the Wesleyan and Old Bailey Sunday-School Unions." The programme will include services in St. Paul's Cathedral, the City Road Chapel, and Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, besides mammoth meetings at the Albert Hall and elsewhere.

—The government of Portugal has taken up the subject of Christian missions in Africa. A college is to be established at Chellas, near Lisbon, for the education and training of missionaries, who are to be taken from the secular clergy. The missions are to be established in the Portuguese colonies in Africa among the Aborigines. Scientific expeditions are also to accompany the missionaries, with the object of improving the condition of the people.

—When it was announced in England, months ago, that two missionaries had been killed by Lakongeh on the south shore of the Victoria Nyanza, four others promptly volunteered to take their places. And so, closely following the sad tidings of the poisoning of six Polynesian missionaries by the inhabitants of New Guinea, comes the statement that a score of native preachers from other islands have offered themselves for the perilous work.

—"In the very priestly heart of Japan," says the Rev. W. Flemming Stevenson, "in a city where ten years ago foreigners could only be smuggled in by stealth, I listened to sermons preached by native ministers to large native congregations, and found their so scriptural, thoughtful and eloquent, as to place them on a level with our best sermons at home."

—An Anglican writer in High Nonsense thing, in view of Number XXXI of the Church of England's Thirty Nine Articles, which denounces "the sinful fond inventions of men as 'blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits.'" But Bishop Cotterill of Edinburgh joined in accordance with the Old Catholic Bishops Reinkens, of Germany, and Pere Hyacinthe in the Old Catholic Congress on August 19.

—Mr. Fleming Stevenson, in his speech at the London Missionary meeting, stated, in regard to South India, that from Cuvum to Cape Comorin there are 60,000 Christians; from Cape Comorin to Palamcotta there are 90,000, and at Madura 10,000 more. He noted that, besides these, within the last eighteen months 60,000 people had surrendered their idols, and put themselves under Christian instruction.

—The treasurers of the Wesleyan Methodists Thanksgiving Fund have paid over a sixth instalment of £11,500 to be divided among the interests to which the fund is allotted, viz.: foreign and home missions, the education and school funds, the Sunday-School Union, the Children's Home, and the Birmingham Theological Institution.

—The Polish Church is forced, practically, to adopt that it can no more do without the aid of the press than any other church. A great Catholic paper, to be printed in seven languages will soon appear in Rome, the Lateran palace having been set apart by the Pope for its composing, editorial and translating rooms.

—The Bishop of Manchester has been preaching on intemperance in Liverpool. He said that on last Christmas day he saw what shocked him very much, for between the Cathedral and his residence, a distance of two miles, he saw twelve drunken men, and it was early in the day.

—Last year fifty Christian Brothers (Catholic religious) were compelled to leave Germany. They went to Verviers, in Belgium. Now it is announced that the Belgian government has ordered them off, and they have gone to France.

—Bishop Riley the newly consecrated Episcopal Bishop of the Church of Jesus in Mexico, recently came into possession of a fortune from his father and is reported to have given $100,000 the new Mexican Church.

—The Czar has written to the Pope, declaring his readiness to make peace with the Catholic Church in Poland. The Sultan has also written, stating his desire to give the Catholic Church full liberty in his dominions.

—The Wesleyan Methodist Trust Assurance Company, for insuring Wesleyan chapels and trust-property only, has been in operation seven years and has a reserve fund of £10,000. The profits are to be given to denominational objects, and grants are already being made from the profits to the Worn out Ministers' and Ministers' Widows' Fund.

—Fifty thousand pilgrims from all parts of Poland assembled at Czenstochowa September 8, and the Virgin appeared as in former years at the eight A. M. service, but instead of four seeing her, as last year, there were only two, a widow and a girl. The details they separately gave perfectly agreed.

—One hundred and sixty-nine of the Baptist pastors, whose names are given in the English Hand Book, show an aggregate ministry of 1,550 years, or an average of about nine years and two months. The oldest pastorate in London is forty years.

—The Maryland Association of Independent Methodist Churches embraces six ministers, 1,400 members, all in Baltimore; 1,101 Sunday-school scholars; the church property valued at $171,000.

—Cardinal Manning is said to have sent to the Pope an elaborate statement as to the condition of the Roman Catholic Church in England, to serve as the basis for a scheme for reorganization.

Our Young People.

DAISY'S PET.

A little girl, all dressed in gray,
Was in the meadow yesterday.
Her eyes were bright as cockles of June,
And loud she sang a merry tune
While close beneath her dimpled chin,
A sleepy, through-the-day-dreaming lamb,
Like cow-the ball-over and of gray,
A little yellow chicken lay.
So oft she kissed its downy head,
That farmer Abel smiled, and said:
"You mustn't love your pet so much.
Young chickens were not made to touch,
To kiss and hug, and fondle so,
Poor chick may die, the first you know."
"Dess so," she answered, looking wise,
Just as its mother's little eyes.
"I'll make it wise up quick," thought she,
And poked its bill, to make it see,
But chicky would not wake at all.
For rubbing with or fingers small;
And only nestled her head
In little heart's, so soft and red.
Within the barnyard, 'tis the day,
A little girl is grown to-day,
With empty hands and tearful eyes,
Beside the grave where chicky lies,
With blossoms white at head and feet,
Which daily a grave for sleeping sheet,
In little sister's wooly sheep,
As she a ranged in May so deep.
While mourning, 'tis the funeral come,
Departed was elder's sister home,
And said: "Ye cannot be so sober, dear,
And then, perhaps another year,
You may have all of Daisy's Good,
If only you'll be kind and good.
So cheer up now." Old Neal stands by,
Amazed to see his master cry.
He wipes his eyes and says: "Jane Goss,
I know God's will to get a rise."
Then the girl raised up her head,
And wiped her tears, and she said,
"Me wasn't ... and ... for ...
Me only ... and ... for ...

My Monthly Missionary Contribution.

BASTROP, LA., October 30, 1879.

MR. EDITOR: I know sometimes I am like many little girls who start or try to be charitable, but when you know all you will excuse me. Early in July mama was attacked suddenly with what must have been sunstroke. For three weeks she was unconscious, and her life despaired of. God in answer to Aunt Bridget's prayers, raised her up again; and before she was able we were called to our dear eldest brother who had just returned from college in time to nurse mama, night and day, who was attacked with complicated typhoid fever for eight weeks. We have little hope of his recovery. Long before he became convalescent dear papa was stricken down with apoplexy and partial paralysis. Yesterday was eight weeks, and he can only walk a little, and cannot use his right hand. But, as mama says, she has never seen the time she did not have much to thank God for, for the physicians feared he had lost the use of his right leg as well. I tell you there was joy in our house when it was proved he could walk. Mama says she would think we were very wicked, were she not so familiar with Job's history. But Job gave liberally, and we have not. I do believe to be good Christians, and obey the law we must give one-tenth of all we have. I send all I have now.

Please, if you remember what month I sent in last, name it.

Mine, you remember, is for Chinese mission.—Mr. Pandolph.

From your little friend,

Note by the Editor.—We have received the $2 and sent it to Dr. Wilson, to be sent to China. Our young friend, Pearl, is setting a good example not only to the young people, but also to those who are older. If all Methodists were as conscientiously liberal as she is, our missions would be well supported.

The last remittance from Pearl was $1, June 9.

Scotch Granite.

Did you ever have a bit of cloth that you thought clean until some time it happened to be laid close by a new piece, and then you saw it to be soiled? In a similar way people discover facts about themselves sometimes, as Burt and Johnnie Lee did, when their Scotch cousin came to live with them. They were "pretty good boys," and would have been very angry if anybody had called them deceitful. Well, when their cousin came they were delighted. He was little, but very bright and full of fun. He could tell curious things about his home in Scotland and his voyage across the ocean. He was as far advanced in his studies as they were, and the first day he went to school they thought him remarkably good. He wasted no time in play when he should have been studying, and he recited finely. At night, before the close of school, the teacher called a roll, and the boys began to answer "Ten." When Willie understood that he was to answer "ten" if he had not whispered during the day he replied:

"I have whispered."

"More than once?" asked the teacher.

"Yes, sir," answered Willie.

"As many as ten times?"

"Maybe I have," faltered Willie.

"Then I shall mark you 'zero,'" said the teacher sternly, "and that is a great disgrace."

"Why, I did not see you whisper once," said Johnny that night after school.

"Well, I did," said Willie. "I saw others doing it, and so I asked to borrow a book; then I lent a slate pencil and asked a boy for a knife, and did several such things. I supposed it was allowed."

"Oh, we all do it," said Burt, reddening. "There isn't any sense in the old rule, and nobody could keep it, nobody does."

"I will, or else I will say, 'I haven't,' said Willie. "Do you suppose I would tell ten lies in one heap?"

"Oh, we don't call them lies, muttered Johnnie. "There wouldn't be a credit amongst us at night if we were so strict."

"What of that, if you told the truth?" laughed Willie, bravely.

In a short time the boys all saw how it was with him. He studied very hard, played with all his might in playtime, but according to his own account he lost more credits than any of the rest. After some weeks the boys answered "Nine" and "Eight" oftener than they used to; yet the school-room seemed to have grown much quieter. Sometimes, when Willie Grant's mark was even lower than usual, the teacher would smile peculiarly, but said no more of "disgrace." Willie never preached at them or told tales, but somehow it made the boys ashamed of themselves, just the feeling that this sturdy blue-eyed Scotch boy must tell the truth. It was putting the clean cloth by the half soiled one, you see; and they felt like cheats and "story-tellers." They talked him over and loved him. If they did nick-name him "Scotch Granite," he was so true about a promise.

Well, at the end of the term Willie's name was very low down in the credit-list. When it was read he had hard work not to cry, for he was very sensitive, and he had tried hard to be perfect. But the very last thing that day was a speech by the teacher, who told of once seeing a man muffled up in a cloak. He was passing him without a look, when he was told the man was General ——, the great hero. "The signs of his rank were hidden, but the hero was there just the same," said the teacher. "And now boys, you will see what I mean when I tell you that I want to give a little gold medal to the most faithful boy—the one really the most conscientiously perfect in its deportment among you. Who shall have it?"

Little Scotch Granite almost lost forty seven votes, for the child whose name was given on the ballots had made truth noble in their eyes.—Sunday School Visitor.

THE OLD FASHIONED GIRL.—She flourished thirty or forty years ago. She used to help her mother wash the dishes and make the kitchen tidy, and she had an English notion to make pies so nicely that a page could not tell the difference between them and mamma's. She used to go to school by and by, at ten years of age, and darn her own stockings before she was twelve, to say nothing of knitting them herself.

She never said: "I can't," and "I don't want to," to her mother, when asked to leave her play and run up stairs or down on an errand, because she had not been brought up in that way. Obedience was a cardinal virtue in the old-fashioned little girl.

She rose in the morning when she was called, and went into the garden, and saw the dew on the grass, but if she lived in the country she fed the chickens and hunted up the eggs for breakfast.

We do not suppose she had her hair in curl papers, or crimping pins, or had it "banged" over her forehead, and her flounces were no trouble to her.

She learned to sew by making patch-work, and we dare say she could do as "over-and-over" seam as well as nine tenths of the grown up women do now-a days.

The old-fashioned little girl did not grow into a young lady and talk about beaux before she was in her teens, and she did not read dime novels, and was not carrying a hero in every plow-boy she met.

She learned the solid accomplishments as she grew up. She was taught the art of cooking and housekeeping. When she got a husband she knew how to cook him a dinner.

She did not think she knew as much as her mother, and that her judgment was as good as her grandmother's.

And if there be an old fashioned little girl in the world to-day, may Heaven bless her, and keep her, and raise up others like her.

THE AUTUMN LEAF.—Once upon a time a little leaf was heard to sigh and cry, as leaves often do when a gentle wind is about. And the twig said, "What is the matter, little leaf?" And the leaf said, "The wind just told me that one day it would pull me off and throw me down to die on the ground." The twig told it to the branch on which it grew, and the branch told it to the tree.

And when the tree heard it, it rustled all over and sent word back to the leaf, "Do not be afraid; hold on tightly, and you shall not go until you want to."

And so the leaf stopped sighing, but went on resting and singing. Every time the tree shook itself and stirred up all its leaves, the branches shook themselves, and the little twig shook itself, and the little leaf danced up and down merrily, as if nothing could ever pull it off.

And so it grew, all summer long, till October. And when the bright days of autumn came, the little leaf saw all the leaves around becoming very beautiful. Some were yellow, and some scarlet, and some striped with both colors. Then it asked the tree what it meant? And the tree said: "All these leaves are getting ready to fly away, and they have put on these beautiful colors because of joy." Then the little leaf began to want to go, and grew very beautiful in thinking of it, and when it was very gay in color, it saw that the branches of the tree had no color in them, and so the leaf said, "Oh, branches! why are you lead-color and we golden?"

"We must keep on our work-clothes, for our life is not done; but your clothes are for holiday, because your tasks are over." Just then a little puff of wind came, and the leaf let go without thinking of it, and the wind took it up, and turned it over and over, and whirled it like a spark of fire in the air, and then it fell gently down under the edge of the fence among hundreds of leaves, and fell into a dream, and never waked up to tell what it dreamed about!—H. W. Beecher.

The Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1879.

REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

OFFICE,—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

About Our Advocate.

We have seldom much to say, editorially, about our paper, not that occasion is wanting, but because we suppose our readers and agents become so accustomed to these appeals and exhortations that they pass them unheeded.

Now, as always, the existence and prosperity of the paper depends largely upon the interest and activity of its friends, especially of the preachers of the patronizing Conferences. If all, or the greater part of them, would do what they can, without interfering with their other duties, and with little inconvenience to themselves, we should have a much larger circulation, and one that would enable us to make considerable improvements.

We know that our pastors have much to do, that they are pretty fully occupied with their pastoral duties, but the circulation of a church paper among the members should be regarded as an important part of the work of those who have the care of souls. By keeping the matter in mind occasions will offer in pastoral visiting, and in meeting the congregations for the presentation of the subject.

As a rule, preachers on circuits do better as agents than those in city stations. Stationed preachers ought to excel the others, as they are brought in more frequent intercourse with the families of their charges, and as in their systematic house to house visiting subscribers could be obtained with little extra trouble. In most of the towns and cities in the bounds of our patronizing Conferences the number of subscribers is alarmingly small in proportion to the membership of the churches. The most of them do not read our paper. We should be glad to know that they read any religious paper of any kind, but it has in it nearly everything that is practical and useful. Instead of seeking further for the reason of our comparative lack of enterprise and genius in the use of our naturally wonderfully resources, we may find it here. Education, even in its common grade, is neglected, and higher education is even in a more languishing condition. Trained and disciplined minds are required for the highest practical achievements in the commercial, sanitary and agricultural departments. If we would have good farmers, skillful mechanics, apt working men, and the best type of commercial character, we must have schools. People are unable to improve themselves, nor are they willing to be elevated by others, until they are vivified and aroused by education. This, generally diffused, would lead to practical results. We must have an educated people before we can expect to make our own plows, wagons and wheelbarrows, and before we can have a system of farming which shall compare with the highest results of agricultural science.

There is nothing more practical than religion. While its chief aim is to fit us for eternal blessedness, it inevitably subserves our highest temporal interests. It is true that there is lack of versatile industry, that in many sections of the South there is no enterprise, no spring, no striving after improvement. That is a poor religion, however, that does not wake up the soul to the duty of labor, and to the desire for all that is ameliorating to the outward condition and refining to the taste. He is no Christian who lives in a large degree, when he might, by due effort, have a comfortable and well furnished home. The lower motive of avarice is strong to push men on, but the gospel furnishes a higher incentive to effort. If the gospel were felt in the hearts of the people in its converting power, we should have at once, in every community, an industrious and progressive population. Regenerate the soul through the power of the gospel, and there will be a revolution in the habits and thoughts of the people. This done, there would be deliverance from whisky, from gambling, from violence and crime, and from that utter torpor of body, soul and spirit which rests upon some classes of society. The steam engine, the telegraph, railroads, steamships, the cotton gin, as well as the virtuous, refined home life of the age, have all come out of the gospel. Godliness has "promise of the life that now is," and all that is most practical and useful may be traced to its influence.

Moral and spiritual forces may seem, to the superficial thinker, to have little connection with the secular utilities. But, in reality, they are the main factors in our material prosperity. They give new life to the intellect, they inspire every noble purpose, and incite to all that is pure and elevating. Could the gospel, simply as the message of eternal life, reach such communities as cluster along the bayous of lower Louisiana, or inhabit the remote piney woods regions of Alabama, Florida and Mississippi, or the mountainous sections of Tennessee and Kentucky, all things would soon become new. The school and the pulpit are the most practical of things. They lay the foundations of material wealth and enterprise, and no country can be great and prosperous without them.

Technical education may be important, but back of this, and back of any trade, profession or pursuit, should be the discipline of mind. Then all other things are possible. Calculus and the Greek and Latin classics have in them the potentiles of hoop-poles, tooth-picks and water-buckets; likewise of ships, jetties, great bridges, and well-drained and productive farms.

Some communities need that stimulant to industry and effort which a certain amount of culture can alone furnish. Our Acadians are content to live in hovels, to dress in home-spun, and fare meagerly on fish and rice, and to be without books or papers. There are thousands of people in other sections just as inert, and just as contented in their filth and squalor, because they know of nothing better. Raise them in the scale of intelligence, open their dead souls by the spiritual power of the gospel, and a new motive to enterprise is given at once. If we wish to make our country what it ought to be, self helpful, productive, progressive and prosperous, we must send the schoolmaster and the preacher everywhere. Education and religion are not only the most practical of things, but they are the only supreme utilities. Let them have due sway, and everything that is useful, good and beautiful, will spring up under their benificent and magic power.

We would have our boys learn trades, have them instructed in agriculture, in commerce, in the professions. And we would have our girls pass through the finishing schools of the kitchen, the laundry and the dairy, and the wardrobe, but first let us have trained minds, as far as possible, and, above all, characters molded by the Spirit of Christ.

The Useful and the Practical.

It is a very common view of the matter that education and religion are somehow removed from the sphere of the useful and practical in secular and worldly affairs. A very wise and successful business man, with whom we had an evening of pleasant, and, to us, profitable talk, not long ago, suggested that the pulpit ought to give more prominence in its teachings to the duty of industry, and to the development of the practical enterprises and pursuits of life. He very forcibly enlarged upon the capabilities of our country for manufacturing, the abundance of material in wood, metals, and unemployed and habitually idle people. And yet, he said, we send abroad for our hoop poles, our water buckets and our tooth picks.

Thrift, ingenuity and energy need development, no doubt, as our friend insisted, and we believe that the gospel preacher might help to bring it about without compromising his character as a religious teacher. Certainly useful labor is enjoined by inspired authority. The apostolic command is: "That ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands;" and "if any would not work, neither should he eat." But after doing what we can directly as educators and preachers to imbue the minds of the young men of the country, and of all classes, with the most practical ideas, is not our best hope of improvement in the mental discipline of the school, and in the religious influence of the gospel. To us it seems impossible that this, or any other country, can reach the highest material prosperity without both education and religion. Without quickened intelligence, and without trained mental faculties, there can be no advance in inventions, nor in the creation of new industries. Mental torpor and incapacity are largely those use of the inferior energy and intolerance of the unimproving and non-productive classes. Universal public education and adequate academical provisions will do much to wake up the slumbering mind, and to inspire our idle or half awake people with the desire of progress.

There is no end to the greatness of utilities that has in it nearly everything that is practical and useful. Instead of seeking further for the reason of our comparative lack of enterprise and genius in the use of our naturally wonderfully resources, we may find it here. Education, even in its common grade, is neglected, and higher education is even in a more languishing condition. Trained and disciplined minds are required for the highest practical achievements in the commercial, sanitary and agricultural departments. The Columbia and Pacific Conferences.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

MR EDITOR: After leaving Montana it required incessant motion to reach Oregon, in time to open the Columbia Conference. I had made up my mind, long, long ago, that the stage route from Sacramento would never be again traveled by me, but, to my great distress, the steamer had just left San Francisco, and it was either to miss the Conference altogether, or go to Oregon by land. Knowing what awaited me, I started, hoping to find the route easier and shorter than it was eight years ago. It proved to be no shorter, and much harder. By the by, have you ever thought, for any length of time, upon the Concord (New Hampshire) mail coach? Well, if not, may be some of these days you will. It is made of iron, leather and wood, after a style that defies both time and change. Just as it is, it was fifty years ago—the same leather springs, boot, straps, seats and color; no material change, even in the driver. A thousand inventions, evolutions, discoveries have come, but this instrument of public torture remains precisely as it was when Amos Kendall was the Post Master General, and it is scarcely probable now that it ever will be altered. Having been for three days and nights in close sleepless contact with this coach, I should like to do justice to its motion when drawn by six horses, at full speed, down a steep grade, in a dark night, around short curves, along narrow ledges, above deep chasms, during successive mile stretches, where the breaking of a strap, or the stumbling of a leader, would insure instant death to all inside passengers. It's roll and jerk, and swing and jar, and spring and thump, thump, as if running over logs, and lull suddenly, to be followed by a breaking movement that lifts and brings down every wheel at once, are enough to arouse all the worst feelings of the public against the government. I did not sleep while on this route, and had Dante ever passed over it he would certainly have introduced it into his Inferno.

Albany is a beautiful town of several thousand inhabitants, full of churches, of which ours is the best and most sightly. The Columbia Conference has made considerable advance since my last visit, both in numbers and material strength. It has been blessed with revival seasons, and has encountered hard times during the year just passed. It has required great powers of endurance in some of the brethren to maintain their usual front; but others are hopeful, and look forward to large accessions, the coming year, from the moving of our people into the Conference territory from Missouri, Virginia, North Carolina and East Tennessee. Quite a large proportion of its preachers are from the Holston Conference, and several more are writing and looking this way. The Walla Walla country is filling up, and, if our preachers there will determine to build churches, in the course of another year the strength of the body will be in that part of the work. The missionary meeting happened on a rainy night, but we had a fair audience, and collected $100 cash. The membership had increased some 300 during the year, and several churches had been built.

Coming down by steam over the rough equinoctial swell of the Pacific, I found myself presently at the Palace Hotel of San Francisco. The brethren missed me for twenty-four hours, which I was glad to devote to sleep and absolute quiet. Were this hotel in Texas, it would be the most magnificent homestead in the round world, for it belongs to one man. Its roomy porches, luxurious parlors, electric-lighted marble court, its choice paintings, both landscape and historic, its beds, table and service, offer the most comfort, for the same money, ever afforded a weary traveler. On Sabbath I preached at our Columbia Square Church to a good audience. The location of this church is excellent. It is right in the present and prospective center of the city, the City Hall being on the same line, east and west, the mint several squares below, the Mechanic's Hall—a place of great public resort—a square above, and, still farther above, the Catholic Cathedral, the grandest and most appalling structure of its kind on the continent, not excepting that recently dedicated in New York. Three long lines of city railway are on each side and one other running east and west. The house itself is of good size, and for $1,000 put on the inside work could be made very attractive, and all that our church at present requires. It is a strange fact that our society has received but little support from the many Southerners who have moved to the city. It has never had much money, and this present house is the result of slow accumulation, and a very good Providence, in the way of cheap purchase.

The Conference met at Sacramento. It was well attended, and a time of good Christian fellowship with the brethren and friends of Southern Methodism. Churches and parsonages have given much additional strength and solidity to the work since 1871. The session was without a jar of any kind. The missionary meeting was on a rainy night, but yielded $167 cash. The year has been one of unusual shrinkage in the industrial and financial income of California, and our preachers, who are citizens as well, share the fortunes of their people. They have many things to encounter. A strong crusade against a "solid South" is being started by the newspapers of this coast, in echo to those of the East; and one or two traveling preachers are swelling the brim with unequaled power of assertion, whose lecturing and preaching on the "Exodus" and the "Shirt" are doing themselves no little harm, and as much good. Besides which there are combinations of all shades and degrees of enmity against Christianity, the Bible and the Sabbath, that are active in circulating infidel tracts, papers and books, in regular meetings and lectures, worthy the days of the French Revolution. Then there are "Workingmen," a "Constitutional Party," a Democratic and a Republican, representing every side and shape of political theory, from the boldest agrarianism to the hyper timid term conservatism. All agreeing in but one thing—that is: "John Chinaman must go." Of 150,000 votes in California, but 1,000 were cast for the Celestial, and in the city of San Francisco the vote stood 11,007 against, and 250 for. I suppose that no such unanimity could be secured on any question of fact social, economical or scientific. The reasons are that the Chinaman spends here absolutely nothing, but exports every dollar he makes. His clothing, rice, shoes, medicines, spices, everything, he buys from China, and sends home about $10,000,000 in bullion annually. He is a powerful competitor in all kinds of industry, agricultural or mechanical, and is capable of every enterprise, from washing a shirt to contracting for or the building of a thousand miles of railroad. He changes not, he wears his tail, he learns quickly, he endures patiently, he works steadily, he saves constantly, he lacks neither wit nor tact nor courage, and can keep his own counsel. He is universal—in the mountains mining, among the placers washing, in the towns cooking, in the country gardening, along the shore drying shrimp, and in the sea, with new-fangled nets, catching more fish than a Spaniard. For once the Yankee is out done, over-done, exercised, exhausted, disgusted. He feels toward John nearly all the time as "Honest James" and Bill Nye did toward Ah Sin, on the occasion of a certain memorable discovery. In fact, John is the Yankee of the East, and is a full match for Jonathan in State craft, diplomacy, business, or at any other small game he is pleased to start. Woe to the South when she exchanges the negro laborer for this Celestial economist.

The best thing, and the one sufficient thing to be said of our work here, is that there have been conversions in nearly every charge. The power and presence of the Holy Ghost is the only hope of this coast, and no church here has more of this divine presence than our own. Several preachers have been transferred from the East this way. I advise them all to come by emigrant train and ticket. There are now cheap sleeping cars attached to these trains, and the Pacific preachers travel this way, as being nearly as comfortable as a first class ticket, and much cheaper—less than one-half.

The Door-Keeper Spirit.

David had a varied experience and a many-sided character. He touched the extremes of a human history. His life, as some poet has said of man, was a

"Paradise between a smile and a tear."

Like Paul, he knew how to abound and how to be abased. He was at one time friendless and homeless, seeking a hiding-place in the caves of the mountains from vaunting, vigilant enemies; and, again, one of the greatest of kings, with none too high or low to do him reverence. His spiritual exercises and experiences during all those changeful years, written down by his own sweet, lyric pen, make up a religious history wonderful in uniqueness and opulent in wholesome instruction. Throughout that marvelous career one principle characterized him, and shone with more or less brilliancy in daily life. That principle, to borrow his own suggestive phrase, may be denominated the door keeper spirit. In Psalm lxxxiv, 10, David says: "I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." He here institutes a comparison, and thereby gives more forcible expression to his exalted appreciation of God's service. The marginal rendering has it "to sit at the threshold," which, the commentators agree, more accurately expresses the mind of the Psalmist. Evidently he wished to convey the idea of deep humility—the attitude of a menial or even a beggar. This expression is fruitful of spiritual edification. It types an experience worthy our emulation. As a revelation of character, it challenges our prayerful study. If reproduced and illustrated in our experience, it will give expansion to our enterprises and harmony to our churches.

It reveals the comprehensiveness of intelligent faith. David looked at life in its totality and studied history by the light of eternity. Faith taught him that as this life is a probationary period those things should be most prized which shape the happy destinies of eternity. Crowns, kingdoms, rank, fortune, are nothing, unless they reach beyond this visible into the eternal. Furthermore, the place of deepest humility is most honorable if it affects and enhances our happiness in the world invisible. Far happier and more honorable was it, in his estimation, to be the least and lowest of the Lord's servants, than the greatest of earthly potentates. So ennobling, to his eye of faith, was the service of God, that he would rather "sit at the threshold," have the lowliest position, be a menial at the door, than dwell in royal palaces "without hope and without God in the world." In the courts of the Lord he found sweeter, diviner pleasure, than in all the gilded haunts of sinful wealth and splendor. Worldly joys were but dead-sea apples, which turn to ashes on the lips without the hopes and promises of heaven.

This expression also reveals a spirit of dutifulness. He indicated a readiness for service. Whatever his hands could find to do he would not shrink from the undertaking. This should be characteristic of our Christianity to-day—a dutiful spirit. Our enterprises are contracted for lack of this virtue. More than one-half of our church members are inactive and undutiful. Less than a jubilee of years would pass before the world would be redeemed, if every Christian heart was inspired with this sentiment. That is the ideal church in which every member has the spirit of dutifulness, and finds something to do.

It furthermore reveals a spirit of cheerful acquiescence. Whatever place might be assigned, or duty imposed, he would readily acquiesce and obey. He would not presume to counsel Providence or question the divine arrangements. If it made him a door-keeper, rather than a king, he would esteem it honor enough. This is a virtue of measureless value, and, I verily believe, the noblest, fairest type of Christian consecration. To cheerfully acquiesce in God's appointments, and occupy, if need be, the least conspicuous place in His church, is to be like Christ. It is the spirit of a man, and God's blessing on it, that ennobles and sanctifies position. To be a door-keeper under divine appointment is as exalted and exalting as to wear a seraph's robes, or bear the messages of Heaven on the wings of an archangel. Any work which God appoints is honorable above all earthly distinctions. Arranged by divine wisdom, the foot cannot complain that it is not the hand, nor the hand that it is not the head. But here is a test of faith, and here we often fail to our own hurt and the discord of the church. Alas! we have too much ambition for place. Service is most cheerfully given provided we can select our field of labor or post of honor. But to exercise the door-keeper spirit—accept the humblest place, if therein God may be served—staggers faith, dampens zeal, and disappoints pride. No doubt many have withdrawn from our itinerant ministry, because they did not occupy stations they imagined their talents and qualifications commanded. Among the laity there has been disappointment and dissatisfaction, because they have not been elevated to the dignity of the church. One may imagine that he has eminent fitness for the superintendence of a Sunday-school, and yet has been strangely overlooked. Another supposes himself qualified for the stewardship, but has never been elected. This writer once knew a brother to become bitterly offended because he was not called upon to pray in the congregation with sufficient frequency. Our reward is not according to position, but fidelity in it, whether high or low. The soldier who fights in the ranks is as deserving of honor as the general who plans and commands. In the Lord's army it is so. A faithful Sunday-school teacher occupies a place no less honorable than a true minister of God, be he deacon or Bishop. We need everywhere this door-keeper spirit. It finds each a place, and moves our ecclesiastical machinery without friction or discord. A lack of it is injurious to personal piety, and limits, if not destroys, spiritual efficiency.

Cause.

So far as anything to the contrary appears, the change by which Dr. Summers was elected managing editor of the Quarterly Review, in the place of Dr. Hinton, was perfectly agreeable to the latter. It may be, however, that we are all in the dark. The Wesleyan Christian Advocate, in an article on the subject, says:

"There is no use in crowding words or hiding facts. Dr. Hinton has thousands of friends who feel deeply wounded at the turn that has been given to affairs.

What Dr. Summers will do, remains to be seen. His letter indicates that he has still his face in the dark to some extent, at least. He seems not to have been consulted before his election, and even at the date of his letter he had not definite information as to what is expected of him. His learning, experience, ability, industry and devotion to the church all men know. If he undertakes the heavy and doubtful experiment he will do his best and that means a great deal.

But as his friend and a friend of the church—dreading failure in any enterprise even remotely connected with the church—we ask leave to say to the worthy brethren who compose the Committee of Ten: Neither Dr. Summers—with all his gifts and resources—nor the whole committee, with all their varied and excellent gifts, can make such a review as the Southern Methodist Church needs, without money—money not only to pay printers, but writers. The time has passed when a great Review can be run on the plan of complimentary benevolence and co-operative industry. What is desirable is one thing; what is practicable is another. If the committee can raise from $10,000 to $20,000 they would have but a small amount to enter upon such competitions as belong to the Review literature of the day. If we mistake not, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, does not want an inferior Review at all. If Dr. Summers takes charge he will do his best and we will certainly wish him success.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Perry, who recently died of yellow fever at Concordia, Miss., was a member of the North Mississippi Conference, and pastor at Concordia and Australia. Rev. David Plows, who was critically sick with

We are gratified to see that the Post Master General has issued orders excluding the letters and circulars of lottery companies from the mails. It is to be hoped that Congress will pass a law prohibiting the mailing of newspapers containing lottery advertisements. This measure is as much needed nearly as the other, and public opinion in the country at large would endorse it. Neither the State nor the Federal government should give countenance to this corrupting institution.

yellow fever at the same place, was also a member of the North Mississippi Conference. We have not learned whither he has recovered or not. The Western Methodist says, concerning these brethren:

Dr. J. W. Perry, numbered among the dead, was a beloved and useful member of the North Mississippi Conference, and pastor at Concordia and Australia. A good and true man has fallen at his post, and entered upon his great reward. Mrs. Perry, whose sickness is reported, we suppose to be the wife of our departed brother. The sympathies and prayers of many readers will be called forth by the tidings of her bereavement and illness.

The Rev. David Plews, the sickness of whose children is dispatched, is a member of the North Mississippi Conference—his field of labor at a distance from home. May God spare his family!

The Texas Christian Advocate, in its account of the West Texas Conference, says:

The reports from the Mexican Border Mission District show no abatement in the remarkable prosperity which has marked this work from its commencement. It now numbers twelve itinerant native preachers, one local preacher, and 620 members. There have been 170 additions to the membership the past year. There were reported 135 adult and 86 infant baptisms, 26 Sunday-schools and 525 scholars. The missionaries have been active in preaching, visiting the people, and circulating tracts and other religious literature. Class and prayer meetings are well attended. If no preacher is present, a leader is always at hand to conduct the exercises. All the men and many of the women pray in the social religious meetings. Family prayer is found in every Methodist household. In the absence of the father, the mother conducts the family devotions. Many of the preachers have been exposed to some persecution on account of their religion, but their faith has kept them faithful to their work. A stone crashing through the windows or battering against the roof or walls of the places of worship are not unfrequent accompaniments of public devotions. Let the church hold up their hands.

The editor of the Pacific Methodist, writing of the recent session of the Pacific Conference at Sacramento, says:

The reports of the preachers were about as usual—advance all along the line. Every presiding elder reported new fields to be supplied. We thank God that our church is striving to do the Master's business.

We rejoice that Bishop Keener was with us. Eight years ago he presided over this Conference and won the highest praise for sagacity and thoroughness. This year he developed an extraordinary degree of tenderness and sanctified wisdom. His loving, fatherly spirit was evidenced in many ways and won upon the affection of all classes of the Conference. He impressed every one with the feeling that he was a Methodist preacher of the highest type. In his missionary address on Saturday night he was a Jeremiah with sad heart but flaming zeal. His exhortations will burn in the bosom of the church. On Sunday he preached two rare sermons. No tricks of oratory, no tawdry embellishments, no pyrotechnics; but massive, grand and symmetrical as a Greek column. That Sunday was a day of inspirations—from the early love feast to the benediction at night it was unctuous.

Editorial correspondence of Holston Methodist has the following notice of Bishop Pierce's sermon at the Holston Conference:

On Sabbath morning the bishop was hoarse, the crowd was large, and his friends pitied him; but before the sermon was over, pity was turned into holy pride. His text, taken from Timothy, led him to discuss the duties of the ministry. As he warmed, his voice improved, and for an hour I sat, listening and drinking with gestures upon the manna like sweetness that dropped from his tongue. Imagination, fancy, argument, flurry, word-painting, rhetorical flesh, deliberate yet impassioned utterance, all sanctified by the presence of the ever blessed Spirit, combined to make the discourse one of the best of his life. I fear it is our last from him. Would that a reporter had been present to report every word of it?

The opening exercises of the Young Men's Christian Association of this city will take place at their new and commodious apartments, No. 87 Camp street, formerly Armory Hall, on Thursday, November 13, 1879, half-past seven P. M., at which time address will be made by Rev. Hugh Miller Thompson, D. D., R. G. Holden, Esq., and William A. Armstrong, Esq., while the Young Men's Christian Association Musical Society promise choice entertainment. The public will be cordially welcomed, and we trust large numbers of our readers will be present and assist this Christian corps in establishing an attractive resort for our local young men as well as visitors from the country and distant places.

The opening of the Young Men's Christian Association Lyceum will be held on Friday, November 14, an interesting programme has been prepared. Many ladies and gentlemen who were not members of the Young Men's Christian Association have attended the meetings of the Lyceum and expressed themselves highly pleased. We understand the invitation is extended to all who may find it convenient to attend, free of cost.

—Saturday, November 1, was All Saints Day, and, as usual in New Orleans, the cemeteries were thronged with people. The floral decorations of the tombs were profuse and beautiful. Our people here, Protestant as well as Catholic seem generally to have fallen into the custom of cleaning up and adorning the burial places of their dead on this day. Apart from its connection with the Romish calendar and from the superstitions associated with it, the custom is in itself commendable. Good taste and respect for the departed should lead people to care for the grounds where the ashes of loved ones are deposited. The neglected condition of many graveyards is a serious reflection upon the communities in which they are located. A neat and well-kept cemetery speaks well for the people who have it in charge.

—We are having perfect autumn weather—cool and bright. The fall of the leaves has hardly begun, but some of the foliage is turning, and the first good frost will strip the sycamores, elms, chinas and tallow trees. No frost, however, in New Orleans, to this date. Our city is healthy; the streets have a lively, bustling look and sound, and, but for the low stage of water in the rivers, business would be at its heighth. As it is, the receipts of cotton are very large for the season, and sugar and molasses are beginning to come in freely. The remarkable business revival in the North and West, must be felt soon throughout the South. The immense shipments of grain to Europe will be felt in all departments of trade.

—The new and beautiful McKendree Church, Nashville, Tenn., was burned Sunday night, October 26. It occurred only an hour or two after the night service. The cause is unknown. The cost of building and furniture was $70,000. There was no insurance of course. The Western Methodist estimates that to rebuild and refurnish will cost about $75,000, as the price of material and labor are now higher. The official board and trustees have resolved to proceed at once to rebuild.

—At our Quarterly Conference at Baton Rouge La., a few days ago, we found that the charge had raised over $1,800 for church repairs, that all the collections had been taken in full, and that they were not much behind in the pastor's salary. Bro. Sawyer and his people are entitled to honorable mention. The Louisiana Conference, which is to meet there December 10 will receive a cordial welcome.

—A protracted meeting of considerable interest is now in progress at the Felicity Street Church, Rev. John Hannon, pastor. The congregations are large, and there have been a number of conversions.

—The editor of the Western Methodist announces that the office of that paper will be transferred from Memphis to Little Rock as soon as practicable, after the sessions of the patronizing Conferences.

—On our second page will be found the first half of a very ably-written article on Religious Literature, by Rev. E. P. Pierce, of the Alabama Conference. The article will be concluded in next week's paper.

—Rev. Stephen Noland, of Nicholasville, Ky., is announced as associate editor and proprietor of the Central Methodist, Catlettsburg, Ky.

—Rev. John Pipes, writing October —, says: "We are helping Bro. Perdue in a precious revival of fire here in Mansfield, La."

—Rev. E. M. Whitmore, in charge of Saline circuit, Little Rock Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, died October 20.

Periodicals.

—Our Sunday-school periodicals for November comprises a very complete literature for the Sunday-school work. They are brought out in good style, and are filled with matter adapted to the wants of children and teachers. The Sunday School Quarterly reaches us after one month of the last quarter is passed, but we suppose it was furnished the schools in better time.

—Appleton's Journal for November has: The City of Antwerp; Otway; The Seamy Side; Two Men of Letters. Charles Lever and Theophile Gautier; Vivian the Beauty; The Mahdiat, or Spiritual Christianity in Eastern Africa; Mr. Mayvey Napier and the Edinburg Reviewers; A Walk in a Wood; Memoirs of Madame de Remusat; Editor's Table; Books of the Day.

—Scribner's Monthly for November has: A Portrait of Bayard Taylor; The Cornell University Memorial of Bayard Taylor; The French Quarter of New York; Success With Small Fruits; The Michigan Orphaning; In Confidence; Mr. Morris Moore and His Old Masters; Galatea; Rare Lawn Trees; The Mississippi Jetties; Extracts from the Journal of Henry J. Raymond; The Agricultural Distress in Great Britain; Confidence; Bayard Taylor—His Poetry and Literary Career; How Animals Get Home; For a Translation of Thoreau; The Grandissimes—A Story of Creole Life; Picturesque Features of Kansas Farming, and other articles. The Grandissimes, chapters I-VI, is the beginning of a serial by our gifted townsman, George W. Cable. The illustrations in this number of Scribner are numerous.

While we continue to do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements from the ADVOCATE, parties must judge for themselves as to the reality of the goods advertised. In ordering please mention the ADVOCATE.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.—January next the ADVOCATE office will adopt the cash system, and business thereafter will be conducted on the basis of all the leading papers published. Subscriptions being payable in advance for such length of time as desired. The date of expiration by months will appear opposite the name of each subscriber, indicating the subscription expires with the close of that month, at which time the paper will be discontinued, unless renewed. This will materially simplify the office work, as the printer will drop the names according to monthly expiration, and no individual personally be known, as every subscriber will have a standing notice of expiration. It will also facilitate agents in giving receipts in accordance with office accounts, corresponding with printed date. Where advance payments exceeding one year are made the year to which paid will also be inserted. Errors in names and dates will be promptly corrected when advised and we solicit from the office of subscribers, which is each, as our desire is to avoid all friction or causes for complaint, and have everything as nearly perfect as possible. Accounts will be kept with agents as preferred. To whom payments may be made or sent direct to the office, if preferred.

WRAPS, cloaks, shawls and other outside over garments, ladies' dress goods in profusion, at fresh first cost goods, and sold at the lowest prices by Messrs. E. H. Adams & Bro.

STAINED GLASS FOR CHURCHES.—We refer our readers to the advertisement of G. A. Misch, 217 East Washington street, Chicago, and would say that it is no better man to do this work. He employs secretary men, and has a very large patronage, and stands well in Chicago and has a good reliable name. He has done nothing work for the South and we understand has given prices on some fine Stained Glass for orders.

HARDWARE.—For hardware of every description from the heaviest to the lightest, go to the well-known house of Rice, Born & Co., 89 Camp street. For future dealings, having a reputation second to none in the United States and foreign countries, they will keep up their reputation and not be undersold by any house in the trade. Their prices are always low, and their goods of the best quality. Read their advertisement and give them your patronage.

SAWS.—Messrs. Curtis & Co., of St. Louis, manufacturers of [illegible] saws, have a very extensive and popular advertisement in this issue, to which we call the attention of our readers. In addition to their saws, they are large manufacturers of planing mill supplies, and their goods are sold by dealers throughout the country. They also manufacture the celebrated Edgewood Patent Slotted Circular Saw, which is said to be the best saw in the market. Their new illustrated catalogue will be sent free on application.

PROPAGATION BY CUTTINGS.—The production of a plant from a bud, a graft, a layer or cutting, is one and the same thing accomplished by different means. In each case a part of the parent plant, with one or more buds attached, is separated from it and inserted under the bark of another plant or the same or a closely allied species, or in the soil to which it unites, or is buried in the ground to cause its propagation is carried on by budding, grafting, layering or cutting. The bud placed above ground draws its support directly from the soil through the pores of wood it becomes a part; but set under the ground it gains its own support.

A cutting consists of a shoot or portion of a shoot, usually of one season's growth and containing one or more buds, according to the nature of the plant and the manner in which it is to be grown. The wood should be as mature as possible, and cut close and smooth to a bud at both ends. P. Barry, in other terms, "all buds are alike that in all cases cuttings taken off close to the old wood with the base of the mature specimen than when cut at several joints and you and in many cases, as in the quince for example, an inch or heel of old wood left at the base of the cutting renders it still more certain of success. Buds around the base of a cutting, as soon as they become active, send forth new matter from which the roots are thrown out, therefore the more buds at the base, other things being favorable, the greater the success of the cutting. In many instances, however, a cutting may contain but a single eye with a portion of wood above and below it, as is often the case in grafting.

Cuttings are made in the fall usually when, in other words, as soon as the wood is ripe. When practicable they are planted in the fall, which season would be best for all species could they be so protected as to prevent the frost from heaving them out of the ground. When circumstances demand, the spring planting of cuttings will be done early, that the growth may have sufficiently progressed before warm weather to insure the formation of roots for the support of the plant. In either case remember that the character and condition of the soil has much to do with the final success of the cuttings. Avoid the extremes of damp and compact and loose and sandy soil. The cuttings ought to be made so that each will contain sufficient for the support of the cutting until it forms.

The depth to which cuttings are to be put depends upon circumstances. As a rule they should be planted as deep as will insure them a good foothold in the soil, and yet not so deep as to cause them to decay. In the case of cuttings with but one eye, the eye should be even with the surface of the ground. Cuttings are set in the ground in various ways, as in rows, in beds, in nursery, etc. Here we need not enter into details, but refer the reader to some work on gardening.

Cuttings of spring plants may be made in autumn and preserved in sand in a cool cellar, and in the spring planted out. Cuttings of autumn and winter plants are usually made in the spring, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of evergreens are usually made in the spring, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of deciduous trees are usually made in the autumn, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of shrubs are usually made in the autumn, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of herbaceous plants are usually made in the spring, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of bulbs are usually made in the autumn, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of tubers are usually made in the autumn, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of roots are usually made in the autumn, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of leaves are usually made in the spring, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of stems are usually made in the spring, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of flowers are usually made in the spring, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of fruits are usually made in the autumn, and planted in the open ground. Cuttings of seeds are usually made in the autumn, and planted in the open ground.

KEEPING MEAT FRESH.—The system of preserving animal substances by securing the coagulation of the albumen and excluding the air is receiving much attention in England just now, according to the London Country Gentleman, a good deal of attention. The process known as the Japanese method consists in placing raw flesh in porcelain vessels and boiling on it boiling water, whereby the albumen on the surface is quickly coagulated and forms a protecting film against the introduction of the water. Dishes then found to exclude the air and consequent putrefaction of the meat.

SIMPLE CURE FOR DIPHTHERIA.—It is said that an herbal tea and a vegetable juice for diphtheria, is simply to put a teaspoonful of salt into a wine glass of water and stir with the finger, instead of a spoon, as the salt dissolves more readily and gargle with water. THE AUTUMN HAZE.—Mr. Joel Benton has recently published an elaborate essay, combating the popular notion, which also has a quasi scientific support, that the blue haze of ordinary smoke from fires. He argues first that the well-known behavior of smoke is not consistent with the various phenomena of the blue haze. After describing this, he says: "If it (smoke) even seems to wilt or attenuate in some secluded valley, it is never still; it does not even approximate quietude sufficiently to cheat the eye; it is not a part of the air, but rather a passenger upon it, and subject to every breeze that blows or summer zephyr that dallies by. I have watched the outbreak of a good many heavy volumes of smoke, and I have never yet seen one that stimulates it in any of its wrigglings and active transformations, or in its completest repose, that unique enchantment which is wrought by the Indian summer haze." If this haze is the product of smoke from fire, "there should be," he says, "an alarming number of them in the fall of the year." But neither the annual fire statistics nor the newspaper reports show this. Mr. Benton says the heaviest autumn fires occur at the end of the hazy season, which would make the haze precede the fires, and consequently the cause of the haze. "And so, after the usual mountain fires have begun, which consecutive nights he has noticed. Besides, all the woods of the Hudson river counties, if they should be on fire at once, would—if smoke could cause the haze—make no appreciable part of it; and the simultaneous appearance of it over a whole continent makes it impossible to be caused by smoke from any fires that were ever known. It reaches from the Arctic Circle to the Torrid Zone. Its occurrence in the northernmost region, if it is caused by smoke, could not happen there except through a conflagration of its bogs."—Barnes' Educational Monthly.

DRAINING THE COLOSSEUM. In consequence of the excavations which have been making in the Colosseum at Rome, water has collected in it very rapidly, and has had to be pumped out at an expense so great that, in 1876, the government decided that pumping must be discontinued in case the water has collected, being assured that it would never reach the underbuildings of the arena. It was found that one of the sewers which the imperial government is building from the Esquiline grade had its head in the pool. Level of the Colosseum canal is below the level of the recently excavated subterranean corridors. While arranging for the inlet of this sewer, it occurred to the engineer in charge that the tunnel might be used to drain the water from the pool. Except in case of heavy rains, there will be no danger from subsequent collections. No connection whatever is to be made with the interior of the school. They propose to keep a constant stream of the pumps in operation, so that the water shall be extracted as fast as it flows in, and that their speed and the pump generally, be under the constant supervision of engineers, who will be detailed to every interested department of the work at their charge.—C. W. MOISE, Principal.

Ayer's Hair Vigor, FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR. It is a most agreeable dressing which is at once harmless and effectual in preserving the hair, restoring, when the gloss and freshness of youth has departed, its original color, with the lustre and beauty so much admired. Thin hair is thickened, and baldness often (though not always) prevented. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed, or the follicles entirely destroyed. In cases of nervous debility, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable. The Vigor cleanses the scalp, clears and prevents the formation of dandruff, and, by its healing, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp. Keeping it cool, clean, and free from irritation, under which conditions of the scalp and hair are impossible. As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair, The Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet is unrivalled and unsurpassed in its excellence. PREPARED BY Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., Practical and Analytical Chemists. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

"YOU DON'T KNOW THEIR VALUE."

"They cured me of Agne, Biliousness and Kidney Complaints, as recommended. I had a half bottle left which I used for my two little girls whom the doctors and neighbors said could not be cured. I am confident I should have lost both of them one night if I had not had the Hop Bitters in my house to use. I found they did them so much good I continued with them, and they are now well. That is why I say you do not know half the value of Hop Bitters, and do not recommend them highly enough."—B., Rochester, N. Y.—Adv.

DOUGHNUTS.—One quart flour; two teaspoonfuls Kellogg's Baking Powder; two eggs; a little salt; one and a half cups sugar; butter, the size of an egg; and milk of water to mix.

—A freshman rather dampened the spirit of a prayer meeting which he was leading lately by remarking after a short comment that, if there was anything else in the chapter worth mentioning, an opportunity would now be given for doing it.

VASELINE.

You may find the world over and still will find that

A need of the household which kills to the mind
The idea of want—it can't be denied—
That petroleum can't satisfy.

It's cut on a spoil, or a bruise, or a burn,
Or a sore that is deep, or a cut that is shallow,
Or the chafed skin of a baby,
And whether it's rough, or chapped, or tough,
Or a sore that is angry and yellow,

It's for chest and throat and lungs it's good,
And the tender flesh it protects like a hood,
Kind Vaseline is the universal balm
And the best it takes of all and leaves no stain.

If the voice is hoarse, the throat is sore,
Take the jelly at once, and the trouble is cured.
In fact send the circular and trust it and
All the virtue and claim of the famous Vaseline

Let every layer of the Lord say to his neighbor, "Know the Lord," and the time will soon come when "all shall know Him from the least to the greatest."

The desire to do some great thing blinds us to the responsibilities of the welfare of the units.

Much of our Lord's preaching was to an audience of one. His sermon on regeneration was preached to a congregation of one. The discourse on the water of life was delivered to a solitary hearer. While suffering the agonies of the cross, redeeming a lost world, he spoke to the weeping Mary. By the sea-side he preached to Peter. Paul did not think it beneath his calling to preach the gospel to the trembling jailor at Philippi, because there were no others present. We need not wait for popular preachers, for crowded meeting, or for great movements. The way to reach the masses is to impress each individual. This can be done. It ought to be done, and done quickly. One by one the masses will soon pass into eternity.

It is always a terrible condemnation of a church member, say Dr. Cuyler, that no one should respect him of being one. We have heard of a young lady who engaged, for many months in a round of frivolities, utterly forgetful of her covenant with Christ. One Sabbath morning, on being asked by a gay companion to accompany him to a certain place, she declined on the ground that it was the communion Sabbath in her own church. "Are you a communicant?" was the cutting reply. The arrow went to the heart. She felt that she had denied the Lord who died for her. That keen rebuke brought her to repentance and reconversion. Are there not many other professors of Christ who appear to be "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God?"

Representative Alexander H. Stephens expressed his religious faith to a companion recently in the following words: "I am a member of the Presbyterian Church, and have been since my boyhood days. They have never turned me out, and I have tried to live so that they could never have occasion to do so. I am trusting in the atonement of Christ for its cleansing efficacy. All is clear through the blood of the covenant. I hope there is nothing in the way."

My stock of Pianos of the unrivaled
Chickering Pianos,
The Favorite
Matthushek Pianos,
The Reliable and Fine Toned
Hale Pianos,

These Pianos possess all the desirable musical and mechanical qualities of first-class Pianos, and have reached a point of excellence which it seems scarcely possible to surpass. They are constructed of the very best material throughout, and are of the highest workmanship. Their tone is sympathetic and brilliant, and possesses a peculiar singing quality found in no other Pianos. All improvements devised in the art of Piano making during the last forty years by Eastern and this country have been applied to the above Pianos. As to DURABILITY these Pianos are unsurpassed. Not only will they last during a lifetime, but the tone will actually IMPROVE by use for many years.

Prices lower than they have ever been, and my terms to suit every purse.

TESTIMONIALS FROM WELL-KNOWN PERSONS.

Palace Hotel, Savannah,
Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:
Gentlemen:—I am very much pleased with the Piano you brought for me. Its tone is sweet and powerful, its touch elastic, and its workmanship of the best. For its size it is one of the finest Pianos I have ever seen and heard. For its many qualities of touch and beauty of finish. Many kind words of commendation I have already received from those who have seen it, and I feel sure it will be a success. Wishing you success in the line to which you have devoted yourselves, and congratulating you on the possession of such a factory as you have, I remain,
Yours truly and respectfully,
ELLEN H. E. SHERMAN,
240 I Street.

St. James Hotel, Cincinnati, 27, 1873.
Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:
Gentlemen:—I am very happy to be able to rank your Pianos as one of the very best I ever had and now I think the touch and brilliancy of tone required to perform the finest pieces of modern and classic music. Teachers are equal to any piano made in this country. Hoping that your Pianos will be introduced in this city as well as any other manufactured at the North, I shall with much pleasure recommend them wherever I have an opportunity. Very respectfully yours,
ANTHONY WIMMER,
Professor of Music, St. Mary's Jefferson College, St. Louis, La., (formerly P. C.)

From the World Renowned Artist, Camilla Urso.
NEW YORK, May 27, 1873.
Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:
Gentlemen:—After giving your Piano a fair trial I am happy to congratulate you upon the excellent improvements you have made. You have unmistakably possessed pure method, and it gives me much pleasure to recommend them to the public.
Yours truly,
CAMILA URSO.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—It is announced to-day that the Long Branch Commission has decided by a majority of one to locate the new Government Hospital for the Insane at Washington. Where the majority is cast is not known.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 4.—A fire in the city, Nov. 3, destroyed all the stores and buildings on Main street, including the Odd Fellows building. Where the fire originated is not known.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—LATA. MORTON'S World admits that Robertson has defeated Hedges in the county of the rest of the State elected by majority ranging from one hundred to Republican.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 7.—Advices from the Indian Territory report the Arkansas River entirely dry and Big Bend City was never known to occur before.

The cotton crops are very short in the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole and Creek Nations. Much suffering in consequence is anticipated.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 7.—For new second Baptist Church is to be erected at a cost of $75,000. Steps are also to be taken for the building of a Catholic cathedral which would be dedicated with imposing services on the last Sunday in November.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—Official returns of Tuesday's election, with all counties heard from, show that Butler, Republican candidate for Governor, over Pattison, Democrat, 1,778. The Constitutional Prohibition amendment was defeated. In 1878 Hoyt, Republican candidate for Governor, received a majority of 2,933, and Hartranft, Republican Governor, in receiving 1,111 votes more than Butler, had a majority of 4,889.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—A dispatch from Galena, Illinois, says: Grant arrived here from the East the second week in October. After visiting a few places, including Indianapolis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, New York and Philadelphia, he will leave for Cuba where he intends to spend the winter. In the spring he will return to his home by way either of Galveston or New Orleans.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 6.—Returns from the interior of the State are coming in slowly. Nearly all received show Republican gains. The indications are now that the Republican ticket is elected although twelve per cent less than last year, and in the other seventeen counties fifteen per cent less.

MISSISSIPPI.—Thirty-two letters have been received from eighteen counties. The weather during October is generally reported as having been wet and unfavorable, and in some instances causing cotton that had fallen on the ground to sprout. Four northern counties report the weather more favorable than last year, but all others to be less favorable. There have been eight frosts all over the State, but little or no damage has resulted therefrom. In twenty of the most productive counties all reported five-sixths of the crop has been picked, and in the remaining seventeen counties fifty-eight per cent.

Picking will be finished about December 1. In the twenty counties heard from the yield is estimated at about twelve per cent less than last year, and in the other seventeen counties fifteen per cent less.

MISSISSIPPI.—Thirty-two letters have been received from eighteen counties. The weather during October is reported as having been favorable in fourteen, and wet and raining in four counties, and as compared with last year about the same to more favorable in twelve, and less favorable in the other six.

In nine counties of largest production seventy-two per cent. of the crop has been picked, and sixty-six per cent. in the other nine. Picking will be finished by December 1. In the best nine counties noted above the yield is estimated at fifty-six per cent. more than last year and in the other nine counties eight per cent less.

FOREIGN.

HALIFAX, Nov. 4.—The cable steamer Faraday arrived to-day; she has in tow telegraph cable for the new French company between Brest and St. Pierre, and is now engaged in laying the cable between the latter place and Cape Cod. The Faraday was in the heavy gale of last week, but kept steadily at work. The cable was moved 200 miles from Cape Cod on Sunday night.

HAVANA, Nov. 6.—The Government has received a dispatch from Madrid stating that the bill to settle the slavery question is about to be submitted to the Cortes. It will provide for the immediate abolition of slavery, but the freedmen will remain on a certain class under the patronage of their former masters, receiving wages. After this the freedmen will be transferred gradually to work under contract or leave the estate and enter under protection of the Government for another term. The exact terms of which they will acquire civil and political rights.

CALCUTTA, Nov. 6.—A message says there is now peace on the north of the Afghan's frontier. It is believed he will be simply a state prisoner hereafter.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—Queen Victoria and children Bishop of Lincoln, Archbishop of Canterbury and Archdeacon Wilberforce were present at the funeral of Prince Leopold at Windsor to-day. A crowd numbering between 50,000 and 60,000 was present. The procession was headed by Grenadier Guards, who were followed by the Queen's carriages containing the ladies. The funeral Cortege was followed by the Household troops. The coffin was borne on a gun carriage. The Queen and children followed in carriages. The Duke of Albany was present in uniform. The Duke of Connaught arrived from Ireland in time to attend the funeral. The Duke of Edinburgh arrived from Malta. The Princess Alice arrived from Darmstadt. The Princess Christian arrived from Cimiez. The Princess Louise arrived from Scotland. The Princess Beatrice arrived from Balmoral. The Princess Mary arrived from Sandringham. The Princess Helena arrived from Cumberland. The Princess Victoria arrived from Scotland. The Princess Louise arrived from Scotland. The Princess Beatrice arrived from Balmoral. FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

TUSCUMBIA, Ala., Oct. 21.—We have had some good meetings on this circuit, with good results. There has been thirty-four additions to the church and forty conversions, and the membership greatly revived. There will be about three-fourths of a crop of cotton gathered this year. Corn crop pretty good. The weather has been fine for gathering. There has been no rain for seven weeks, and the farmers are nearly through gathering. Finances are coming up right.

A. W. STARNES, P. C.

LEXINGTON, Miss., Oct. 31.—Zilpha circuit embraces seven appointments, three of them in Montgomery and four in Attala counties. We have had from four to nine days' protracted services at each appointment. The Lord was with us and blessed the labors of his people. There were seventy accessions and about sixty-five conversions. Finances are behind; expect to bring up the Conference and missionary collections in full.

D. N. ROSE.

HAMILTON, Miss., Nov. 1.—Have had eighty accessions this year on Rankin circuit. The circuit is in good working order for the next preacher. Collections ordered by the Conference will be brought up. Our last Quarterly Conference meets next week. Hope to give you a good report on other matters. Crops good. Health good. People cheerful and hopeful. Politics running high. While willing to fear the cause in bringing the people together, THE ADVOCATE is popular out here. Forty-five copies taken on this circuit. Will get some more.

E. A. JENNINGS.

BALDWYN, Miss., Nov. 1.—Will soon be wound up for Conference. Our collections will be full, especially those ordered by the Conference. Prayer meetings at all the churches. Sunday-schools in town are in good working order. Ninety-seven professions, and ninety-five accessions on profession of faith and by letter. The fall has been tolerably good for gathering crops, though a few heavy rains. Cotton is opening finely. But one light frost yet. Health very good. Election to-morrow; but little excitement, and the canvassing for the various offices has been done in moral, high-toned gentlemanly style.

P. W. HAND.

VERONA, Miss., Nov. 1.—We have had good times on Iuka district this year. There is more life in the church and in the country than for some time past. The Lord has been very gracious to us, and has blessed us with good crops and glorious revivals. There have been nearly nine hundred conversions, and between six hundred and seven hundred accessions to the church on the district this year. The harvests are enough to bless them all. Truly we should take courage and press onward in this grand work.

T. B. STONE.

MERIDIAN, Miss., Nov. 1.—A meeting lately held in our church was one of some gracious interest, and resulted in much good. Among the fruits of it were six persons received into the church. Were it not contrary to your rule I would say that Rev. R. Cartwright, of Bigbee, reported as most efficient and acceptable service. To-day the sessions are busily proceeding. Four lay delegates were chosen. Gov. Lloyd, of Georgia, is to make an address here on the night of the first day of the Agricultural Fair. Crops good. Health good.

E. H. MAGRUDER.

ESCATAWPA, Miss., Nov. 1.—I am glad the last round for this Conference year on the district is upon us. The Lord has blessed us with good crops and a healthy year. Have received twenty-four into the church on probation, and have had twelve baptisms—adults. Bro. Cassedy assisted. We fear that our presiding elder could not be with us. This people determined to have a church house or quit, a building committee was appointed, and went to work. There seems to be a general awakening on the subject of religion throughout all this region. Cotton good. Corn excellent. Weather dry, and Yard thinks the song of all.

J. PIPES.

EAST FELICIANA, LA., Oct. 31.—The Lord is still with us, in power to save, on the East Feliciana circuit. Since our last report we have held a series of services at Grand, resulting in seven conversions and six accessions, and a general blessing to the membership. Also at Clear Creek, resulting in four accessions, several reclamations, and a general stirring up of the membership. We can now report the entire charge in a good spiritual state. Hope to be able to report all our assessments paid in full by the time we meet in Annual Conference at Meridian, December 17.

HAYE ROBERTSON, P. C.

PLEASANT HILL CIRCUIT, LA., Nov. 1.—Our camp meeting at Bear Creek was a glorious success. About seventy-five families encamped on the ground. The congregation on Sunday was estimated at two thousand. Truly this was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Between sixty and seventy conversions during the meeting, and twenty accessions. The spiritual state of the church is good. Finances rather encouraging. Health of the country good. Cotton crops generally good. Corn crops very short.

MISCELLANEOUS

MARIANNA, Ark., Oct. 23.—Marianna district is now in its twentieth year, and not in its "forty-ninth," as some one has asserted. The membership then, in the territory now composing the district, was about 1,000; it will, perhaps, report this year about 2,500. In 1859, in the present territory, was reported: Sunday-schools, 12; officers and teachers, 118; Sunday-school scholars, 641. This year it will be: Sunday-schools, 45; officers and teachers, 175; Sunday-school scholars, 1,175, or we will fall behind the figures of 1878, which is not probable. Mr. Editor, I hope interested parties who write about this district will write facts, and not guess. This kind of guessing troubles and does harm.

ELISHA PHILLIPS.

BELMAR, TEXAS, Oct. 26.—Not much news. Crops are short, especially corn. No rain since July 5. Stock water very scarce. Health generally good. I forgot to tell you that our preacher in charge, Bro. Brooks, held a meeting, assisted by Bro. Saville, of ten or twelve days. Had quite a number of conversions, and fifty were added to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Our Sabbath-school is doing well; still increasing in interest and numbers; 45 members, 125 scholars.

A. W. JONES.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

MR. EDITOR: This form of Christian work, in the abstract, commends itself to every Christian woman of culture and views, nor needs to be pressed upon her by arguments proving that it is her duty to do it. So far as respects the women of heathen lands. But many women who so heartily and tenderly cover such duties, and who are ready to give me an audience on the exposition of this special question, do properly discuss some of the details deemed necessary by those in authority to accomplish the end sought.

A Southern lady who holds many of the views of women's rights and privileges held by many Northern-living, the Northern States, remarked in our hearing: "There is too much of preaching up to the women from Northern women." Is this the opinion of Southern women? Do they wish their wrongs crushed under the other absorbing principle which (not seems to have put out) of sympathy and care for the children? And is it to be done so safely and surely when the foundation is crushing the strong trunk that has been supporting, nourishing and developing the tender vine? Is it for this latter reason that the whole energy of the Church is to be concentrated upon the children? Many suffering women look upon the work of Methodism as one of low grade, and [illegible]

Notices in our Church papers to the effect that Missionary Societies are urged to send the names that they may be furnished with names of ladies to whom to address, are discouraging to Church visitors.

In behalf of many who love our Church and her enterprises, but who have scruples here, where and whether to work, in this new plan of work, and who do not know how to work best, my suggestions are these, with deference, Dr. Parker, to your judgment.

Cannot the men of God, who have set on foot this great enterprise, devise methods of work which, in the very spirit of it, will not require our women shall go in [illegible] meetings, etc. Can we not trust our Bishops, Presiding Elders and Pastors and the General Missionary Board, to give faithful circulars to the funds we may place in their hands for special purposes, and can we not raise and put such funds there with our going upon [illegible] ground?

We see no solution of our doubts. As we look for the final triumph of the day. Are our apprehensions groundless? We have learned from your weekly editorials to regard you as a wise and safe counsellor. Can you help us to a proper Christian view of this subject?

Can a Quarterly Review of the Methodist Church, South, be Sustained?
